Moose Entertainment of High Order

Good Sized Crowd at Walnut Hall During Vaudeville Performance

The vaudeville entertainment in Walnut hall last evening under the auspices of Woburn lodge 1214, Loyal Order of Moose was well patronized, and the show was all that could be desired.

Acts fresh from the Orpheum circuit were staged, and were encored but the part of the performance which was accorded the most hearty approbation was the entertainment furnished by home talent.

Walter Aylward and Jack Halliday were in excellent voice, and never was either heard to better advantage. Their solos were enthusiastically applauded. Reggie Noyes in his inimitable act was another hit, and the McGovern brothers in their clever boxing turn had the audience with them from the start. It was a first class show from beginning to end. It is probable that the Loyal Order of Moose will hold similar entertainments at intervals until the theatrical season ends.

S. OF V. AUXILIARY HAD ENJOYABLE EVENING

Following the regular meeting of the S. of V. Auxiliary last evening there was an open meeting and social, with Mrs. Cummings, Mrs. Granger and Miss Boutwell as the hostesses. Whist was played, high scores being made by Mrs. Whithead, Mrs. Carswell and Mrs. Poland. The date of the play to be given by the association has been changed to March 18.

W. R. C. WHIST

At the Women's Relief Corps 84 whist last evening there were 10 tables. Souvenirs for high scores were awarded Mrs. Addie M. Woodside, and Messrs. Israel Levine and John Goode. Plans are on foot for a masquerade party to be held March 14, the twenty-sixth anniversary of the corps.

MISS VERONICA MURRAY GIVEN OPAL RING

Miss Veronica Murray was presented with a beautiful opal ring at her home, 78 Salem street last evening by a party of young friends numbering about 60. Miss Murray had attended church and upon her return home was surrounded by her associates the moment she entered the house and Miss May Maloney stepped forward, and in a neat speech presented the dumfounded young lady with the ring. Miss Murray soon found her voice and expressed her gratitude. Piano selections by the Misses Madeline McDonald and Mae Murray and vocal solos by Miss Christine LaCasse followed.

Ice cream and cake were served, and the young people made merry until almost midnight.

DIES AT HER DAUGHTER'S HOME IN STONEHAM

She was on a visit at her daughter's home when she fell ill. Mrs. Shaw was born in East Ablington, 64 years ago, daughter of Nathaniel and Charlotte (Lane) Poole. Funeral and burial will be at Rockland.

It is more from carelessness about truth than from intentional lying that there is so much falsehood in the world.—Dr. Samuel Johnson.

A GOOD CONCERT BY HOME TALENT

High School Grads and Undergrads Give Successful Entertainment for Victor Fund

The entertainment given in the High school hall last evening in aid of the fund for purchasing a talking machine for the school, was successfully rendered before a large and appreciative audience. All the numbers were of good selection and showed in their manner of delivery the skill and talent of the individual artist. The talent was all taken from our own city, and we have reason to be proud of it.

The affair was a financial success, due to the work of the capable and efficient committee in charge, comprising Carl Everberg '13, chairman; Miss Mary Walsh '13, Deborah Curtis '13, Ethelind Cutler '14, and Hugh J. O'Rourke '13.

The ushers of the evening were officers of the battalion in full dress uniform. They were: Major Walker, Captains Lawson, Hooper and Marshall, and Lieutenants Shinquin and Foster.

Accompanists for those appearing were Mrs. Sarah C. Felch, Misses Alice A. Walsh, Evelyn Snow Elizabeth Hill Gertrude Callahan and Mr. Wilbur F. Burleigh.

Owing to illness, Miss Edith Pierce '06, who was slated for a vocal number, was unable to appear. Miss Helen Sylvester '10, volunteered to supply with a couple of readings that won instant favor. A pleasing feature was an excerpt from "The Quaker Girl" by Miss Sylvester and Philip L. Brackett '12, a vocal and dancing specialty.

The overtures and finale were by the high school orchestra under the direction of Miss Ellen H. Bartlett, Supervisor of music. The program follows:

LIEUT. GOV. WALSH HERE MARCH 28

Will Present American Flag to High School Battalion in Behalf of Elks

Arrangements for the presentation of a large American flag to the high school battalion by Woburn lodge B.P.O.E. are practically completed. The presentation will take place at the public drill of the battalion which is to be held in the Armory on Friday evening March 28.

Exalted Ruler John J. Costello who has been in communication with Lieutenant Governor David I. Walsh for the purpose of inducing the latter to attend and make the presentation speech has received the following letter.

John J. Costello,
Exalted Ruler B.P.O.E.
My Dear Costello:

I can arrange to go to Woburn on the night of March 28 to be present at the flag exercises which you spoke to me about, if this date is satisfactory to you.

Very truly yours,
David I. Walsh.

At the last meeting of the school board Charles C. Clarke secured the consent of his associates to the presentation, and the committee also voted to thank the Elks for their thoughtfulness and generosity. Since that time organization leaders have been negotiating for the presence of the Lieutenant Governor with the result outlined in the above communication.

The event will not be observed by any formality. Mrs. Brown is visiting friends in Medford, and congratulations are being sent there. Mrs. Brown who is a native of Zanesville O. is well and cheery despite her four score years and to quote the words of an old friend, "A lovely woman." MISSING— AN INVESTIGATION

"Lost, strayed or stolen" would seem to furnish an answer to the oft-repeated question "What has become of the Hose 3 investigation? Without any knowledge of the underlying facts, and certainly without any prejudice in the matter, the JOURNAL would respectfully pass this question along to the fire committee of the city council and suggest that prompt action would best serve public interest.

These facts at least are known. Lieutenant Edward J. Madden of Hose 3 asked the city council a few days ago for an investigation of company conditions. Lieut. Madden had been for 19 years a member of the department, and so far as the public knew had been an efficient, law-abiding member. He had been advanced from the ranks, presumably for merit. At least no complaint, that reached the public ear, had been lodged against him. His request was a simple one, and not an unusual one in municipalities.

The request was read in open council meeting, and the echoes of the reading clerk's voice had hardly died away, when, like a flash of lightning from the clear sky, comes the peremptory order from Chief Engineer F. E. Tracy, discharging Lieutenant Madden from the department, and alleging that the step was taken for "the good of the service." Since then the whole subject has been lost to view, and the public is naturally asking "Why is this thus?"

If conditions in the company are unsatisfactory, and Lieutenant Madden was unable to correct them he was justified in asking that the spotlight of publicity be turned upon them. If his reasons for asking proved unfounded, Madden would be the only sufferer. If they were well-founded, and there have been pretty substantial rumors brought by residents in the locality of the hose house to that effect, it was his duty to press for an investigation.

His summary removal is not in harmony with the provisions of the civil service, under which the firemen are. Those provisions permit of removal after a hearing has been granted. It is the official's inalienable right as it is the right of every American citizen that he should be told why he is discharged from official position. Lieutenant Madden may have been guilty of insurbordination, more or less gross, he may be a trouble-breeder, an element of discord, all of these, and yet is it not rather significant that the order of removal did not issue until after he had asked for an investigation?

The JOURNAL does not know Lieutenant Madden personally, but on principle asks that if there are good and sufficient reasons for his removal they should not skulk behind the stereotyped and threadbare phrase "for good of the service." It is due to the city, to the fire department as a whole, to hose 3 company as a body, to Lieutenant Madden as an officer and citizen, and more than all to the Chief Engineer who discharged him from the department within 24 hours of the time he asked for a searching investigation of company conditions.

Really, gentlemen, you ought to put a tracer on that investigation and locate it.

Water department and other officials are positive that the land upon which Henry Blake has been cutting wood and which is located on the west side of Horn pond is the property of the city. Commissioner Jones at the last meeting of the Board of Public works notified the board, and was authorized to have the city engineer establish the boundary line and thus settle the question. The land bought by Blake in that section was sold to him by City Collector Golden.

ONE MAN LEARNS WISDOM

At Least to the Extent of Ceasing to Wonder What Women Do in Their "Spare Time."

I come to you with bowed head, repentant, O Womankind! I have talked much, during the years, of woman's sphere. Aye, much too much. I haste toward you with a thousand pardons to be begged.

I am no longer stewing in my ignorance. I am cognizant of great truth. I do not apologize for saying that woman has a sphere. But I should have mentioned that it is a lop-sided sphere.

Today, for two hours, I tested the possibilities of woman's sphere. For two hours I minded the baby, I tabulate my activities thus:

8:30 a. m.—Novitiate begins.
8:31—Baby wants a cookie. I procure same.
8:32—Baby wants papa to eat cookie. It is done.
8:33—Baby wants another cookie. Certainly.
8:34—Will papa eat this cookie? He will.
8:35—Baby wants mamma. Impossibility pointed out. Wails.
8:40—Baby wants to hear watch tick. Watch ticks for baby.
8:45—Baby wants pretty picture. Picture taken from the wall.
8:45½—Baby does not want pretty picture. Baby wants sun.
8:46—Baby convinced that sun can't be had. Wails.
8:47—Baby wants milk.
8:48—Baby does not want milk. Wants pretty picture.
8:50—See pretty dolly. No. See pretty doggie. No. Wails.
8:51—Baby wants to get on daddy's knee.
8:51½—Baby wants to get down.
8:52—Baby wants cow. What cow? Cow. Cow? Cow. Where? Cow.
8:53—Brilliant idea. Cow propably refers to milk. Baby wants milk? Baby does not want milk. Wants cow. Cow? Cow. Impossible to get cow. Wails.
8:54—Baby wants coof. Coof? Coof What does baby want? Coof. Daddy in search of coof. Can't find coof. Wails.
8:59—Pretty picture. No. Wails. Baby wants stove. Baby wants sun Baby wants coof. Wants cow. Offer cookie as substitute. No substitute allowed. Wails.
9 to 10:30—Same as above, with marvelous variations, including petition for table, chair, oock (what the deuce is "oock?"), lippoo, ningana water, more water, pretty dolly, etc. etc.

I come to you with bowed head, repentant, O Womankind. I have spoken much of woman's sphere. And I have wondered what women do in their spare time. Heaven forgive me!—Puck.

PILGRIMS TO GO TO ROME

Catholic Churches of United States to Observe Anniversary of the Edict of Milan.

New York.—Pilgrimages to Rome are expected to be larger this spring than ever before, it is said in Catholic circles here, because of the celebration this year of the sixteenth centenary of the official political recognition of Christianity. Festivities beginning in the middle of March and continuing until December 8, will be held in every diocese in this country, including celebrations of great pomp in Washington and New York.

The celebration commemorates the victory of Constantine over Maxentius, which assured the political recognition of Christianity in 313 through the edict of Milan.

BOSTON THEATRES

BOSTON THEATRE

The last weeks of the most wonderful dramatic success known to New England, "The Garden of Allah" is announced by the management of the Boston theatre. The play which is a dramatization of the novel of that name by Robert Hichens and Mary Anderson Navarro is the superlative effort by the greatest American producing, manager, Mr. George C. Tayler, head of the producing firm of The Liebler Company, who made three separate trips to Morocco to obtain correct scenic environments and atmosphere for this play. A troupe of Arabs from the Desert including a Mohammedan Priest, several aides to Rasuila, the famous bandit, and other noted figures of the desert were brought over to this country. Madame Faddma, a famous dancer of the Ouled Nailes Tribe of Arabs was also imported. The play, which now enters upon its seventh week at the Boston theatre has proven one of the sensations of the theatrical season.

o-o-o

B. F. KEITH'S THEATRE

Never before in the history of amusements has an attraction created a greater sensation than the wonderful new Thomas A. Edison talking motion pictures, which were placed on exhibition for the first time in Boston at B. F. Keith's theatre last Monday. This latest invention of Mr. Edison's may well be called the greatest wonder of the twentieth century. It is the acme of realism, and the perfect synchronization of sound and action. B. F. Keith's theatre has been packed to the doors at every performance, and the wonderful talking pictures are the talk of all New England. For the second week a complete change of program will be presented, new subjects and new artists appearing in the wonderful pictures. The vaudeville show announced for next week is of the real all-star variety. Gus Edwards' Kid Kabaret, presented by Eddie Kantor, Hattie Kneitel, and a company of twenty clever kid comics, will present a musical frolic called "A Kid Kabaret In Kidland," abounding in music, songs, imitations, and a number of striking novelties never before offered in vaudeville. Another important feature will be the return after two years absence of Lillian Shaw, the character comedienne, who brings a fresh repertoire of songs new to Boston audiences. Will H. Murphy and Blanche Nichols will present their immortal travesty, "The School For Acting," which is nothing but one long riot of merriment from start to finish. Hugo Herzog's Eight Russian stallions will be a great feature for the lovers of animals; and other big attractions will be the Primrose Four; Cortis and Florence, Barto and Clark, and La Vier, sensational trapeze artist.

SHUBERT THEATRE

Next Monday night at the Shubert theatre, Boston playgoers are promised the most important dramatic event of the season in the appearance of the unusual company of stage favorites interpreting "Ready Money," the comedy by James Montgomery, with original Maxine Elliott Theatre cast.

"Ready Money" is a smart comedy, containing strong dramatic scenes and many original ideas new to present plays. Its author was connected with "Brewster's Millions," "The Fortune Hunter" and "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," and in "Ready Money" has given to the stage a new play of modern love and finance based upon a new idea.

The nineteen roles of the play are interpreted by a company which assures in advance one of the most artistic performances seen on a local stage. Joseph Kilgour, of "Easiest Way" fame, plays the remarkable character of an international counterfeiter, and Henry Miller, Jr., Ben Johnson, Hans Robert, Scott Cooper, Elizabeth Nelson, Fay Wallace and others are in the all-star cast. Miss Nelson has been seen lately in "Madame Sherry," and Ben Johnson in the New Theatre productions. Hans Robert has starred through New England in "Checkers."

IS RIVAL OF EIFFEL

Woolworth Structure in New York Is Highest in U. S.

Huge Building Scrapes the Sky at 750 Feet—Edifice When Complete Will Have Cost Owners $13,500,000.

New York.—The Woolworth building, now almost completed, holds the record for height among all buildings ever erected by man. It is true, the Eiffel Tower in Paris is 234 feet higher, but it is a mere steel skeleton and cannot be classed as a building in the sense accepted for that term. The building proper, which occupies an area of 30,000 square feet, is 384 feet high and is surmounted by a tower, 86 by 84 feet, rising 366 feet above the main part of the building. The following list of the tallest structures raised by man may be interesting for purposes of comparisons:

	Feet.
Colossus of Rhodes	105
Pantheon, Rome	150
St. Isaac's, St. Pttersburg	365
Statue of Liberty (highest statue)	305
Great Pyramid of Cheops	450
St. Peters, Rome	400
Rouen Cathedral	490
Cologne Cathedral	516
Washington Monument	555½
Singer Building	612 1-12
Metropolitan Tower	700¾
Woolworth Building	750
Eiffel Tower	984

The work of excavating for the foundations of the Woolworth building was begun on Nov. 4, 1910. Eixty-six caissons were sunk to a depth of 115 feet until they reached solid rock and the sixty-six concrete piers, resting on the rock, constitute the foundation of the structure.

The foundation was completed in the fall of 1911, when the erection of the steel frame was begun. The latter was completed in July of last year, and the brick and stone work was completed at the beginning of the present year. Twenty-four thousand tons of steel went into the making of the building and the total weight of the structure is estimated at 250,000 tons.

The building has fifty-five floors, twenty-five of which are in the tower, and the aggregate floor space is about thirty-three acres. The building and tower together contain about 2,000 offices, with 3,000 windows and as many doors.

To enable the occupants of the building to reach their respective floors there are thirty-four passenger elevators, of which twenty-four are grouped near the Broadway entrance, while the others are near the entrance from Barclay street and Park place.

The equipment of the building when fully completed will be thoroughly modern and as nearly perfect as it is possible to make it. The fifty-fourth floor will be used as an observatory, and on top of the structure, beneath the gigantic flag, will be placed a powerful searchlight. The twenty-eighth floor will be occupied by a luncheon club, and in the basement there will be a swimming pool, a restaurant and a rathskeller.

The total cost of the building is estimated at about $13,500,000, of which amount $4,500,000 was paid for the ground. The building was erected for F. W. Woolworth, who was born poor at Rodman, N. Y., April 13, 1852, went through public school and a business college, and in 1879 opened the first "five-cent store" at Utica, N. Y. The venture prospered, and he extended his business to other cities, and now has a chain of more than 300 such stores throughout the country, from which he derives an enormous income.

More than half of the capital required for the erection of the Woolworth building was contributed by capitalists in France. The rent roll of the building is expected to be about $2,500,000 a year.

MULE DRIVER SAVES 200 MEN

Youth Rushes Through Fire in Mine Shaft at Shenandoah, Pa., to Give Alarm.

Shenandoah, Pa.—John Monaghan, nineteen years old, a mule driver at Ellanowgan colliery here, saved the lives of 200 mine workers. He was driving through a tunnel when he discovered a fire in the timber supports of a passage.

The smoke and mine gases overcame the four mules, which dropped dead in their tracks.

Young Monaghan tied his handkerchief over this mouth and nostrils and at the risk of his life dashed through the fire and gave the alarm. Couriers warned the 200 mine workers and piloted them out of other openings. The fire was extinguished after a hard fight.

SING ON WAY TO GRAVE

Mourners Obey Deceased's Wish as They Go to Cemetery in France.

Paris.—When an old man named Joseph Hughes was buried recently at Aramon, near Nimes, the funeral procession, according to the terms of his will, followed the coffin with every one singing an old song of which Hughes had been fond. The old man, who met his death through falling upon the fire while his wife was preparing his supper, was of an original turn of mind and had kept his coffin under his bed for twenty years, using it as a wardrobe.

SAYS ALL MEN ARE FICKLE

Mrs. Anna Delony Martin Urges Year Engagement Limit in Talk to Women.

Chicago.—"All women know that men are polygamous, whether openly or secretly. It remains to decide whether it is more desirable to remain with an unfaithful husband who provides for you than to leave him for an uncertain financial future."

Thus Mrs. Anna Delony Martin, addressing the book review class of the Illinois Equal Suffrage association, declared. George Bernard Shaw's play, "Getting Married," started a discussion in which trial marriages, eugenic marriages, unhappy marriages, hasty marriages and every other possible kind of marriage were analyzed. Mrs. Martin believes that unhappy marriages are only too often the result of hasty marriages. "I believe that a time limit should be fixed and its enforcement held to between the date of application for a woman's hand and the date of the marriage. A couple ought to be engaged not less than a year and to be horribly frank with each other, so as thoroughly to understand each other before binding themselves.

Dr. Anna Blount, chairman of the meeting, said that divorce is necessary, "because no one asks for a divorce unless he or she really needs it, or wants it, therefore it represents an inharmonious condition of affairs. Demands for divorce, though, ought, I think, to be mutual."

Dr. Blount believes strongly in the "Sumnerizing" of marriages as much as possible.

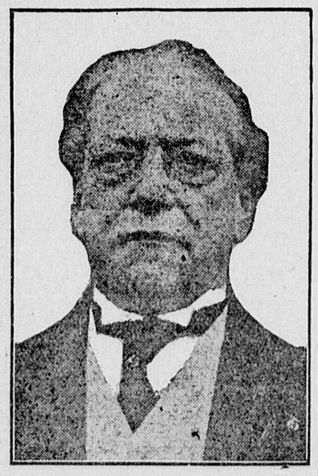

Mrs. Martin contended that there was considerable danger to women in too easy marriage and divorce laws "because man, being naturally destructive and fickle, would flit from girl to girl, to one faithful never."

Pessimistic views of the disillusionment of marriage and daring suggestions as to the expediency of trial marriages were advanced, with arguments for and against. Mrs. Alfred Jannotta, commenting on the remark that morality is a matter of custom, religion and race, said that morality was none of these, but purely natural or instinctive.

AUBURN HAIR HIS DOWNFALL

Chicagoan Is Pursued and Caught by Enemies Through Hirsute Adornment.

Chicago.—Hair has caused the downfall of at least two men—Samson, the original strong man, and Ernest Borden of Chicago.

Samson, upon the occasion of his first haircut, lost his strength.

The Chicago man was arrested in New York City by detectives from Pinkerton's agency who had followed him and his wife for a month. From town to town the Bordens traveled, but the sleuths could not be shaken off. Mrs. Borden's hair served as a beacon light, revealing them wherever they went.

According to detectives, Borden is accused of passing forged checks to the amount of $200 on the Washington Park National bank and others amounting to $400 on South side merchants. He is a son of Mrs. Anna E. Borden of 934 E. Seventy-fifth street.

"BUY IT AT HOME"

POVERTY PARTS AGED PAIR

Couple Wedded Fifty Years Tearfully Separate After a Technical Charge of Abandonment Is Heard.

Chicago.—A thread of romance, spun fifty years ago between the lives of John Goode and his then girl bride, was broken when the white-haired couple stood tottering before the bar in the court of domestic relations.

It was the little, bent old woman who first quavered out her story.

"I guess John and I've come to the parting of the road," she began. "And—and, judge, we—we were married fifty year ago—fifty year ago."

The old man raised his head for a moment. He looked at Judge Gemmill with apology.

"You see, judge, I am a poor man, now. I sell chewing gum on a street corner and business is poor. I—can't buy her very much, any more, and you know how it is with women; they need mor'n a man."

The aged man and woman looked wistfully into each other's eyes.

"I did my best, Margaret," the man whispered across to his wife, and the old woman blinked and whispered back:

"I know you did, John; I know you did."

But the story that the court listened to was not a perfect story, for the broken thread of romance was not to be mended. Although the technical charge of wife abandonment brought against the man was dismissed, the husband and wife parted in the courtroom, each to go a separate way for the remainder of life.

"It isn't that you haven't been good to me," the aged woman said as she hobbled from the room, "but—you know how it is with you a-selling gum."

The old man looked after her and called out his good-by answer: "Yes, Margaret, I know."

STOPS QUEEN TENDING SICK

King Ferdinand of Bulgaria Orders Her to Cease Work Among Invalid Soldiers.

Sofia, Bulgaria.—King Ferdinand has commanded his queen to cease her labors for invalid soldiers.

She has been working very hard, both at the front and in her own hospital here, where she has German nuns as nurses.

Ferdinand is terribly afraid of infection, and will not enter a hospital or have a surgeon or nurse near him. He has kept his queen in perpetual quarantine because she has always been tending the sick and the wounded. He has aged much since the war began, for he works day and night, besides feeling tremendous responsibility.

Before Princess Eleonor of Reuss married Ferdinand, who then was prince of Bulgaria, she had achieved world-wide fame for her charitable works. For some years she lived with the Sisters of Charity at Luebben, Germany, being practically one of them. When Japan made war on Russia in 1904, she went into the field as a military nurse and remained with General Kuropatkin's army until peace was concluded.

HE'S HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER

Court Order Saves Man From Prison, but Sends Him to a Ranch In California.

Riverside, Cal.—Instead of receiving a sentence of eight years in San Quentin for grand larceny John Rawson, brother of Tommy Rawson, a Menifee rancher, was committed to the ranch of his brother for the same number of years. He must not violate any of the terms of the sentence on penalty of being sent to prison. The unusual sentence was passed by Judge Bledsoe of San Bernandino. Tommy Rawson was made a special probation officer and ordered to give his brother employment and care for him. The sentence grew out of the fact that the brother, afflicted with kleptomania, has a wife and four children dependent upon him.

will consult the doctor about it. I will make him see that I both understand and shall insist upon my rights in this matter. But you may tell Miss Doris that I will sit out of sight, and that I shall not obtrude myself unless my name is brought up in an undesirable way."

The hand on the door-knob made a sudden movement.

"Mr. Brotherson, I can bear no more tonight. With your permission, I will leave this question to be settled by others." And with a repetition of his former bow, the bereaved father withdrew.

Orlando watched him till the door closed, then he too dropped his mask. But is was on again, when in a little while he passed through the sitting-room on his way upstairs.

No other day in his whole life had been like this to the hardy inventor; for in it both his heart and his conscience had been awakened, and up to this hour he had not really known that he possessed either.

CHAPTER XXXI.

What Is He Making?

Other boxes addressed to O. Brotherson had been received at the station, and carried to the mysterious shed in the woods; and now, with locked door and lifted top, the elder brother contemplated his stores and prepared himself for work.

He had been allowed a short interview with Oswald, and he had indulged himself in a few words with Doris. But he had left those memories behind with other and more serious matters. Nothing that could unnerve his hand or weaken his insight should enter this spot sacred to his great hope. Here genius reigned. Here he was himself wholly and without flaw—a Titan with his grasp on a mechanical idea by means of which he would soon rule the world.

Not so happy were the other characters in this drama. Oswald's thoughts, disturbed for a short time by his brother, had flown eastward again, in silent love and longing; while Doris, with a double dread now in her heart, went about her daily tasks, praying for strength to endure the horrors of this week, without betraying the anxieties secretly devouring her.

And Mr. Challoner? The sight of Brotherson, though they never really met, acted like acid upon a wound,

"What Do You Wish to Ask?"

and it was not till six days had passed and the dreaded Sunday was at hand, that he slept with any sense of rest or went his way about the town without that halting at the corners which betrayed his perpetual apprehension of a most undesirable encounter.

The reason for this change will be apparent in the short conversation he held with a man he had come upon one evening in the small park just beyond the workmen's dwellings.

"You see I am here," was the stranger's low greeting.

"Thank God," was Mr. Challoner's reply. "I could not have faced tomorrow alone and I doubt if Miss Scott could have found the requisite courage. Does she know that you are here?"

"I stopped at her door."

"Was that safe?"

"I think so. Mr. Brotherson—the Brooklyn one—is up in his shed. He sleeps there now, I am told, and soundly too I've no doubt."

"What is he making?"

"What half the inventors on both sides of the water are engaged upon just now. A monoplane, or a biplane, or some machine for carrying men through the air. I know, for I helped him with it. But you'll find that if he succeeds in this undertaking, and I believe he will, nothing short of fame awaits him. His invention has startling points. But I'm not going to give them away. I'll be true enough to him for that. As an inventor he has my sympathy; but—well, we will see what we shall see, tomorrow. You say that he is bound to be present when Miss Scott relates her tragic story. He won't be the only unseen listener. I've made my own arrangements with Miss Scott. If he feels the need of watching her and his brother Oswald, I feel the need of watching him."

"You take a burden of intolerable weight from my shoulders. Now I shall feel easier about that interview. But I should like to ask you this: Do you feel justified in this continued surveillance of a man who has so frequently, and with such evident sincerity, declared his innocence?"

"I do that. If he's as guiltless as he says he is, my watchfulness won't hurt him. If he's not, then, Mr. Challoner, I've but one duty; to match his strength with my patience. That man is the one great mystery of the day, and mysteries call for solution. At least, there's the way a detective looks at it."

"May heaven help your efforts!"

"I shall need its assistance," was the dry rejoinder. Sweetwater was by no means blind to the difficulties awaiting him.

CHAPTER XXXII.

Tell Me, Tell It All.

The day was a gray one, the first of the kind in weeks. As Doris stepped into the room where Oswald sat, she felt how much a ray of sunshine would have encouraged her and yet how truly these leaden skies and this dismal atmosphere expressed the gloom which soon must fall upon this hopeful, smiling man.

Advancing slowly, and not answering because she did not hear some casual remark of his, she took her stand by his side and then slowly and with her eyes on his face, sank down upon her knees, still without speaking, almost without breathing.

"What is the matter, child? So weary, eh? Nothing worse than that, I hope."

"Are you quite strong this morning? Strong enough to listen to my troubles; strong enough to bear your own if God sees fit to send them?" came hesitatingly from her lips as she watched the effect of each word, in breathless anxiety.

"Troubles? There can be but one trouble for me," was his unexpected reply. "That I do not fear—will not fear in my hour of happy recovery. So long as Edith is well—Doris! Doris! You alarm me. Edith is not ill—not ill?"

The poor child could not answer save with her sympathetic look and halting, tremulous breath; and these signs, he would not, could not read, his own words had made such an echo in his ears.

"Ill! I cannot imagine Edith ill. I always see her in my thoughts, as I saw her on that day of our first meeting; a perfect, animated woman with the joyous look of a glad, harmonious nature. Nothing has ever clouded that vision. If she were ill I would have known it. We are so truly one that—Doris, Doris, you do not speak. You know the depth of my love, the terror of my thoughts. Is Edith ill?"

The eyes gazing wildly into his, slowly left his face and raised themselves aloft, with a sublime look. Would he understand? Yes, he understood, and the cry which rang from his lips stopped for a moment the beating of more than one heart in that little cottage.

"Dead!" he shrieked, and fell back fainting in his chair, his lips still murmuring in semi-unconsciousness, "Dead! dead!"

Doris sprang to her feet, thinking of nothing but his wavering, slipping life till she saw his breath return, his eyes refill with light.

But the rest must be told; his brother exacted it and so did the situation. Further waiting, further hiding of the truth would be insupportable after this. But oh, the bitterness of it! No wonder that she turned away from those frenzied, wildly-demanding eyes.

"Doris?"

She trembled and looked behind her. She had not recognized his voice. Had another entered? Had his brother dared—No, they were alone; seemingly so, that is. She knew—no one better—that they were not really alone, that witnesses were within hearing, if not within sight.

"Doris," he urged again, and this time she turned in his direction and gazed, aghast. If the voice were strange, what of the face which now confronted her. The ravages of sickness had been marked, but they were nothing to those made in an instant by a blasting grief. She was startled, although expecting much, and could only press his hands while she waited for the question he was gathering strength to utter. It was simple when it came; just two words:

"How long?"

She answered them as simply:

"Just as long as you have been ill," said she; then, with no attempt to break the inevitable shock, she went on: "Miss Challoner was struck dead and you were taken down with typhoid on the self-same day."

"Struck dead! Why do you use that word, struck? Struck dead! she, a young woman. Oh, Doris, an accident! My darling has been killed in an accident!"

"They do not call it accident. They call it what it never was. What it never was," she insisted, pressing him back with frightened hands, as he strove to rise. "Miss Challoner was—" How nearly the word shot had left her lips. How fiercely above all else, in that harrowing moment had risen the desire to fling the accusation of that word into the ears of him who listened from his secret hiding-place. She refrained out of compassion for the man she loved, and declared instead, "Miss Challoner died from a wound; how given, why given, no one knows. I had rather have died myself than have to tell you this. Oh, Mr. Brotherson, speak, sob, do anything but—"

She started back, dropping his hands as she did so. With quick intuition she saw that he must be left to himself if he were to meet this blow without succumbing. The body must have freedom if the spirit would not go mad. Conscious, or perhaps not conscious, of his release from her restraining hand, albeit profiting by it, he staggered to his feet, murmuring that word of doom: "Wound! wound! my darling died of a wound! What kind of a wound?" he suddenly thundered out. "I cannot understand what you mean by wound. Make it clear to me. Make it clear to me at once. If I must bear this grief, let me know its whole depth. Leave nothing to my imagination or I cannot answer for myself. Tell it all, Doris."

And Doris told him:

"She was on the mezzanine floor of the hotel where she lives. She was seemingly happy and had been writing a letter—a letter to me which they never forwarded. There was no one else by but some strangers—good people whom one must believe. She was crossing the floor when suddenly she threw up her hands and fell. A thin, narrow paper-cutter was in her grasp; and it flew into the lobby. Some say she struck herself with that cutter; for when they picked her up they found a wound in her breast which that cutter might have made."

"Edith? never!"

The words were chokingly said; he was swaying, almost falling, but he steadied himself.

"Who says that?" he asked.

"It was the coroner's verdict."

"And she died that way—died?"

"Immediately."

"After writing to you?"

"Yes."

"What was in the letter?"

"Nothing of threat, they say. Only just cheer and expressions of hope. Just like the others, Mr. Brotherson."

"And they accuse her of taking her own life? Their verdict is a lie. They did not know her." Then, after some moments of wild and confused feeling, he declared, with a desperate effort at self-control: "You said that some believe this. Then there must be others who do not. What do they say?"

"Nothing. They simply feel as you do. They see no reason for the act and no evidence of her having meditated it. Her father and her friends insist besides, that she was incapable of such a horror. The mystery of it is killing us all; me above others, for I've had to show you a cheerful face, with my brain reeling and my heart like lead in my bosom."

She held out her hands. She tried to draw his attention to herself; not from any sentiment of egotism, but to break, if she could, the strain of these insupportable horrors where so short a time before Hope sang and Life reveled in reawakened joys.

Perhaps some faint realization of this reached him, for presently he caught her by the hands and bowed his head upon her shoulder and finally let her seat him again, before he said:

"Do they know of—of my interest in this?"

"Yes; they know about the two O. B.'s."

"The two—" He was on his feet again, but only for a moment; his weakness was greater than his will power.

"Orlando and Oswald Brotherson," she explained, in answer to his broken appeal. "Your brother wrote letters to her as well as you, and signed them just as you did, with his initials only. These letters were found in her desk, and he was supposed, for a time, to have been the author of all that were so signed. But they found out the difference after awhile. Yours were easily recognized after they learned there was another O. B. who loved her."

The words were plain enough, but the stricken listener did not take them in. They carried no meaning to him. How could they? The very idea she sought to impress upon him by this seemingly careless allusion was an incredible one. She found it her dreadful task to tell him the hard, bare truth.

"Your brother," she said, "was devoted to Miss Challoner, too. He even wanted to marry her. I cannot keep back this fact. It is known everywhere, and by everybody but you."

"Orlando?" His lips took an ironical curve, as he uttered the word. This was a young girl's imaginative fancy to him. "Why Orlando never knew her, never saw her, never—"

"He met her at Lenox."

The name produced its effect. He stared, made an effort to think, repeated Lenox over to himself; then suddenly lost his hold upon the idea which that word suggested, struggled again for it, seized it in an instant of madness and shouted out:

"[illegible] I remember. I sent him

Team Led by Pete Hogan Wallops Henry Looney's Stars

Bowlers from the Beggs and Cobb leather factory were the attraction on the alleys last evening. Henry Looney captained one of the rival teams and Pete Hogan the other. The Looney aggregation styled themselves team "Bee" and the Hogan followers were known as team "See."

The Looneyites failed to win a single point and after the first string they were completely out of it. Hogan was high, hitting the pins for 106 and 290. The score:

BEGGS AND COBB BOWLERS GET BUSY

Team Three Defeats Team six in Easy Fashion

Team three proved too much for team six in the S. of V. bowling games last evening taking all four points. The first two strings were easy for the victors but the team six bowlers went out hammer and tongs after the third string in their determination to prevent a whitewash. They were a few pins short when the final box was rolled, however, although several times it looked as if they would save a complete humiliation and carry off the point. The score in the last string was team three 371, team six 366. Peary of the winners was high man for the evening, rolling a single string of 94 and a total of 261. The summary:

To aviate in the poultry business you must have the goods. Get the best eggs you can buy—if only a few, three or four or more—and get them early so they will be fully matured for the Fall Shows.

MACONE VICTOR IN TWO GAMES

Will Play Final contest for Pool Championship Monday Against O'Neil

G. Macone came through with flying colors in the North Woburn pool tournament games at Brogna's last evening, winning two contests. The fight for championship laurels has now narrowed down to Macone and John O'Neil. They will meet Monday night in the final match of the tournament.

Last evening Macone in the first game played took James Kenney, one of the favorites into camp, the score standing 100 to 55. Macone was in rare form and after a couple of frames were finished it was evident that Kenney was up against it, and had little chance to win.

The tournament is styled "knock out," in other words, when a player is beaten once his chance of competing further is ended.

As a result of the victory of Macone over Kenney the tournament winners were narrowed down to three players, Macone, O'Neil and Joe App. A drawing was held and as a consequence O'Neil drew the bye, Macone and App being selected for the semi final.

And it certainly was some pool game. With varying fortune the players put into execution every ounce of pool knowledge and skill they possessed, while the onlookers were on tiptoe unable to predict as frame after frame was run off, who the winner would be. The game for excitement equalled the O'Neil-Shannon battle a couple of evenings ago and ended in a victory for Macone, only after his plucky opponent had disputed to the last ditch, every inch of the way, by a score of 100 balls to 96. The victory of Macone in this match was somewhat of a surprise to many of the wise dopesters, who had picked App as the most likely tournament winner. But Macone had his pool eye with him and while at times the skilful work of App made things look dubious for him, his steady, consistent, and quite often brilliant shooting, brought home the bacon.

It is safe to say that next Monday night when O'Neil and Macone line up for the final tournament match and championship honors included, that the Brogna pool room will not begin to accommodate lovers of the game who will want to watch the struggle.

Both players handle the cue cleverly, are not inclined to go in the air, and there is a wide variety of opinion as to the probable winner. The scores by frames in last nights games follow:

SPOKE ON "THE OPERA AS AN ART"

W. L. Hubbard Addressed Woman's Club Saturday

Mr. W. L. Hubbard, publicity manager of the Boston Opera company, lectured before the Woman's club at a special meeting held in Lyceum hall Saturday afternoon. Mr. Hubbard was a most pleasing speaker and treated his subject "The Opera as an Art" in a most interesting and original manner. His aim was to teach people to appreciate the opera. It was not necessary to understand music to enjoy the Opera. It should be looked upon from a dramatic as well as musical standpoint. He said our moods were often responsible for our appreciation or otherwise. He compared people to telephones. They continually were receiving and giving out. People should buy the libretto and read it before attending the performance. He read the opera, "The Secret of Suzanne," accompanied by the piano. It is to be regretted that owing to the storm only a small audience was present to hear Mr. Hubbard's talk but those who were there felt that they had had a rich treat.

IT WAS A BLIZZARD AND THEN SOME

Unprecedented Storm Filled the Air with Blinding Snow

Woburn was in the blizzard belt for two hours yesterday afternoon. For a considerable time before the storm burst the sky was overcast with threatening cloud masses. All sorts of predictions found expression, wind, snow and rain, each finding adherents. And when it came, gee whiz, it came like a flash. In an instant the air was full of snowflakes, and adult snow flakes at that, and they came f rom every direction swirling at the mercy of the rampant wind, which ranged round the compass in demoniac glee.

Thicker and thicker grew the feathery flake fall, and outlines of trees andb uildings began to be lost in the blur. The air was full—and on Sunday too, just think of it—of snow, literally full. Pedestrians found it difficult to keep on the sidewalks. First one would collide with a roadside tree or scrape along a boundary fence. Men stood on curbstones, and failed to see the car they wanted as it rolled by in the smother. Fortunately no accidents occurred, but it was some storm.

And, as if in mockery, the mad elements ceased their frolic as suddenly as they began it. The transition from indistinctness to clearness was as if the tempest had been touched by a magic wand. And in the bright light of sunset the day of elemental disturbance ended peacefully.

OFFICIAL REPORT COMMENDS WOBURNIA

High School City Instructive and Useful Says Annual Document

The annual report of the school committee for the year 1912 contains an interesting reference to the organization of the high school city Woburnia. The report says that the aim of this innovation in the teaching of civics is not to develop professional politicians, but to give to the pupil a knowledge of city affairs that every citizen should have.

The report says in part: "An innovation has been tried in the senior class in history, which has succeeded admirably. The study of civics forms a part of the work in this course, and to make the instruction more practical, as chool city was organized last spring and named Woburnia.

The pupils divided into two parties, each of which adopted a platform one favoring the commission, and the other the Mayor and City council form of government. Methods of election and the duties of the various officers and boards were studied by questioning city officials, and an election was held with a regular ballot box, and the same methods followed as in a regular city election. After the election there was a public inauguration, which followed closely the practice of the city, and the various officers and boards were installed into office.

The pupils were keenly interested in the work, and through questioning and debating proper methods of procedure, they gained a practical knowledge of city government that will be remembered when the facts gained by studying a text book will be forgotten.

The responsibility for the work of the class was felt very keenly by its members, and the application, the power of thought, and the initiative developed were certainly surprising. Usually a school city is established as a means of discipline, but Woburnia was planned and carried on primarily as a means of instruction.

It undoubtedly was of value as an aid in developing self control on the part of the pupils, but the principal benefit was in the practical character of the knowledge, and in the permanent effect it had upon the pupil's understanding of city government.

During the present school year the same plan is being followed, but in an even more thorough fashion. The pupils however, gain much of their information of methods of procedure from the officials of last year's city of Woburnia.

While the school city gives a more practical acquaintance with the city affairs than is possible with a mere text book course, the aim is not to make professional politicians, but to develop right ideals and to give such a knowledge of city business and practices, as every citizen should have.

Captain Kean's Command Escorted to Railroad Station by Loyal Associates

G. company 5th regiment M. V.M. is not only on its way, but has a definite idea as to its destination. The company under the command of Captain Fred C.Kean left the Armory at 1.55 p. m. yesterday and marched to the Central B. & M. railroad station escorted by a score of the members of its loyal auxiliary the Phalanx associates, the latter body being commanded by Captain Edwin F. Wyer. In the escorting party were four past commanders of G. company and one ex-lieutenant.

Captain Kean's command which numbered forty-three enlisted men and two officers, entrained for Boston at 2 p. m. where it joined the main body of the regiment which later in the day departed for Washington where it will participate in the inaugural parade tomorrow. The departure was witnessed by a large number of residents who lined the sidewalks from the Armory to the station.

An interesting feature of the company's trip is found in the presence in the ranks of several officers of the high school battalion to whom the trip and its incidents will be an instructive revelation. The schoolboy cadet aggregation comprised: Major Wilford A. Walker, Capt.fHarry E. Lawson, Capt. Roland D. Marshall, Capt. Walter E. Hooper, Lieut. W. Haven Sherburne, Lieut. Clifton A. Have You a Bottle Baby?

Half the ills of a bottle baby are caused by wrong temperature. You are told to feed your baby at blood heat and you have only been able to do so at the start of the feeding.

The Breast Temperature Nursing Outfit

Puts every bottle baby on an equality with the breast fed baby.

To feed a baby at 98 degrees without change of temperature is simply doing for the bottle baby what nature does for the breast fed baby. This alone will greatly assist in digesting the food and prevent many of the little setbacks which occur when the baby takes its milk too hot or too cold.

The breast Temperature Nursing Outfit insures to the bottle fed baby the correct temperature and holds it to the end of the feeding.

INVESTIGATION IN SIGHT

The committee on Fire will meet tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock for the purpose of ventilating the hose three mixup. This investigation on the part of the committee is the logical result of the request preferred by Lieutenant Edward J. Madden at the last meeting of the city council.

It is understood that the committee will sift the matter to the bottom, and will summon before it, Lieutenant Madden the proponent, all members of the company, the chief engineer, and any citizens likely to have knowledge of the matter under consideration.

The committee desires to do justice to all, and in order to attain that end some aldermen have already announced that the best and fairest way to give the public all the facts without prejudice, is to permit representatives of the press to attend the hearing. As a rule committee meetings are of the star chamber order,but it is not unlikely that, because of the widespread public interest in the hose three situation, launched first by the petition of Lieutenant Madden for an investigation, and intensified by the summary removal of the lieutenant by Chief Tracy within 24 hours after the petition was presented, the hearing tomorrow evening will be open at least to the press.

In the meantime Lieutenant Madden has demanded that the chief engineer give a hearing and set forth the reason for his removal. But, as Kipling says: "That's another story."

SAD IRON—Y

A North Woburn resident had a jumping toothache last night but instead of calling in the dentist, he thought he would pull it himself and save the money. So, he got an eight pound flatiron and tied to it a piece of strong twine about twenty feet long, and then slipped the other end of the string over the aching tooth. He opened wide the front door, and standing well back in the hall, threw the flatiron with all his might out into the street. It took the tooth with it all right, but, alas! the flatiron, in its wild flight, hit the brave policeman who happened to be passing and knocked him almost insensible. When the officer recovered he was going to arrest somebody, but the citizen explained and finally ironed matters out smoothly. The policeman said after the mix up, "Let me know next time. I can catch anything if I know it is coming." It has since developed that the citizen pulled the wrong tooth. What do you know about that?

If your letter carrier was late this morning, it was because the hours of labor started in on a new schedule today. From now on a letter carrier's day will consist of eight hours which must be completed in ten consecutive hours, and the carriers now begin at 7.30 instead of 7 a. m. as formerly.

The Golden Opportunity appears to have presented itself for working some telling reforms in the handling of Municipal affairs this year. "What will the harvest be? Oh, What will the harr-r-vest be?

The warrant for the annual town meeting being held in Stoneham today, contains ninety-two articles. The Winchester warrant, which is also being acted on today, has fifty-two articles.

In Saturday's issue we advertised "Missing — An Investigation." Within 48 hours it was located. The committee on fire will hold a session tomorrow evening on the Madden-Hose 3 matter. Truly, it pays to advertise in the JOURNAL.

[illegible] and paused, his mind [illegible] again.

Poor Doris, frightened to her very soul, looked blindly about for help; but she did not quit his side; she did not dare to, for his lips had reopened; the continuity of his thoughts had returned; he was going to speak.

"I sent him there." The words came in a sort of shout. "I was so hungry to hear of her and I thought he might mention her in his letter. Insane! Insane! He saw her and—What's that you said about his loving her? He couldn't have loved her; he's not of the loving sort. They've deceived you with strange tales. They've deceived the whole world with fancies and mad dreams. He may have admired her, but loved her—no! or if he had, he would have respected my claims."

"He did not know them."

A laugh; a laugh which paled Doris' cheek; then his tones grew even again, memory came back and he muttered faintly:

"That is true. I said nothing to him. He had the right to court her—and he did, you say; wrote to her; imposed himself upon her, drove her mad with importunities she was forced to rebuke; and—and what else? There is something else. Tell me; I will know all."

He was standing now, his feebleness all gone, passion in every lineament and his eye alive and feverish, with emotion. "Tell me," he repeated, with unrestrained vehemence. "Tell me all. Kill me with sorrow but save me from being unjust."

"He wrote her a letter; it frightened her. He followed it up by a visit—"

Doris paused; the sentence hung suspended. She had heard a step—a hand on the door.

Orlando had entered the room.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Alone.

Oswald had heard nothing, seen nothing. But he took note of Doris' silence, and turning towards her in frenzy saw what had happened, and so was in a measure prepared for the stern, short sentence which now rang through the room:

"Wait, Miss Scott! you tell my story badly. Let him listen to me. From my mouth only shall he hear the stern and seemingly unnatural part I played in this family tragedy."

The face of Oswald hardened. Those pliant features—beloved for their gracious kindliness—set themselves in lines which altered them almost beyond recognition; but his voice was not without some of its natural sweetness, as, after a long and hollow look at the other's composed countenance, he abruptly exclaimed:

"Speak! I am bound to listen; you are my brother."

Orlando turned towards Doris. She was slipping away.

"Don't go," said he.

But she was gone.

Slowly he turned back.

Oswald raised his hand and checked

"Dead!" He Shrieked Out.

the words with which he would have begun his story.

"Never mind the beginnings," said he. "Doris has told all that. You saw Miss Challoner in Lenox—admired her and afterwards wrote her a threatening letter because she rejected you."

"It is true. Other men have followed just such unworthy impulses—and been ashamed and sorry afterwards. I was sorry and I was ashamed, and as soon as my first anger was over went to tell her so. But she mistook my purpose and—"

"And what?"

Orlando hesitated. Even his iron nature trembled before the misery he saw—a misery he was destined to augment rather than soothe. With pains altogether out of keeping with his character, he sought in the recesses of his darkened mind for words less bitter and less abrupt than those which sprang involuntarily to his lips. But he did not find them. Though he pitied his brother and wished to show that he did, nothing but the stern language suitable to the stern fact he wished to impart, would leave his lips.

"And ended the pitiful struggle of the moment with one quick, unpremeditated blow," was what he said. "There is no other explanation possible for this act, Oswald. Bitter as it is for me to acknowledge it, I am thus far guilty of this beloved woman's death. But, as God hears me, from the moment I first saw her, to the moment I saw her last, I did not know, nor did I for a moment dread that she was anything to you or to any other man of my stamp and station. I thought she despised my country birth, my mechanical attempts, my lack of aristocratic pretensions and traditions."

"Edith?"

"Now that I know she had other reasons for her contempt—that the words she wrote were in rebuke to the brother rather than to the man, I feel my guilt and deplore my anger. I cannot say more. I should but insult your grief by any lengthy expressions of regret and sorrow."

A groan of intolerable anguish from the sick man's lips, and then the quick thrust of his reawakened intelligence rising superior to the overthrow of all his hopes.

"For a woman of Edith's principle to seek death in a moment of desperation, the provocation must have been very great. Tell me if I'm to hate you through life—yea through all eternity—or if I must seek in some unimaginable failure of my own character or conduct the cause of her intolerable despair."

"Oswald!" The tone was controlling, and yet that of one strong man to another. "Is it for us to read the heart of any woman, least of all of a woman of her susceptibilities and keen inner life? The wish to end all comes to some natures like a lightning flash from a clear sky. It comes, it goes, often without leaving a sign. But if a weapon chances to be near—(here it was in hand)—then death follows the impulse which, given an instant of thought, would have vanished in a back sweep of other emotions. Chance was the real accessory to this death by suicide. Oswald, let us realize it as such and accept our sorrow as a mutual burden and turn to what remains to us of life and labor. Work is grief's only consolation. Then let us work."

But of all this Oswald had caught but the one word.

"Chance?" he repeated. "Orlando, I believe in God."

"Then seek your comfort there. I find it in harnessing the winds; in forcing the powers of nature to do my bidding."

The other did not speak, and the silence grew heavy. It was broken, when it was broken, by a cry from Oswald:

"No more," said he, "no more." Then, in a yearning accent. "Send Doris to me."

Orlando started. This name coming so close upon that word comfort produced a strange effect upon him. But another look at Oswald and he was ready to do his bidding. The bitter ordeal was over; let him have his solace if it was in her power to give it to him.

Orlando, upon leaving his brother's room, did not stop to deliver that brother's message directly to Doris; he left this for Truda to do, and retired immediately to his hangar in the woods. Locking himself in, he slightly raised the roof and then sat down before the car which was rapidly taking on shape and assuming that individuality and appearance of sentient life which hitherto he had only seen in dreams. But his eye, which had never failed to kindle at this sight before, shone dully in the semi-gloom. The air-car could wait; he would first have his hour in this solitude of his own making. The gaze he dreaded, the words from which he shrank could not penetrate here. He might even shout her name aloud, and only these windowless walls would respond. He was alone with his past, his present and his future.

Alone!

He needed to be. The strongest must pause when the precipice yawns before him. The gulf can be spanned; he feels himself forceful enough for that; but his eyes must take their measurement of it first; he must know its depths and possible dangers. Only a fool would ignore these steeps of jagged rock; and he was no fool, only a man to whom the unexpected had happened, a man who had seen his way clear to the horizon and then had come up against this! Love, when he thought such folly dead! Remorse, when Glory called for the quiet mind and heart!

He recognized its mordant fang, and knew that its ravages, though only just begun, would last his lifetime. Nothing could stop them now, nothing, nothing. And he laughed as the thought went home: laughed at the irony of fate and its inexorableness; laughed at his own defeat and his nearness to a barred Paradise. Oswald loved Edith, loved her yet, with a flame time would take long to quench. Doris loved Oswald and he Doris; and not one of them would ever attain the delights each was so fitted to enjoy. Why shouldn't he laugh? What is left to man but mockery when all props fail? Disappointment alone was the universal lot; and it should go merrily with him if he must take his turn at it. But here the strong spirit of the man reasserted itself; it should be but a turn. A man's joys are not bounded by his loves or even by the satisfaction of a perfectly untrammeled mind. Performance makes a world of its own for the capable and the strong, and this was still left to him. He, Orlando Brotherson, despair while his great work lay unfinished! That would be to lay stress on the inevitable pains and fears of commonplace humanity. He was not of that ilk. Intellect was his god; ambition his motive power. What would this casual blight upon his supreme contentment be to him, when with the wings of his air-car spread, he should spurn the earth and soar into the heaven of fame simultaneously with his flight into the open.

He could wait for that hour. He had measured the gulf before him and found it passable. Henceforth no looking back.

Rising, he stood for a moment gazing, with an alert eye now, upon such sections of his car as had not yet been fitted into their places; then he bent forward to his work, and soon the lips which had uttered that sardonic laugh a few minutes before, parted in gentler fashion, and song took the place of curses—a ballad of love and fondest truth. But Orlando never knew what he sang. He had the gift and used it.

Would his tones, however, have rung out with quite so mellow a sweetness had he seen the restless figure even then circling his retreat with eyes darting accusation and arms lifted towards him in wild but impotent threat?

Yes, I think they would; for he knew that the man who thus expressed his helplessness along with his convictions, was no nearer the end he had set himself to attain than on the day he first betrayed his suspicions.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

The Hut Changes Its Name.

That night Oswald was taken very ill. For three days his life hung in the balance, then youth and healthy living triumphed over shock and bereavement, and he came slowly back to his sad and crippled existence.

He had been conscious for a week or more of his surroundings, and of his bitter sorrows as well, when one morning he asked Doris whose face it was he had seen bending over him so often during the last week: "Have you a new doctor? A man with white hair and a comforting smile? Or have I dreamed this face? I have had so many fancies this might easily be one of them."

"No, it is not a fancy," was the quiet reply. "Nor is it the face of a doctor. It is that of a friend. One whose heart is bound up in your recovery; one for whom you must live, Mr. Brotherson."

"I don't know him, Doris. It's a strange face to me. And yet, it's not altogether strange. Who is this man and why should he care for me so deeply?"

"Because you share one love and one grief. It is Edith's father whom you see at your bedside. He has helped to nurse you ever since you came down this second time."

"Edith's father! Doris, it cannot be. Edith's father!"

"Yes, Mr. Challoner has been in Derby for the last two weeks. He has only one interest now; to see you well again."

"Why?"

Doris caught the note of pain, if not suspicion, in this query, and smiled as she asked in turn:

"Shall he answer that question himself? He is waiting to come in. Not to talk. You need not fear his talking. He's as quiet as any man I ever saw."

The sick man closed his eyes, and Doris watching, saw the flush rise to his emaciated cheek, then slowly fade away again to a pallor that frightened her. Had she injured where she would heal? Had she pressed too suddenly and too hard on the ever gaping wound in her invalid's breast? She gasped in terror at the thought, then she faintly smiled, for his eyes had opened again and showed a calm determination as he said:

"I should like to see him. I should like him to answer the question I have just put you. I should rest easier and get well faster—or not get well at all."

This latter he half whispered, and Doris, tripping from the room may not have heard it, for her face showed no further shadow as she ushered in Mr. Challoner, and closed the door behind him. She had looked forward to this moment for days. To Oswald, however, it was an unexpected excitement and his voice trembled with something more than physical weakness as he greeted his visitor and thanked him for his attentions.

"Doris says that you have shown me this kindness from the desire you have to see me well again, Mr. Challoner. Is this true?"

"Very true. I cannot emphasize the fact too strongly."

Oswald's eyes met his again, this time with great earnestness.

LECTURE ON CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

Delivered in Lyceum Hall Yesterday Afternoon by Judge Clifford P. Smith, C. S. B.

FULL TEXT OF LECTURE

There was a large attendance in Lyceum Hall yesterday afternoon, when Judge Clfford P. Smith delivered the following lecture on "Christian Science:"—

Judge Smith spoke as follows:

It is now generally known that Christian Science is founded on the Bible no less than are the faiths that differ from it and from each other and it is generally recognized that Christian Science has been of great benefit to many people. But this is not to say that it is fully appreciated even by those with whom it has won respect. Much yet remains to be said and done in order to make known how important it is to human welfare. Let me state the case as I see it. The hope and faith of mankind, notwithstanding doubt and perplexity, have always looked with some measure of expectation for freedom from adversity and an abundant, satisfying life. The work of Jesus the Christ was designed to show the way and to give for this hope and faith the assurance of absolute knowledge or spiritual understanding; Christian Science has come to discover and repeat what he knew and taught; to revive his original teaching; to restore the scope and complete the mission of primitive Christianity; to be that: "Spirit of truth" which he foretold and promised. I am aware that the place in history thus predicted for Christian Science is a large one, but the prediction is justified by the results already achieved. In the time during which it has been taught and practiced Christian Science has wrought a greater change in human thought than primitive Christianity did during the corresponding period of its history.

If one could read the New Testament as if it contained a new subject he might observe that Christianity was originally based on the truth of being. Its basic requirement was the knowledge of the truth concerning God and man. "For this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." "I came that they may have life, and may have it abundantly." "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou has sent. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." These sayings of the Master, one of which is quoted from the revised version, imply that the human or mortal sense of life is false, and they imply that immortality is to be gained by finding and realizing the truth of being.

Immortality

The failure to perceive or to retain this fact has perpetuated the belief of former ages that the fulfillment of human hope and faith depends on dying. Even now the majority of Christians appear to regard the kingdom of God or kingdom of heaven as a situation to be gained, partly or wholly, by dying. They expect to be ushered into the fullness of life by means of death. Considered as an original proposition, such a belief is like saying that one moves toward an object by going in the opposite direction. The only connection that death can have with abundant and eternal life is that it is a negation of being, a phase of evil, which must be overcome in order to attain complete heaven or harmony. According to the teaching of Christ Jesus all the possibilities of being exist here and now.

The New Testament shows that he referred to his message or teaching as "the gospel of the kingdom;" and of this kingdom of God or kingdom of heaven he said much in parables but several things explicitly. He said it is "at hand" (that is to say, it is present and within reach); he said it is "within you" (which is to say, it is a state of consciousness); he said that it comes upon you as devils or evils are cast out; and he prayed for his followers, not that they should be taken out of the world, but that they should be kept from the evil.

According to these sayings heaven is not the sequence of death; it is an active and living state of goodness. It is to be gained, not by dying, but by right living. It must be attained by expelling evil from human consciousness so that the individual may reflect the Life that is God. Immortality is the manifestation by man of the divine Life. It is the reflection by man of the divine Mind. St. Paul stated the necessity of the case when he said, "Let this Mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus."

From these promises the conclusion follows that the way to heaven is not through death, but through spiritual development and mental unfoldment. Salvation is progressive and its day is now. To be born again is to awaken from the dream of life in matter. It is to forsake meterial belief and gain spiritual understanding. It is to gain that freedom of thought and action which constitutes full and perfect manhood. It occurs and goes on as the darkness of evil is dispelled by the light of Truth and Love until the mortal element of the so-called human mind is completely displaced by the divine consciousness.

Our present situation was stated by St. John in these words, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be." He did not mean that we shall ever be different from what we really are. He meant that we are the sons of God, though the reality of being doth not yet appear. He did not foresee a loss of identity; he discerned the realization of true identity. With entire consistency Mrs. Eddy has said: "The real, ideal man appears in proportion as the false and material disappears." "Mortals will disappear, and immortals, or the children of God, will appear as the only and eternal verities of man." (Science and Health, pp. 6, 9, 476).

Health

There are many people, however, who are not much interested in what they hear spoken of as immortality. They are occupied with present interests, and do not count this subject as belonging to the present; which, of course, is a very mistaken view of the situation. But there is a subject closely connected with immortality in which everybody is interested. This subject is health. It has always been considered of vital importance, and now the world is undergoing a great awakening with respect to it. People are no longer content to accept ill health as something natural to man, nor as a curse that cannot be removed. They are demanding of both science and religion a life that is less subject to disease and death. With this demand Christian Science is in full sympathy. Indeed the demand is in no small measure the result of Christian Science. Its teaching and the results of its practice broke the fixedness of mortal belief and aroused the hope that has grown into a demand. It is greatly to be desired, however, that the effort to get dominion over disease be not thwarted by continuing to admit and even to rely on that which is the cause and condition of disease rather than its preventive or cure. I refer to the belief that life, substance, and intelligence exist in matter.

What are disease and health? In the last analyses not only disease and health but mortality and immortlity are opposite mental states resulting from contrary modes of thought. What St. Paul wrote to the Romans on this subject was both Christian and scientific: "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." In these words he explicitly declares that life is a condition of mind or thought; and causation is analyzed as wholly metaphysical. The mentality which sickens and dies is carnal; that is to say, material; while the thought which lives and enyoys the perfect attributes of Life is spiritual; that is to say, emanating from Spirit or God. In other words it is Spirit, God, the divine Mind that gives life and health to man, and it is given through mentality or thought. Health, therefore, is primarily a mental and spiritual quality, and it is to be gained and preserved as such; that is, through the understanding of and obedience to the spiritual law which emanates from the divine Mind. Disease, on the other hand, even the most physical disorder, is a condition of mortal and material belief. It is a condition incident to the supposition that man is a material selfhood and governed by a law of suffering, disability and death—governed by laws which divine Life, Truth and Love could never make.

Let me illustrate this with an item from what the world calls science. Natural science declares that the physical body is in a state of constant decay and reconstruction. It is said to be completely changed every two or three years. Then the question arises, why is not disease eliminated by this disintegration and renewal? Since disease is not normal or natural to the body, what is it that may continue a physical disorder beyond the period of complete change? Evidently the nature of that which may thus persist, despite its abnormal and unnatural relation to the body, is not primarily physical. It is primarily mental. That which persists does so as the palpable evidence of belief. That which continues the disorder is mortal belief acting as the law of disease. It should be evident, furthermore, concerning any disease, that the cause or law of its continuance must also be the cause or law of its inception and of its existence.

But without regard to this illustration, every disease, from beginning to end, is only a condition of mortal mind; it is a product of the mortal element in human consciousness; it is a particular result of the general supposition that life inhabits matter and is mortal. To successfully cope with disease it must be resolved into mental error and dealt with on a mental plan, by the truth of immortal Mind. Scientific treatment of disease must depend on the metaphysical distinction between absolute or real being and the human or mortal sense of existence. Freedom from disease follows the absolute knowing of the truth concerning God and man. It requires the spiritual understanding of substance, law and power. It comes to pass when the supposed law of disease is broken by the actual law of divine Principle.

In so far as hygiene and sanitation denote cleanliness and purity Christian Science is in full accord; and it commends not only a clean body and clean surroundings but a clean mentality, not only pure food but pure thoughts. Jesus intimated to the Pharises that for outward cleanness to be more than superficial it must be the result of inward cleanliness.

His treatment of disease is illustrated by the case of the woman "who was bowed together, and could in no wise lift up herself." Though she had been in that condition for 18 years, he did not treat the disease as primarily physical. He defined it as evil. He said that Satan had bound her; and he "loosed" her by breaking the law or bondage of evil; which, of course, is mortal. Evil is the evil element in the so-called human mind.

At another time when a question was raised as to how he healed, the Master said that "he cast out devils by the finger of God;" that is to say, he did so by the power of God. When the lawfulness of his healing work was challenged he went on with it, saying that it is lawful to do good, or to do well as the common version has it. In short, Christ Jesus treated disease as evil—as essentially mental—and he overcame it in accordance with the law of good and by the finger or power of God.

Dominion

There is another subject, closely connected with health and immortality, in which all people are presently interested; that is dominion—dominion over adverse conditions, dominion over evil. Involved therein is the difference between misery and happiness throughout human affairs. According to the Bible the law of our creation and being includes the decree, "Let them have dominion"—dominion "over all the earth." This is one of the natural rights of man; and it is one that exists in all its fullness as an idea to be apprehended and realized even though the average man manifests more subjection than dominion.

This ideal was instanced by him to whom St. Paul referred as "the man Christ Jesus;" and it was he who said, "My peace I give unto you." His peace was the result of dominion; it was the result of power over whatever would disturb the harmony of man. An observation on this point by Mrs. Eddy was illuminating to me and it may be to you. Said she: "With our Master, life was not merely a sense of existence, but an accompanying sense of power that subdued matter and brought to light immortality." For us to have his peace we must gain that true sense of power which he possessed and exercised.

Now what was the secret of his dominion? By virtue of what did he possess such unlimited power? He disclosed the basis of it by saying: "I can of mine own self do nothing." That is to say, he possessed power or dominion only by virtue of man's relation to God—only by reason of man's unity with the infinite and omnipotent Mind. It was this unity, this at-one-ment, which he exemplified through out his earthly career; and the main reason for the common lack of dominion is the common error that man is a material selfhood separated from God.

There is another aspect of dominion that is equally important. That is, dominion is not the power to interfere with the rightful and lawful order of the universe. It is the power to overcome disorder, to subdue discord, and to maintain the law of God. It is the power to demonstrate the truth of being.

Throughout the Bible we find numerous examples of the exercise of dominion, occurring in different ages or periods of time and covering almost every kind of discord and disorder. They instance the overcoming of evil and its conditions with spiritual power by a considerable number of men, sometimes for their own benefit and sometimes for the benefit of others. Some of these acts of power are more clearly related than others and some are more easily understood than others, but in the light of Christian Science their significance, in most cases, is quite plain. As a whole, do they not teach and prove the fact, that no ill or evil—no harmful event or condition—is either rightful or natural; none is inevitable; none but what can be prevented or overcome with the law and power of God? I leave the answer to the quiet of your own meditation.

Near the close of his earthly career Christ Jesus said to his disciples, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." Why should they or we be "of good cheer" because of his overcoming? Because he exemplified universal possibilities. Because his acts of power were done in accordance with law—in accordance with the immutable law of good. Because his mighty works attested the presence, action, and power of divine principle; and principle does not change. Because the signs that he wrought proved the actual qualities of real being—of your being and mine—and proved them to be free from evil.

Such is the significance, the evidential and educational value, of the so-called miracles of healing; and though to material sense they seem unnatural, to spiritual sense—to the understanding of good—they are supremely natural, for they evince the true nature of God and man.

Vital Differences

With respect to names and synonyms for the Deity there are not many differences between Scientists and others who search the same Scriptures. Such disagreement as exists today is more practical than theoretical. The divergence is more substantial than formal.

For example, we concur that God is Mind, and that "we live, and move, and have our being" in Him. Yet many persons practically desert these premises by claiming to have another mind, and to live, think and be separate from God.

The relation of man to God, and the function of man in the action of Mind, was set forth by Christ Jesus in these words: "The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise."

He did not speak of himself alone, for the son of God is man. The offspring of Mind is idea. The likeness of Mind is consciousness. The image of Mind is the reflection of it. These names for the representation of Mind mean the same, and they define the real man. Thus the unity that exists between God and man unites true thought to the infinite good, than whom is none else, and in whom is all It was a profound truth that Mrs. Eddy uttered when she said, "The basis of all health, sinlessness, and immortality is the great fact that God is the only Mind." (Science and Health page 339)

Christian Scientists and other Christians also agree that God is Love, and that His mercy endureth forever. Yet it is often believed that He employs or sends evil. To say this is simply to call evil good. It is an attempt to get rid of evil by combining it with good. God could not employ or send evil without its being a part of His character and attributes; iHe could not send evil without having t to send.

It is said, however, that evil is in some way a necessity; that we need it. Such an argument betrays a singular confusion of thought. What we need is good, and unless evil is the same as good we have no need of it. Suppose there were no evil; would any be needed? Certainly not. Therefore evil can be necessary only for itself and to itself; man has no use for it.

Let us analyze this question further. It is universally admitted that fear is a bad thing; it is a phase of evil. It beclouds the judgment, halts action, weakens endeavor, induces man's inhumanity to man, and is a larger factor in disease and death than is commonly understood. But the chief procurator of fear is this very belief, that God employs or sends evil. Mortals fear because they doubt His provision for their care. Fear springs from the supposition that God may have ordained the evil event or condition that is dreaded.

Is it possible, then, that the consequences of this belief and fear can be traced to divine Love? If the belief were true, God would be responsible for the fear and torment that follow as its consequences. But the belief is false, for "Love casteth out fear." Neither fear, nor its effects, nor the errors back of it, can withstand the true idea of divine Love.

Christ Jesus refuted the notion that God sends or employs evil by saying that "he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

We are also agreed that God is Life, and that He giveth life to all. We unite in declaring that God is Spirit, that His will is law, and that power belongeth unto Him. These are Scriptual statements of truth which we all accept, at least in form. Yet the conduct of the average man concerning his health repudiates them almost without compunction.

In the endeavor to preserve or regain their health most people would rather follow a medical book than the New Testament; they continually worship and frequently sacrifice at the shrine of material belief, while spiritual understanding is hardly allowed to enter into the question. The majority of Christendom appear to regard matter, instead of Spirit, as the source and environment of life; and in regard to law and power they concede less to God than to germs and drugs.

Science and the Senses

It is to be observed that Christian Science does not coincide with the testimony of the physical senses. Neither does any science. Every system of science admits that sense impressions are always imperfect and often misleading. Indeed that knowledge is superior to the evidence of the senses is the proposition with which science begins.

The science of astronomy began when knowledge corrected the belief of the senses respecting sunrise and sunset. The science of aviation began when knowledge overcame the belief of the senses that a heavier-than air machine could not be made to fly. Perhaps nothing is more real to the senses than pain, but to one who has lost a limb pain in the severed member is just as real as pain in one that is connected with the brain. Discoveries in the way of invention frequently set aside the testimony of the physical senses; and there is no limit beyond which material sense cannot be forced to yield. Christian Science declares that actual knowledge is not in the least material; it is purely spiritual.

Fortunately for each and all of us, this purely spiritual sense is ever present in human consciousness. It is the actual manifestation of Life. It is that which lives and does not die. Through the presence in human consciousness of this divine element God is with us and we "have our being" in Him. It is by reason of the presence and power of spiritual sense or spiritual understanding that we have a dependable assurance of heaven, for it is that with which we can discern and realize the divine nature.

What is the divine nature? What are the character and the attributes of God? What is man? These questions are the most important that can engage our attention, and when truly answered they dispose of the mystery, What is evil?

Christian Science is a system of thought based on God as the only Mind and cause. Its office is to minister to human needs, and to do this in the way shown by Jesus the Christ, that is, by mental and spiritual means. Although the cure of physical disorder is not its chief purpose, such healing is a part of the world's great need and in the ministry of Jesus it was not neglected. It is therefore not to be supposed that his followers have ever wilfully passed by on the other side from such a patent and crying need. They have tried to aid the sick and suffering, but their comfort has not been cure simply because they have not known the Principle and method of Christian healing. This knowledge was lost to Christians because a personal and supernatural view of the Savior removed their concept of Jesus' life-work from the realm of naturalness and law to that of mystery and miracle.

With the loss of this knowledge was lost an essential element of Christ's Christianity, for it is indivisible. That from which a saviour is needed is the evil one or one evil, and that which will overcome it cannot be understood as limited to a part of the error. The saving Truth cannot be divided; neither in Principle nor in effect. St. Peter correctly used the word "healing" when he said that Jesus "went about doing good, and healing all that there oppressed of the devil; for God was with him."

In the nineteenth century, however, a limited form of Christianity had long been orthodox. Faith in Spirit, God, had yielded and was giving way to faith in material theories and methods. There were but comparatively few individuals with whom faith in good was vital and spiritual causation was a present and paramount fact. Such a person was the mother of Mary Baker Eddy, and it was in such an atmosphere as this that Mrs. Eddy was reared and her development begun.

Mary Baker Eddy.

The facts of Mrs. Eddy's personal history are simply told in a biography by Sibyl Wilbur, which can be found in most of the public libraries. As an authentic account of an illustrious woman this book is well worth a thoughtful reading. I shall not try to sum it up here, but will be content with quoting what was said of Mrs. Eddy by one of those who observed her in her youth. From the time when she was a girl of fifteen until she married at the age of twenty-two, Mrs. Eddy resided with her parents at Tilton, New Hampshire, where the Rev. Enoch Corser was Pastor of the Congregational church. He received her into this church when she was seventeen, and five years later officiated at her wedding. Meanwhile he was her pastor and to some extent her tutor. Himself a man of mature years and liberal culture, he once said of her to his son, with such earnestness and emphasis that the words were never forgotten: "Bright, good, pure, aye, brilliant! I never before had a pupil with such depth and independence of thought. She has some great future, mark that. She is an intellectual and spiritual genius."

Showing this promise in her youth, Mrs. Eddy was at the age of 45 when she discovered Christian Science and began her wonderful career of service to mankind. Spiritual growth and scientific attainment had, meanwhile, prepared her to receive and impart this comprehensive view of divine reality.

Mrs. Eddy was fully aware of the importance of Christian Science. No one foresaw its redemptive value so well as she. It was therefore but natural that she should cherish the right to be known as its discoverer. But the only token which she desired for her labor in behalf of humanity was a truthful record of her life; and the only demand which she made on her followers was that they should make good use of her discovery; that they should preserve and promote the understanding of genuine, operative Christian Science, so that the so-called human mind may increase in goodness until the claim of a mind separate from God disappears.

This being the case, there is not the slightest reason for regarding Mrs. Eddy with either emotional ecstasy or personal worship; but there is abundant reason why mankind in general, and Christian Scientists in particular, should feel and express for her the utmost gratitude, love and reverence.

As a scientific discoverer and religious leader, Mrs. Eddy has been the means of giving to the world the priceless benefit of a truer concept of God and man, incidentally, she has taught a mental self-knowledge that discriminates between genuine thoughts, which emanate from the divine Mind, and the illusions of material sense, which appear in the guise of thoughts and constitute evil; and she has made known a mental practice, including this true self-knowledge, which enables the learner, in a large and ever-increasing degree, to recognize and obey the thoughts of God and to resist and destroy aught else.

Deliverance from evil depends on this attainment, for the situation is mental. Unless evil can affect your mentality or consciousness, it cannot touch your welfare. "Evil thoughts. . .defile the man," said Jesus; and his explanation, as reported by Matthew and Mark, shows that a man cannot be harmed unless it be through the heart or consciousness. The Hebrew proverb is scientific, "Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life."

With the situation thus set forth the importance of a scientific mental practice is evident. The forms of evil are the phrases of mortal and material belief. The scene of its appearing and disappearing is the so-called human consciousness. Evil must be met and overcome at that point; and it can be rejected with the power of Mind. The kingdom of heaven is at hand because self-knowledge and self-control through the law and power of God is a present possibility. As Mrs. Eddy has said, "We have nothing to fear when Love is at the helm of thought, but everything to enjoy on earth and in heaven."

MELROSE 55, WINCHESTER 18

Winchester was up against hard luck last Saturday night when the first and second basket ball teams went to Melrose and both were defeated. Neither team seemed to be able to put up their usual fight, and their team work was not of very high class. The Melrose team, on the other hand seemed to have everything.

For the winners, Peabody and Holt excelled and Johnston and Flinn for the losers. The game was played before the largest crowd of the season. The summary:

WINCHESTER GIRLS 42 WELLESLEY GIRLS 28

The Winchester girls basket ball team wound up its final game of the season in a blaze of triumphal glory. They applied the white wash bursh to their opponents in the most approved manner. The feature of the game was the excellent team work of the victorious girls. They had their eyes on the baskets at all times and the shooting was fast and accurate. As usual Miss Barbara W. Wellington starred, and proved a tower of strength to her side getting 15 baskets from the floor. At no time was the game lacking in interesting features. Miss Frances Foster was a close second to her captain and got 5 baskets from the floor and 2 from fouls. Winchester was ahead at the end of the first half, 19-11.

For Wellesley Miss Bishop and Miss Vaughn excelled.

After the game the Winchester girls gave an informal reception and lunch to their visitors and their season was over.

Sweaters will be awarded to the following girls of the Winchester team this year, Miss Marion Trott, manager; Miss Esther Ayer, Miss Frances Foster, Miss Ethel McEwen. The summary:

Can We Help You?
(As We Helped This Man)

Herbert O. Russell is a farmer in North Hadley, Mass., who turned a threatened loss, not only to himself but to his neighbors, into a highly profitable business transaction by making judicious use of the telephone toll lines. He is the Mr. Blank of the following story which appeared in TELEPHONE TOPICS. We use his name by permission.

A HADLEY PASTORAL.

The fertile fields of old Hadley are especially adapted for raising tobacco and onions and especially onions, which are usually a very profitable crop. This year the crop was larger than ever before—bumper to the nth. Prices at once shrunk alarmingly until it came to be a grave question whether it was worth while to market the crop. Some farmers became discouraged and left the crop to rot in the fields. One gave the subject careful thought. While he was pondering the question his glance fell upon the telephone in his kitchen. Could that be the answer.?

The next day he called on Manager Proctor for information. He secured full particulars about our toll facilities, then went home and planned a sales campaign by telephone. Each evening the family carefully studied the directories and made up a list of wholesale Commission dealers in the large cities.

Early each morning Mr. Blank called them by telephone. Results were immediate and surprising. He made satisfactory terms in short order for the sale of his entire crop and before long he was shipping onions by the carload. After he disposed of his own crop, the commission merchants continued their demands for more onions, and Mr. Blank commenced buying his neighbors' crops which he sold at a good profit. As a result of his work he has sold twenty-one carloads of onions. It need not be added that he is extremely grateful for the resources of our telephone service.

ON "FOODS AND FOOLISHNESS"

"Doctors are naturally modest men" said Dr. Woods Hutchinson last evening when he faced a packed house in Lyceum hall, and he told his story of common sense using of food in a modest but very entertaining way. He said in part:—

The old relation that doctors used to have with the druggist and undertaker were anything but pleasant, but now the aim of the medical profession is to prevent disease. In the last twenty-five years medicine has undergone a great change. Fresh air and plenty of food has taken the place of the obnoxious drugs of our grandmother's day. Doctors used to put everyone on a diet when they came for treatment, but like the rest of humanity, they have grown wiser and realize now that except in serious cases what the patient needs is stregthening food and lots of it.

Many people have strong dislikes for things and therefore say that this particular thing is not fit for any one to eat. Nine cases out of ten this dislike can be traced to some superstition or rumor that has been handed down through the ages. Every one must make an intelligent selection of the things that taste good to him, but eat what you like and when you like and you will not have to trouble about your general health. When you come to think of it there is really nothing to eat but food,—the kind that Mother used to make.

Trust your natural instincts. It isn't natural instinct to drink alcoholic liquors and smoke tobacco? Is there any one who wasn't sick the first time he tried to be a man and smoke behind the barn? Primitive man tasted everything that came within his reach. If it tickled his palate it was put down on the list as a food; if it was poisonous why it was simply an object lesson to the other primitives.

Everything we eat and probably the way we cook it, is the result of thousands of years of experimentation. There is really nothing new under the cook range. Now as to what we shall eat. Begin with a soup. Of course soup is nothing but water with a a smell but for that very reason it is the best thing to start off with. Then comes the fish, requiring a little more digestion but not taxing the stomach too much. Now the machinery is in working order and ready for the heavier meat and vegetables. And don't forgrt the vegetables. It would be too much to ask of your stomach to take the solid meat without these necessary aids.

And most important of all, see that the children have all they want, and when they want it. That is where most of the grown ups make a big mistake. We don't require as much food as a growing child and yet how often he is denied a between meal bite of bread and butter when he really needs it. There is not any such thing as a cheap food for a child unless you want a cheap child. Plenty of bread and butter will satisfy the child. And see that it is white bread. There is more nourishment weight in white bread than in all the so-called health oods and dark coarse flours Aand because an article of food does not agree with your private digestion, do not organize a crusade and seek to enlist other people. It may not hurt them. As the old lady said in "The Hoosier Schoolmaster" "Get a plenty while ye're getting."

BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS MEET

Commissioner Kennedy Absent—Land Sold by Golden Discussed

Commissioner Kennedy be cause of illness was unable to attend the regular meeting of the board of public works last evening, and upon motion of Commissioner Wallace it was voted to postpone action on the question of water main replacement until Mr. Kennedy can be present.

Superintendent Spencer in response to inquiries from members of the board stated that the land near the Winchester line sold to Henry Blake by City Collector B. J. Golden was valuable to the water department, and should have been retained by the city. Mr. Spencer said that there was more than five acres of land in the plot sold, and the price paid was $100.

Commissioner Jones said that since the last meeting he had talked with Mr. Golden, and the latter thought that the best thing to do under the circumstances was to return the money to Mr. Blake, and have the land again become the property of the city.

The commissioners agreed that $100 was a small amount of money for five acres of land, but aside from this feature of the transaction the question arose as to the right of the city collector to dispose of the property in the manner he did. Commissioner Wallace offered a motion that the city collector, city solicitor, Superintendent Spencer and Mr. Blake be invited to the next meeting to make proper explanations.

An order from the city council was referred to Commissioner Kelley, asking for information relative to a vote of the aldermen last year requesting the board of public works to notify the New England Telephone company, and the Edison Electric Illuminating company to remove wires attached to trees on public highways, and to take steps to protect the trees from contact with the wires by using heavier insulation.

Three orders from the city council asking that incandescent lights be placed on Harrison avenue and Houghton street were referred to the commissioner of public buildings and grounds.

Before adjournment the advisability of ascertaining the probable cost of transferring the South End playground equipment from the present location to the property known as Nichols field on Main street was informally discussed. Mayor Henchey said that if the only requirement to making the playground a success in its present location, was to protect the equipment from vandalism and to preserve order, he felt that he could guarantee the necessary police service, and he stated that he would take the matter up with the chief of police at once, and report to the board at an early date. Monthly bills were approved, and the meeting adjourned with the understanding that the mayor will call a special session to settle the question of water main replacement, just as soon as the health of Commissioner Kennedy will permit his attendance.

EN ROUTE WITH G CO.

High School Boys tell Story of the Trip to Washington

Major Wilford A. Walker and Lieutenant Clifton A. Shinquin of the high school battalion, who are among the high school boys with G Co. on its Washington trip will send daily letters to the JOURNAL, telling the story of the trip, the scenes and incidents en route and at the Capital city.

Their first letters, both dated at Fall River on their arrival there Sunday night, appear herewith, and others will follow:

Fall River, Mass. Mar. 2, 1913.
Editor Woburn JOURNAL:

We left the train as planned at Prospect Hill station. The company formed and then we waded through the mud of Somerville, almost as deep as that in Woburn, to the armory at Charlestown, our arrival completing two provisional battalions. After an address by Colonel Cutting we started on our march for the South station, Boston. We were just going through Adams Square in that city when we were enveloped in a snow squall. In a few minutes our uniforms were white instead of blue. About this time our overcoat and blanket roll and our haversacks mysteriously began to grow heavier and the South station looming up through the snow was a very welcome sight. We met the rest of the regiment there and took the train for Fall River.

W. A. W.

Fall River, Sunday.
Editor Woburn JOURNAL:

We left the train at Prospect Hill as was scheduled. The company in column of squads marched to the Charlestown Armory.

At the Charlestown Armory the first and second battalions of the fifth regiment were formed. Colonel Cutting, regimental commander, gave a short talk, instructing the members of the regiment how to act while visiting the Capital city.

With the regimental band at the head of the column, the men marched to the South station in column of companies. When the regiment was turning down Summer street a blizzard struck us, and by the time we reached the South station every one was covered with snow. At the station two special trains were waiting and both were quickly filled with militiamen. At five o'clock, both trains left for Fall River.

Have You a Bottle Baby?

Half the ills of a bottle baby are caused by wrong temperature. You are told to feed your baby at blood heat and you have only been able to do so at the start of the feeding.

The Breast Temperature Nursing Outfit

Puts every bottle baby on an equality with the breast fed baby.

To feed a baby at 98 degrees without change of temperature is simply doing for the bottle baby what nature does for the breast fed baby. This alone will greatly assist in digesting the food and prevent many of the little setbacks which occur when the baby takes its milk too hot or too cold.

The breast Temperature Nursing Outfit insures to the bottle fed baby the correct temperature and holds it to the end of the feeding.

WILL THEY DO IT?

The annual financial budget as prepared by the mayor and now before the City Council provides some very interesting items this year, if the city really purposes to live up to them and confine the expenditures of the various departments within the sums provided. There seems to be a general curtailment of the amounts allotted over the expenditures of recent years.

Take for instance the amount assigned to the police department, fourteen thousand dollars. This is nearly three thousand dollars less than this department spent in 1911, the last published report. The fire department has been apportioned seventeen thousand dollars, whereas in the year referred to they had twenty-one thousand dollars.

If the authorities keep these departments within the amounts allotted to them, and in most cases it is really more than sufficient, very great credit will be due them and the JOURNAL will be glad to extend it, if it shall prove that these sums as put down cover the expenses of these departments for the year; but it will take a throttling in certain quarters that means watch and fight from the very start.

FAREWELL PARTY TO CHESTER E. CARTER

Goes to Pittsburg, Pa., to Take Responsible Position

One of the most perfect surprises was played last evening when Chester E. Carter went to the home of Miss Lena French to attend a committee meeting and found the house crowded with friends who had gathered to tender him a farewell party as he goes to Pittsbirgh, Pa., tomorrow.

The party was well planned and every minute was enjoyed. There was special music, Xylophone solos by Clifford Soles, piano, Carl Leighton, drum, Arthur Dalrymple, and Wilbur Burleigh piano solos and acompanist, many games were played and the "Cat Fight" between Wilbur Burleigh and Carroll Yarigle is worthy of special mention. The principal feature of the evening, and what brought so many together was to show to Mr. Carter their friendship and appreciation of the kindly and helpful spirit in which he has always helped the young people in every undertaking and in his own inimitable manner, Maurice R. Greene, in behalf of those present, presented him with a large travelling bag. "Chet" was surprised but responded in words which were satisfactory to all. Among the guests were—Lena French, Jennie Buck, Helen Buck, Mildred Ford, Helen Ford, Catherine Grant, Alice Wood, Mabelle Perry, Lydia Greene, Fanny Carter, Mrs. Frank Carter, Elsie Rollins, Mabel Foster, Hilda Johnson, Edna Dobbins, Mattie Wood, Ida Graham, Lulu Wares, Hazel Benson, Nellie Foster, Isabelle Patterson, Ruth Coburn, Mrs. Robert Creed, Mrs. Walter Merchant, Chester Carter, Chester Sevrens, Harold Child, Clifford Soles, Carl Leighton, Wilbur Burleigh, Arthur Dalrymple, Maurice R. Greene, Arthur Moore, Robert Creed, Frank Carter, Carroll Yarigle, William Hickox, Everett Thompson, Bert Horne.

Chester E. Carter graduated from Woburn High school '06, took a four years' course at General Electric Works in Lynn, and a year's course at "Sloyd" work in Boston and for sometime has been teaching with his father, Frank Carter. He has now accepted a position at this line of work in Pittsburgh, Pa. and goes tomorrow. He has always lived in North Woburn and many friends wish him success in his new home.

BOY WINS CARNEGIE PRIZE

Philanthropist Wanders Through Ellis Island in Time to Hear Homesick Youngster Cry.

New York.—There is monetary value in the name "Andy." A little boy, fresh from the Emerald Isle, discovered it.

The boy, with his mother, Mrs. Catherine Rooney, and his younger brother, Patrick, stood among hundreds of immigrants in the detention pens on Ellis Island. "Andy" was crying. He is only four years old. The long voyage, the terrifying noise and the bustle of the customs docks had been too much for him.

Andrew Carnegie strolled by.

"What are you crying for, bub?" asked the giver of libraries.

"I want to go back to County Mayo," sobbed "Andy."

"What is your name?"

"Andy, sir."

"My little man, you should not cry," said Mr. Carnegie. "This is a grand country. You will grow to be a big man and you will have as fine a chance to be rich here as you would if you were the son of a king or an earl."

Future prospects failed to comfort the younger Andy, but when Mr. Carnegie handed him a $2 bill he quickly dried his tears.

Three-year-old Patrick witnessed the transaction. He sidled up to the philanthropist.

"I'm his brudder an' my name is Patrick," he announced, insinuatingly.

Mr. Carnegie smiled and drew out another bill. It was only $1.

"You are smaller," he said.

Patrick was highly satisfied.

BATTLE IN MIDAIR

Partridge Battles With Kidnaper of Her Chick.

After She Had Freed Victim, Golfers Who Had Witnessed the Combat Go to the Rescue of Her Brood.

Omaha.—J. D. Haskell, a banker of Wakefield, and Judge Eric Johnson of Putnam, while playing a match game of golf several days ago, witnessed a battle royal between a mother partridge, defending her young, and a hawk.

The players were putting for the seventeenth hole. The banker had made his third shot and won the hole, giving him one up and one to play. As the judge was putting his attention was suddenly called to the loud cries of a mother partridge, which Mr. Haskell discovered nearing the eighteenth ground. The mother bird was anxious to get her four young ones away from the golfers.

She whistled frantically, shrilly and pleadingly, prompting them as if saying: "Hurry up, hurry up for your lives, my children!" At the eighteenth hole Mr. Haskell had teed up in readiness to drive off when this attention was attracted by a new and louder shriek from the parent bird.

Her mind had been on the golf players and not on a large hawk which had been lurking and hovering near by, its greedy eyes fastened on the plump young birds with a ferocity in no way limited or modified by the laws governing the close season.

The hawk swooped down and grabbed one of the chicks before the parent could divert attention wholly from the players to the bird of prey. Mr. Hawk was rising with it, when the mother discovered the seizure and made what might be called a flying leap for the aerial pirate.

Then followed a duel in midair, 15 feet from the ground, which held the golfers spellbound. They could not have interfered at this stage of the battle had they possessed the opportunity, so fascinating was the struggle between, on the one side of the fearlessness, desperation and spunk inspired by the mother love of the partridge, and on the other side the savagery of the hawk.

Both the combatants tumbled to the sward, with the partridge on top, clawing, pecking and rolling over and over. Feathers flew. Mr. Hawk was on his back, and the mother partridge kept shrieking and whistling to her children to take to the tall grass. The hawk had so much to attend to in defending itself from the attacks of the partridge that it was obliged in the early rounds of the combat to drop the chick.

After a desperate battle on the ground, lasting several minutes, the partridge left the attack and fluttered in the direction of her brood, while the hawk doggedly made a dive to capture another of her young. Mr Haskell and Judge Johnson, wielding their drivers, then made for the freebooter of the air, and drove him off. While they were doing this the partridge and three of her chicks made their escape, leaving behind the one that had been dropped from the hawk's talons. It had sustained a broken wing. The golfers placed the wounded chick in the tall grass near by, where the hawk could not find it. It was still there when they went back in the evening to investigate, but it was gone in the morning.

PRINCE OF WALES A FARMER

He Will Breed Shorthorns and Horses at Cornwall—Country to Profit by Venture.

London.—The prince of Wales is about to make his debut as a farmer. He is to start a home farm in Cornwall for the breeding of shorthorns and heavy horses.

It is a tradition that a British monarch should be a farmer, and it is natural that the prince should start in the Duchy of Cornwall, which provides him with some $500,000 a year.

Early in the nineteenth century Cornwall had some famous shorthorn herds, but owing to interbreeding, due to the geographical isolation of the county, the general stock deteriorated. To remedy this the prince's farm of 300 acres at Whiteford will breed a new stock for the benefit of breeding throughout the duchy, as the prince will specialize in stock of the best pedigree and thus afford the whole duchy the advantage of sires and breed.

LONG SLEEP CAUSES CRIME

Criminologist of Cincinnati Says More Than Seven Hours' Rest Is Weakening.

Cincinnati, O.—"Seven hours' sleep is all that is necessary for any human being and if obtained regularly in certain hours nightly will keep the body and mind in a healthy state," said Foertmeyer, coroner of Cincinnati, and famed throughout the country as an authority on criminology. "Much of the disease of today is due to too much or too little sleep. A person who sleeps over seven hours has had too much rest. Men and women who commit crime are as a rule long sleepers. Their minds grow weak from too much sleep and they acquire the don't care habit, which often results in crime."

TELLS UNCANNY SEA STORY

"Demon Cargo," Impossible to Get Rid Of, Causes Destruction of British Steamship by Fire.

London.—The story of the "demon cargo" of the steamship Hardy was written into the records of the king's bench, through the testimony of her captain. On a voyage from Treport with a large cargo of mineral waters, consigned to a London firm, water reached a quantity of metallic sodium, which was also a part of the cargo, setting it afire.

The captain, not being aware of the nature of the sodium, played the hose on it, with the result that two tons of it were set afire, and there was a series of explosions.

Nonplused, the captain ordered all of the cases of sodium heaved into the sea. When this was done the force of explosion of the sodium in contact with the water caused several of the cases to jump back again aboard the ship and the vessel itself caught fire. There was another explosion in the cargo, which caused the vessel to break amidships and sink. The mate was drowned, but the captain and crew were saved.

The story came out in an action for damages against the steamship company for the loss of the mineral water. The court awarded the plaintiff $5,000 damages, with costs, and remarked to the captain that he seemed to have had the "devil among the tailors when the water got in."

ROSSETTI'S GRAVE IN DECAY

Almost Hidden From View by a Clump of Bushes Opposite Church Porch.

London.—It is only some 31 years since Rossetti died and already the grave of the poet painter has fallen into a condition of decay. Pilgrims to Birchington, the quiet little annex to noisy Margate, generally have some difficulty in finding the grave, as it is almost completely hidden from view by a clump of bushes immediately opposite the church porch.

The memorial takes the form of a runic cross, which was designed by Ford Madox Brown and the cost of which was partly provided by Christina Rossetti. The epitaph engraved upon the base of the cross is: "Here sleeps Gabriel Charles Dante Rossetti, honored under the name of Dante Gabriel Rossetti among painters as a painter and among poets as a poet.

"Born in London of parentage mainly Italian, 12th May, 1828. Died at Birchington 9th April, 1882." On the stone slab are representations of the meeting of Dante and Beatrice, the winged bull god of Nineveh, and St. Luke the artist. In the church is a two light stained glass window, partly the work of Frederick Shields.

WORKS 60 YEARS FOR FIRM

Put on Payroll at Age of Fourteen—Is Considered One of the Best Employes.

Pawtucket, R. I.—The long distance record for holding a job is believed to be that of Thomas McAloon, a seventy-four-year-old Pawtucket man, who has worked continuously sixty years for one concern.

Nor is Mr. McAloon content to rest on his laurels and retire from active life. Not a bit of it. As foreman of the "steaming" department of the largest finishing works in Pawtucket, he is right on the job every week day, rain or shine. He declares that, outside of a little loss of agility in his legs, he is just as good as ever, and can keep his men up to a championship of efficiency in pushing the work out just as well today as he could years ago.

There is not a man in this great establishment who can boast of the fact that he worked alongside of Foreman McAlcon fifty years ago, for he has outdistanced them all. He is the oldest employe in this plant, both in age and in years of service, and is held in the highest esteem by the officials of this company. They feel, in spite of his age, he is a most valuable employe, and declare his retirement will have to come at his own request.

When a reporter called at the print works in Pawtucket, he found Alderman McAloon watching the work in the "steaming" room, keeping his eye on the intricate mechanism and seeing that the standard of work was kept up at all times.

"I was born to work," declared Alderman McAloon to the reporter, "and I mean to keep it up so long as I can stand on two feet.

"When I first came to work, it was a 12-hour day, reporting in the morning at 6:30 and quitting at 6:30, from March to September, and from seven o'clock in the morning to seven at night the remaining six months. The only vacations we had then were from Saturday night to the next Monday morning, except when there would be a breakdown or the factory was closed for repairs."

CRIES FOR HIS NEGRO CHUM

Son of His Father's Coachman Sent on Flier to Palm Beach to Play With Vinson McLean.

Washington, D. C.—"Send for 'Jack' Johnson," said Vinson Walsh McLean, the $100,000,000 baby, as he gazed disdainfully at his expensive toys and other allurements of Palm Beach. "I want 'Jack' Johnson to play with me."

Of course "Jack" Johnson was wired for, with instructions to start at once. By the way, he is not the pugilist, but a seven-year-old Washington darky boy. When the message summoning him arrived "Jack" almost rolled his eyes out of his head. He often played with Vinson in the private park at Friendship, but to go to Palm Beach and play with him was beyond his wildest dreams.

No conqueror entering a captured city ever was as proud as "Jack" Johnson appeared as he waved good by to envious friends from the window of a Palm Beach flier. He had a good cause for pride, for in Vinson's acquaintance in Washington are scions of millionaires and youthful sprigs of foreign nobility. But he passed them all by for the fun of making sand castles with "Jack" Johnson, the son of one of his father's stablemen.

IN FAVOR OF SYNDICALISM

Son of Wealthy Shipbuilder Says Masses Have Right to Call for General Strike.

London.—The son and heir of Baron Armstrong, the Hon. William John Montagu Armstrong, avowed himself a "syndicalist," in a communication the other day to a newspaper in Newcastle-on-Tyne, where his father's great shipbuilding yards are located.

In his letter Mr. Armstrong affirmed that "the masses of the people are seething with justifiable discontent." "Their wages are low," he says, and their rents are high, while caste distinctions rend in twain the unity of all nations.

Mr. Armstrong, who will not be twenty-one until October, favors the use of politics for remedying social evils, but says that if constitutional means fail he advocates a general strike as the only alternative.

SEWING CIRCLE IS STARTLED

Husbands Send Damaged Trousers and Pertinent Notes to Wives' Club.

South Amboy.—Pandora's box, inclosed in a big packing case and disguised with the labels of an express company, was delivered to the home of Mrs. Frank E. Hoffman, president of the Ladies' Sewing circle. It arrived just as a meeting of the circle was being started.

"I know it is some splendid surprise," said Mrs. John O. Thom, secretary of the circle. "I heard my husband and some of the other men talking together, and I just bet they've sent us something beautiful."

"Open it! Open it!" chorused the others.

Two dinner knives and a tack hammer were broken before the lid was pried off. The heavy layers of excelsior inside raised their hopes.

"It must be something gorgeous for them to pack it so carefully," said Mrs. Thom, as the president of the circle broke another dinner knife wrenching off the lid of the inside box.

Mrs. Hoffman reached into the box and held aloof a pair of old trousers with a note pinned on a conspicuous part of them.

"Oh!" shrieked one of the ladies, making a grab for them. "My husband's trousers!"

Then she tore off the note that had been pinned to them. It read:

"My wife belongs to the sewing circle, but kindly note that I have been holding up a most important portion of my apparel with a nail for the last few weeks, owing to the dearth of buttons thereon."

"The horrid thing!" cried the wife, tossing the offending garment on the floor.

For a moment a combination of horrified surprise and fear of other family skeletons that might be contained in the box held the other members of the sewing circle away from it. Curiosity finally overcame other emotions, and each looked for the worst. They found.

One coat had this inscription pinned on it:

"Any attention to the lining of this garment would be appreciated by a poor married man."

Socks that needed darning and stirts with holes in them were also in evidence. In fact, there was hardly an article of men's wearing apparel that was not represented in the box. And pinned to each were pertinent comments.

The Ladies' Sewing circle did a lot of darning—both figuratively and literally.

LAUGHS AT SOLDIER'S NAME

Private Says He Is Called Titanic Meyer Because He Was Not Lost on Liner.

Berlin.—Whenever the kaiser reviews a regiment personally interesting stories concerning conversations between him and some of the soldiers form the topic of evening talk in the barracks and eventually find their way into the press. These may or may not be true, but they are always interesting, and the latest is well vouched for.

According to this report the emperor, while reviewing the guard regiment at Potsdam, was attracted by a private who was unusually tall and awkward. The kaiser approached him and asked:

"What's your name, my son?"

"Titanic Meyer, your majesty," answered the soldier.

"Titanic Meyer?" repeated the kaiser, smiling. "Don't you know you bear the name of a ship which sank last April? How comes it you are named after a ship?"

"Yes, your majesty," replied the soldier. "That's the reason I'm called Titanic Meyer. When the ship was lost the captain said to me: 'Meyer, why weren't you on the Titanic? Then we wouldn't be bothered with you here.' Since then I'm called Titanic Meyer."

The kaiser laughed unrestrainedly, but the captain appeared not to enjoy the incident.

SAYS INSANE ARE BIG EATERS

Prison Allowance Costs 25 Cents More a Day Than for Rational Inmates.

Cleveland, O.—An insane prisoner's appetite is 25 cents a day more costly than that of a thoroughly rational, evenly balanced cell inmate in the county jail here. Allowance per diem for insane guests is 75 cents, for sane boarder 50 cents.

This was made known in a suit against Sheriff A. J. Hirstons for the recovery of $46,741, alleged illegal profit from feeding prisoners. Attorney Frank E. Gentsch alleges the Sheriff spent only 17 cents a day on each prisoner, keeping the balance of the allowance for himself.

Widow Killed by Pet Cat.

London.—Through a cat jumping on the table and overturning a paraffin lamp, Mrs. Elizabeth Aylott, a widow, aged seventy-eight, of St. Pancras, was fatally burned. The paraffin ran from the lamp in a burning stream, according to her own explanation in the hospital, and while she was trying to extinguish the flames her gown became ignited.

Cat Caused Darkness.

Winsted, Conn.—A cat chased up a pole by a dog, short circuited the city light wires and caused three hours of darkness.

RECIPE FOR SAVING

Head of Chicago Mission Tells How to Rescue Derelicts.

Harry Monroe Declares He Was a Tough, But Was Called From Life of Debauchery by Conviction of Its Hopelessness.

"With a Bible in one hand and a loaf of bread in the other—that's the only way to save the man that's down."

"Don't drop the bad man, the man that's strong and wrong. That's the man to stick to. If you win you've got a real one."

"Kindness is the thing. Slap him on the back. Help him 'get a front,' then make him hustle."

"The helpless booze fighter has just lost his nerve. He's a dead one. Help him materially as well as mentally. If you don't he's a goner. He can't make a play at all."

Chicago.—Harry Monroe gives these remedies for the redemption of those who have strayed or have fallen.

The kindly little fat man with the twinkling eye and a handshake that has given hope to thousands thus sums up, in advice to others, the acts that have made him successful at Pacific Garden Mission.

Nearly everybody has heard of Harry Monroe. Among the derelicts he is known as a friend. Among church folk he is the genius who guides the Pacific Garden Mission, the "mother of American missions."

Still another class of people know Harry Monroe. Thirty-five years ago, when Pacific Garden, at 67 West Van Buren street, was one of Chicago's most notorious "free and easies," saloon, cafe and dance hall, the "rounders" knew Monroe as a "pal."

"Well! A Man Who Has Been on the Water 34 Years Should Not Look Old at 60."

Monroe was then a young tough who fought his way in and out of the dives of Whisky Row, and most of the time was drinking heavily. An interviewer remarked about his youthfully pink cheeks and clear eye.

"That's from more than twenty years on the water wagon," laughed Harry Monroe. "You think I'm 50. Well, I passed the 60 mark last year.

"Thirty years ago I staggered past this place. I was wandering aimlessly. I heard the singing. I came in and sat through the service. Says I to myself, 'This is the game that's right. I'm wrong.' I tried to drive away that feeling, but it wouldn't go. I came back.

"I heard men tell their experiences in here. The testimony rang true. That appealed to me, so I said, 'Here goes. I quit the booze right now.' That's what I did. It was an awful battle, but I won."

Mr. Monroe retold the story of the conversation of "Billy" Sunday, nationally known evangelist, when the latter was Capt. Anson's "fairy boy," the most promising athlete of the old White Sox.

Sunday and a group of drunken ballplayers stopped to hear the street service on South State street that was being conducted by Colonel Clarke and Mr. Monroe. He left his fellows, joined the mission and, while accompanying the team in other cities, refused to play on Sunday and conducted mission services instead.

"Song — The Stuff That Gets the Heart and Pulls."

Mr. Monroe was asked what it is that wins men back to self-respect after they have fallen. He pointed to a sign on the mission wall—"How Long Since You Wrote to Mother?" and then, in a clear tenor voice, sang a sympathetic old song: "The Little Brown Church."

"Song," he said, "that is the stuff that gets to a man's heart, and pulls. Kindness is the thing, though. Most of the men who come in here are helpless booze-fighters. The booze-fighter has lost his nerve. He's a dead one. What he needs is a friend.

"Chicago is the mecca of the down and out, because they know that Chicago offers more kindness than any other city in the land. It is surprising how fast young chaps from the country strike the skids and go. They get dizzy in the big city, and fall. Kindness is the only thing that will bring them back."

DIGGER PARALYZED IN GRAVE

Fellow Workmen Find Him in Throes of Death in Cemetery at Guildford, England.

London.—Sounds from an open grave startled men at work in Guildford (Surry) cemetery. They found a fellow workman, who had a paralytic stroke, at the bottom of a grave which he was digging. He died shortly after being removed from the excavation.

SAYS CONGRESS IS HONEST

Victor Berger, Socialist Representative, However, Asserts Only Capitalists Are Represented.

New York.—"I have lived among the congressmen long enough to know them. There may be crooks in the house of representatives, but there are very few of them. The great majority are honest men, representing their class—the capitalist class. The only trouble is they won't admit there is any other class." Congressman Victor Berger, the Socialist representative from Wisconsin, who is about to retire from the house, made this statement in addressing an audience at the People's Forum in Brooklyn. Berger praised Taft as a well-meaning man, "born with a gold spoon in his mouth."

WOMEN ACT ON GRAND JURY

Men Inquisitors Gossip Too Much, Remarks a California Judge at Redwood, Cal.

Redwood City, Cal.—In accepting the qualifications of seventeen women for the San Mateo county grand jury venire, Superior Judge George Buck in effect placed at least six women on the grand jury. Only thirteen men were named and the membership of the grand jury is limited to nineteen. This will be the first instance in this state of women serving on a grand jury.

Judge Buck accepted married women, most of whom appear as "housewives" on the voting register.

"I've always wanted to get a jury that wouldn't gossip," said Judge Buck. "There never has been a grand jury in San Mateo county that could keep a secret, and now we'll give the women a chance."

FESTIVAL RESEMBLES A RIOT

Remarkable Scenes Attending the Muharram When It Is Held In Populous Hindu City.

The festival of the Muharram at Udaipur is always big with possibilities of trouble. One-fourth of the population is Mohammedan, the other three-fourths are mainly Hindu, and the Mewar Hindu is distinctly of the vigorous type. The day is made a general holiday, and the scores of tall policemen have a busy time.

We were given seats on the roof of one of the lower structures connected with the temple of Jagannath, so the time of waiting was comfortably passed. In fact, it was all too short, for each moment offered its own entertainment, although one needed little besides the throng itself, filling the square and overflowing to the neighboring balconies and roofs.

Just beneath us was an athletic exhibition—dancing, tumbling and what not. At one point an old Hajput warrior entered the circle, and calling three boys from the crowd, bade them lie down. When an apple had been placed on each little brown neck the swordsman, never interrupting the rhythmic dance, clove each apple with his flashing blade; and the unaffrighted youngsters ran back gleefully to their friends.

Just when a Western crowd might have been growing impatient we heard the beating of drums and clashing of swords mingled with the wild cries of the devotees. Soon the procession poured into the square. Surely if ever a festival was calculated to rouse men to fanatical madness, it was this. As every one knows, the Muharram commemorates the death of the grandsons of the prophet; and over all is heard the piercing cry of, "Hasan! Husain!" The drums roar madly; wild-eyed priests beat their breasts; another group brandishes gleaming swords. But the tall policemen keep them from tarrying long in any one spot, and the tazzias move slowly past.

In front of the foremost bier we noticed a man rolling over and over along the rough road, while his friends fanned him in his evident distress. It was simply the fulfilment of a vow. The poor wretch had prayed that a man child be vouchsafed him, swearing to go to the whole route of the procession with his hands and feet tightly bound if only his cry was hear. The boy had come, and he was paying the price. Ever the cry for the man child.—F. B. R. Hellems, in Harper's Magazine.

INITIALS ONLY.

—BY—

Anna Catherine Green.

"You must have serious reasons for feeling so—reasons which I do not quite understand. May I ask why you place such value upon a life which, if ever useful to itself or others, has lost and lost forever, the one delight which gave it meaning?"

It was for Mr. Challoner's voice to tremble now, as reaching out his hand, he declared, with unmistakable feeling:

"I have no son. I have no interest in life, outside this room and the possibilities it contains for me. Your attachment to my daughter has created a bond between us, Mr. Brotherson, which I sincerely hope to see recognized by you."

Startled and deeply moved, the young man stretched out a shaking hand towards his visitor, with the feeble but exulting cry:

"Then you do not blame me for her wretched and mysterious death. You hold me guiltless of the misery which nerved her despairing arm?"

"Quite guiltless."

Oswald's wan and pinched features took on a beautiful expression and Mr. Challoner no longer wondered at his daughter's choice.

"Thank God!" fell from the sick man's lips, and then there was a silence during which their two hands met.

It was some minutes before either spoke and then it was Oswald who said:

"I must confide to you certain facts. I honored your daughter and realized her position fully. Our plight was never made in words, nor should I have presumed to advance any claim to her hand if I had not made good my expectations, Mr. Challoner. I meant to win both her regard and yours by acts, not words. I felt that I had a great deal to do and I was prepared to work and wait. I loved her—" He turned away his head and the silence which filled up the gap united those two hearts as the old and young are seldom united.

But when a little later Mr. Challoner rejoined Doris, in her little sitting-room, he nevertheless showed a perplexity she had hoped to see removed by this understanding with the younger Brotherson.

"I Have No Son."

The cause became apparent as soon as he spoke.

"These brothers hold by each other," said he. "Oswald will hear nothing against Orlando. He says that he has redeemed his fault. He does not even protest that his brother's word is to be believed in this matter. He does not seem to think that necessary. He evidently regards Orlando's personality as speaking as truly and satisfactorily for itself, as his own does. And I dared not undeceive him."

"He does not know all our reasons for distrust. He has heard nothing about the poor washerwoman."

"No, and he must not—not for weeks. He has borne all that he can."

"His confidence in his older brother is sublime. I do not share it; but I cannot help but respect him for it."

It was warmly said, and Mr. Challoner could not forbear casting an anxious look at her upturned face. What he saw there made him turn away with a sigh.

"This confidence has for me a very unhappy side," he remarked. "It shows me Oswald's thought. He who loved her best, accepts the cruel verdict of an unreasoning public."

Doris' large eyes burned with a weird light upon his face."

"He has not had my dream," she murmured, with all the quiet of an unmoved conviction.

Yet as the days went by, even her manner changed towards the busy inventor. It was hardly possible for it not to. The high stand he took; the regard accorded him on every side; his talent; his conversation, which was an education in itself, and, above all, his absorption in a work daily advancing towards completion, removed him so insensibly and yet so decidedly, from the hideous past of tragedy with which his name, if not his honor, was associated, that, unconsciously to herself, she gradually lost her icy air of repulsion and lent him a more or less attentive ear, when he chose to join their small company of an evening. The result was that he turned so bright a side upon her that toleration merged from day to day into admiration and memory lost itself in anticipation of the event which was to prove him a man of men, if not one of the world's greatest mechanical geniuses.

Meantime, Oswald was steadily improving in health, if not in spirits. He had taken his first walk without any unfavorable results, and Orlando decided from this that the time had come for an explanation of his device and his requirements in regard to it. Seated together in Oswald's room, he broached the subject thus:

"Oswald, what is your idea about what I'm making up there?"

"That it will be a success."

"I know; but its character, its use? What do you think it is?"

"I've an idea; but my idea doesn't fit the conditions."

"How's that?"

"The shed is too closely hemmed in. You haven't room—"

"For what?"

"To start an aeroplane."

"Yet it is certainly a device for flying."

"I supposed so; but—"

"It is an air-car with a new and valuable idea—the idea for which the whole world has been seeking ever since the first aeroplane found its way up from the earth. My car needs no room to start in save that which it occupies. If it did, it would be but the modification of a hundred others."

"Orlando!"

As Oswald thus gave expression to his surprise, their two faces were a study: the fire of genius in the one; the light of sympathetic understanding in the other.

"If this car, now within three days of its completion," Orlando proceeded, "does not rise from the oval of my hangar like a bird from its nest, and after a wide and circling flight descend again into the self-same spot without any swerving from its direct course, then have I failed in my endeavor and must take a back seat with the rest. But it will not fail. I'm certain of success, Oswald. All I want just now is a sympathetic helper—you, for instance; some one who will aid me with the final fittings and hold his peace to all eternity if the impossible occurs and the thing proves a failure."

"Have you such pride as that?"

"Precisely."

"So much that you cannot face failure?"

"Not when attached to my name. You can see how I feel about that by the secrecy I have worked under. No other person living knows what I have just communicated to you. Every part shipped here came from different manufacturing firms; sometimes a part of a part was all I allowed to be made in any one place. My fame, like the ship, must rise with one bound into the air, or it must never rise at all. I was not made for petty accomplishment, or the slow plodding of commonplace minds. I must startle, or remain obscure. That is why I chose this place for my venture, and you for my helper and associate."

"You want me to ascend with you?"

"Exactly."

"At the end of three days?"

"Yes."

"Orlando, I cannot."

"You cannot? Not strong enough yet? I'll wait then—three days more."

"The time's too short. A month is scarcely sufficient. It would be folly, such as you never show, to trust a nerve so undermined as mine till time has restored its power. For an enterprise like this you need a man of ready strength and resources; no one whose condition you might be obliged to consider at a very critical moment."

"Orlando, balked thus at the outset, showed his displeasure.

"You do not do justice to your will. It is strong enough to carry you through anything."

"It was."

"You can force it to act for you."

"I fear not, Orlando."

"I counted on you and you thwart me at the most critical moment of my life."

Oswald smiled; his whole candid and generous nature bursting into view in one quick flash.

"Perhaps," he assented; "but you will thank me when you realize my weakness. Another man must be found—quick, deft, secret, yet honorably alive to the importance of the occasion and your rights as a great original thinker and mechanician."

"Do you know such a man?"

"I don't; but there must be many such among our workmen."

"There isn't one; and I haven't time to send to Brooklyn. I reckoned on you."

"Can you wait a month?"

"No."

"A fortnight, then?"

"No, not ten days."

Oswald looked surprised. He would like to have asked why such precipitation was necessary, but the tone in which this ultimatum was given was of that decisive character which admits of no argument. He therefore merely looked his query. But Orlando was not one to answer looks; besides, he had no reply for the same importunate question urged by his own good sense. He knew that he must make the attempt upon which his future rested soon, and without risk of the sapping influence of lengthened suspense and weeks of waiting. He could hold on to those two demons leagued in attack against him, for a definite seven days, but not for an indeterminate time. If he were to be saved from folly—from himself—events must rush.

He therefore repeated his "No," with increased vehemence, adding, as he marked the reproach in his brother's eye, "I cannot wait. The test must be made on Saturday evening next, whatever the conditions; whatever the weather. An air-car to be serviceable must be ready to meet lightning and tempest, and what is worse, perhaps, an insufficient crew." Then rising, he exclaimed, with a determination which rendered him majestic, "If help is not forthcoming, I'll do it all myself. Nothing shall hold me back; nothing shall stop me; and when you see me and hear my car rise above the treetops, you'll feel that I have done what I could to make you forget—"

He did not need to continue. Oswald understood and flashed a grateful look his way before saying:

"You will make the attempt at night?"

"Certainly."

"And on Saturday?"

"I've said it."

"I will run over in my mind the qualifications of such men as I know and acquaint you with the result tomorrow."

"There are adjustments to be made. A man of accuracy is necessary."

"I will remember."

"And he must be likable. I can do nothing with a man with whom I'm not perfectly in accord."

"I understand that."

"Good-night then." A moment of hesitancy, then, "I wish not only yourself but Miss Scott to be present at this test. Prepare for the spectacle; but not yet, not till within an hour or two of the occasion."

And with a proud smile in which he flashed a significance which startled Oswald, he gave a hurried nod and turned away.

When in an hour afterwards, Doris looked in through the open door, she found Oswald sitting with face buried in his hands, thinking so deeply that he did not hear her. He had sat like this, immovable and absorbed, ever since his brother had left him.

CHAPTER XXXV.

Silence—and a Knock.

Oswald did not succeed in finding a man to please Orlando. He suggested one person after another to the exacting inventor, but none were satisfactory to him and each in turn was turned down. It is not every one we want to have share a world-wide triumph or an ignominious defeat. And the days were passing.

He had said in a moment of elation, "I will do it alone;" but he knew even then that he could not. Two hands were necessary to start the car; afterwards, he might manage it alone. Descent was even possible, but to give the contrivance its first lift required a second mechanician. Where was he to find one to please him? And what was he to do if he did not? Conquer his prejudices against such men as he had seen, or delay the attempt, as Oswald had suggested, till he could get one of his old cronies on from New York. He could do neither. The obstinacy of his nature was such as to offer an invincible barrier against either suggestion. One alternative remained. He had heard of women aviators. If Doris could be induced to accompany him into the air, instead of clinging sodden-like to the weight of Oswald's woe, then would the world behold a triumph which would dwarf the ecstasy of the bird's flight and rob the eagle of his kingly pride. But Doris barely endured his as yet, and the thought was not one to be considered for a moment. Yet what other course remained? He was brooding deeply on the other subject, in his hangar one evening—(it was Thursday and Saturday was but two days off) when there came a light knock at the door.

This had never occurred before. He had given strict orders, backed by his brother's authority, that he was never to be intruded upon when in this place; and though he had sometimes encountered the prying eyes of the curious flashing from behind the trees encircling the hangar, his door had never been approached before, or his privacy encroached upon. He started then, when this low but penetrating sound struck across the turmoil of his thoughts, and cast one look in the direction from which it came; but he did not rise, or even change his position on his workman's stool.

MACONE IS NORTH WOBURN CHAMPION

Defeated John O'Neil in Final Game of Pool Tournament

George Macone fulfilled the expectations of his friends last evening when he defeated John O'Neil for the championship of North Woburn in the final tournament game at Gus Brogna's pool room. The score was Macone 100, O'Neil 82.

A larger gallery than has attended any of the games played previously was on hand to witness the contest, and opinion was evenly divided as to the outcome, each of the contestants having plenyt of supporters. It was a battle royal from the opening frame until the twelfth, first one and then the other leading by a few balls. At the end of the sixth frame it was anybody's game each player having pocketed 37 balls. At the end of the twelfth frame Macone had 72 while O'Neil was right there with 70, and the spectators were kept right on edge, so close and interesting was the play.

On the next frame, however, Macone added ten to his total while the principal assessor was getting three, and the rest of the journey was easy for Macone.

Already the champion has been challenged by a number of expert cue wielders from all parts of the city, and there is evefy possibility of several matches, if not another tournament being arranged as a result of the recently played games. The score of last night's game by frames:

INSECTICIDES AND FUNGICIDES

Circular No. 2, Published by the State Board of Agriculture

When insect pests and fungous diseases attack our crops, and we begin to wonder where we are going to get off, an old familiar expression comes to mind, we get out the tank and the pump and devoutly say, "Let us spray." Each year the importance, the absolute nesessity of spraying is more forcibly impressed upon the person who is engaged in agriculture. Great as are the precautions to prevent the importation of insect pests and fungous diseases, strenous as is the opposition to their multiplication, their numbers are rapidly increasing year by year. We have allowed the birds, the natural check upon the multiplication of insect pests, to be depleted in numbers and we have otherwise foolishly given encouragement to the increase of these insect and fungous enemies.

To meet the increasing demand for knowledge as to the best methods of combating these enemies of vegetation, the State Board of Agriculture has issued a free circular of information, entitled, "Insecticides and Fungicides, and Directions for Their Use." This is a 24-page leaflet written by the State Nursery Inspector, Dr. H. T. Fernald, and is an authoritative and concise treatment of the subject. A few general suggestions are given, among which appear the following:

"Spray at the right time. Too many people delay spraying until too late to accomplish much good."

"Have your materials for making the spray all together and near a water supply. Much time is lost in mixing materials where this is not the case."

" 'Kill two birds with one stone' whenever possible. Some sprays consisting of a combined insecticide and fungicide, applied at the right time, will kill several different kinds of insects which may be present, and also prevent several of the fungous diseases."

Following a short description of spraying apparatus, some general suggestions and a discussion of the two kinds of insecticides, Dr. Fernald gives directions for preparing the various approved mixtures, insecticides, fungicides, combinations of the two, and fumigants. Then follows a list of fruits and vegetables, the insects and diseases which attack them, and necessary remedial measures. No fruit or vegetable grower should be without this concise, up-to-date treatise of the subject.

It will be sent free to any one. Apply to J. Lewis Ellsworth, Secretary State Board of Agriculture, 136 State House, Boston, Mass., and ask for Circular No. 2.

DOG'S CRIES HAUNT ORPHAN

Cause Girl to Confess Starting $5,000 Fire in Jersey—Wanted to See Some Excitement.

New Brunswick, N. J.—The death cries of a dog in a barn she had fired has led Julia Schlosser, a fifteen-year-old orphan, to confess that she started the fire which destroyed all of the farm buildings of Mrs. Anna Schoop's estate at Monmouth Junction at a loss of $5,000.

"I can't keep the noise of that poor dog out of my ears," she repeatedly told Mrs. Schoops, who had recently adopted the girl. "I am tired of hearing you say that," the foster mother said, "for you talk as though you had a guilty conscience and sent the poor dog to his death." In a torrent of remorse the girl then confessed, according to the authorities, who have removed her to the state home for girls, where she had formerly been committed as an incorrigible.

The only reason Julia gave for starting the fire was that she wanted to see some excitement and was tired of the monotony of farm life.

MAJ. WALKER DESCRIBES JOURNEY

Woburn Boys With Co. G. on Washington Trip

Washington, D. C.
March 3, 1913.

Editor Woburn JOURNAL:

We left Fall River at 8 o'clock last night on the steamship Providence, for New York. As the entire regiment was on board we had difficulty in getting staterooms enough for all. Five of us High school fellows had one together. As there was only bunks for four we drew lots for the pleasure of sleeping on a mattress on the floor. I got stuck, but think I had the best bed after all.

The water was not rough and no one was sick but the novelty of the situation rendered sleep out of the question. We were just going to sleep about one o'clock when "Bucket" Sherburne decided he was a bantam rooster and had to crow. This caused Shinquin and Marshall to sing (an unknown quality in both), and then "Harry" Lawson joined his talent(?).

After we had aroused the ire of those in the adjoining staterooms we decided to get up. We chased each other around the decks until it was time for sunrise. This was well worth sitting up all night for. From then on we had plenty to interest us.

All the way down the East river "Gus" Everburg was looking for the Brooklyn Bridge and Harry Lawson for the statue of Liberty. At New York we took a ferry to Jersey City and there the train for Washington. The ride was a long one but we all enjoyed it entertained by "Marcheen" Foley and his songs and by the "nutty" twins, Lawson and Sherburne. We have been assigned quarters here in Washington in the Old Census building and are resting up for our march tomorrow.

SPARKS FROM THE BLAZE

The care and safety accorded to the horses which were rescued last night, is worthy of commendation. The policemen, aided by several volunteers, led the animals from their stalls to the open, where willing hands took them in charge. The whole transaction was done with little or no confusion.

* * * * *

A good number of onlookers, standing in front of the Woburn Hardware Company's store on the corner of Everett street received a "ducking" when a piece of hose broke loose from the fireman's hold, and the "kick-back" showered the water in fine rain-like spray. It immediately made everybody forget the flames and scramble to a place of safety for a new view point.

* * * * *

When the first pressure was applied to the suction hose on the hydrant on Everett street, it burst and had to be replaced by one of stronger,heavier and more durable kind.

* * * * *

The small rivers which ran on Main street were somewhat difficult to cross and as a result, many a mis-step was made, and wet feet were plentiful among the spectators.

* * * * *

Much interest and enthusiasm was shown by spectators in the appearance and quality of the working power of the new Wakefield auto fire engine truck. Its efficient capacity and also the fact that it covered the distance between Wakefield and Woburn in 13 minutes spoke wonders in its favor. Wake up, people of Woburn!

The "JOURNAL" office was a veritable port of refuge to many during the conflagration and various articles entrusted to its care were housed temporarily.

The arrival of the various apparatus loaned by surrounding towns was received with great relief of mind by anxious spectators, and the hard-working local force. As one after another of these "friends in need" came upon the scene they were greeted with welcome shouts.

BIG BLAZE IN BUSINESS CENTRE

Early Morning Fire in Central House Property, Main Street, Proves To Be Stubborn

LOSS APPROXIMATING, $30,000

The city had its worst fire scare since the McGrath fire of several years ago, when the alarm from box 612 rang in at 1.20 this morning and was quickly followed with a second and then a general alarm, for a fire which started in the rear of the old Central House, and not only threatened the total destruction of this property but the property adjoining. Fortunately there was no wind and with the assistance of the departments from Winchester and Wakefield, the fire was confined to the Central House buildings which were badly gutted, entailing a loss which will probably reach nearly $30,000.

The fire was discovered by Patrolman Edward Gorman who rang in the alarm and joined by Patrolmen Timothy Walsh, Sweeney, O'Brien and McCauley with a number of citizens who had been aroused by the first alarm, hastened to the stables connected with the hotel building and took out twenty horses owned by R. F. Hudson the contractor, and ten or twelve others in the annex to the stable owned and cared for by the Holland Brothers. Among the latter was a valuable pacing stallion owned by Dan Holland and Alvah Buckman.

Winchester, and Wakefield were prompt in responding to the call for assistance, Winchester's new auto truck being first on the scene, making the run in six minutes after receiving the call. Wakefield's splendid new auto engine made the run from Wakefield, a distance of 7 1-2 miles in thirteen minutes, and with its powerful engines did most efficient work, taking the place of the old substitute engine of the Woburn department which gave out and was taken back to the engine house when the Wakefield apparatus arrived.

The fire started in the rear of the old stable building and worked its way up into the main hotel building and back into the stable building. The fire in the stable was checked before it had reached the main part of the building, but seemed to gain headway as it spread through the hotel property until it broke out through the front on Main street, the whole interior of the upper stories being a seething furnace of flames which for a time baffled the efforts of the firemen to check. The upper stories of the building were unoccupied.

The ground floor, which had been recently remodeled contained three stores, and these were all badly damaged. Gavin & Lydon, grocers, occupied the large store on the west side, and their stock was practically ruined. Their loss will probably be in the vicinity of $5,000. The store in the center was occupied by W. S. Lindsay as a confectionery and ice cream parlors, and here the damage was heavy. As the deluge of water was poured into the building, the weight of the water crushed the steel ceiling and the store was flooded. His loss is estimated at about $2,000 with no insurance.

The third store is occupied by the Central Hardware company of which Frank McMahon is proprietor, and although this was the least affected and escaped the deluge of water which poured into the adjoining stores, the stock was badly damaged and the cellar in which there was a large amount of stock, was partially filled with water.

The only person in the buildings when the fire broke out was Raymond Devine, stable foreman for contractor Hudson, who was asleep in the stable. He was aroused and escaped without injury.

The only casualties reported were light injuries to two men, Christopher J. Carpenter a member of hose 5, who was struck by a falling door and sustained a severe bruise on his forehead which rendered him temporarily hors de combat; and Clifford Paine, who was struck on the forehead by a hose coupling which cut quite a gash from which the blood flowed freely for a few minutes. Neither of the men were more than temporarily disabled and were soon back on duty.

The upper floors of the hotel property were completely gutted, the roof falling in about two hours after the fire started. The roof of the part of the stable adjoining the hotel also collapsed.

The hotel building was a two and a half story wooden building, containing 60 or more rooms. It was built more than sixty years ago and stood on the site of the old Fowle Tavern of Revolutionary fame, and was one of the city's landmarks. Until recently it was owned by Mrs. Gilman F. Jones. A few months ago the hotel building was purchased by N. Gorin, who had remodeled the lower floor, putting in three stores which were all occupied as mentioned above. Mr. Gorin's loss is estimated at $10,000 and Mrs. Jones' at $5,000, both practically covered by insurance.

Thrift.

Thrift has its roots in self-denial. It is in no way identical with avarice, though the spendthrift may denounce every practicer of frugality as a "miser." It is the practical outcome of that prudence which aims at accomplishing great things by humble means. Without it the world in which we live would still be an "unweeded garden."—Rochester Post-Express.

A COSTLY LESSON

The early morning fire on the Central house property, entailing a loss approximating $30,000 attracted an unusually large gallery of interested spectators. It is a safe guess that most of the city council members were in the crowd of on-lookers. And this suggests the query: "Did the aldermen present learn the lesson of the catastrophe?" If they did, they must have realized how unwise and nonsensical was their recent vote to repair the antiquated steamer.

Our department started in to fight the stubborn fire in question with the gravity service, which was very weak, and the substitute steamer that had been sent here while the regular steamer should be in the repair shop. Chief Tracy soon realized that he had a problem beyond his power to control, and assistance was asked from neighboring towns. In six minutes Winchester was on the field of action, and in thirteen minutes the new auto engine made the hard run from Wakefield, and both were efficient allies.

Long before the Wakefield machine arrived the substitute steamer was squeaking and wheezing loud enough to be heard in every one of the city's seven wards, and in a comparatively short time it was "down and out." When the up-to-date auto steamer from Wakefield rushed in and got to work the substitute limped back to the Winn street house like a wounded soldier seeking the rear.

The need of modern equipment got its best demonstration this morning. As an object lesson it was worth more than columns of newspaper comment or hours of argument in council

The issue between "up-to-date" and "has-beens" was directly joined, and everybody saw it, save, possibly some purblind official who like the Bourbons of France, never learn anything. From every group of spectators was heard this morning, ridicule and condemnation of the conduct of the council in spending $2000 in repairing what will be old junk when repaired, while all about us, towns of one-third and one-half our population are investing in the latest equipment for the preservation of property.

How many lessons does the city council need before it heeds the necessity of the age? Woburn was fortunate to have good neighbors this morning. Perhaps the next time they may be unable to respond, and then who can estimate the cost of official misjudgment?

A STAR CHAMBER REDIVIVUS

All by its lonesome the council committee on fire sat in solemn state last evening and listened to the story of conditions existing in hose company Number Three. By a majority vote understood if not formally expressed the public and newspaper men were excluded. The latter body made a formal request to be allowed to remain, but "Nay, Nay, Pauline" for theirs.

Not a breath of this matter must get out until we have incubated and hatched it, said the honorable fragment of the council in effect. And in fact, the inflammable nature of some of the reasons given for objecting were characteristic of a committee on fire. It was urged, weakly we think, that the meeting was a committee meeting, and therefore private. But Lieutenant Edward J. Madden who asked for an investigation did not direct his communication to the committee. He addressed it to the council, elected by the people to do the people's will. Why should a sub-committee arrogate to itself a power and dignity that no other municipal board assumes or claims?

The Waters case before the school committee is an instance in point. That was not referred to a sub-committee but was heard before the full board in public session. Again, recall the Sherbourne case, also before the school committee. That was no sub-committee sitting "in camera" or sub-cellar. Why this evident eagerness to keep the matter quiet? Is it indicative of a desire to throttle investigation, preparatory to applying the white wash brush? And by the way, what was the significance of the motion, made by an alderman when the request for an investigation was read in council meeting, to refer the matter to the Chief engineer? The motion was lost by a vote of six to six. What's the answer?

It is true that the committee on fire is not a unit in this stifling theory, and there are other members of the council who will not be satisfied with any report glossing over conditions.

THE INAUGURAL ADDRESS

President Wilson's inaugural address is remarkable not alone for its brevity as compared with others that have preceded it, or its scholarly finish which was to be expected, but for its almost complete ignoring of the great national questions and issues usually treated by incoming executives.

It is an essay on the duty of the government to the people, and of the people to the government, a plea for a return to saner methods with humanity as its keynote.

In closing President Wilson said, and the words will live:

"This is not a day of triumph; it is a day of dedication. Here muster, not the forces of party, but the forces of humanity. Men's hearts wait upon us; men's lives hang in the balance; men's hopes call upon us to say what we will do. Who shall live up to the great trust? Who dares fail to try? I summon all honest men, all patriotic, all forward-looking men, to my side. God helping me, I will not fail them, if they will but counsel and sustain me!"

BELMONT'S BRIDE IS LOST

Former Ethel Lorraine Vanishes After Completing Demand for Heavy Alimony.

New York.—The romance of Ethel Lorraine and Raymond Belmont, who eloped and were married in Jersey City last November, is about to end after various interruptions by the bridegroom's angry father, August Belmont.

It was learned that the papers in a separation action brought by Mrs. Belmont against her husband will be filed during the week.

The former actress is suing on the grounds of desertion and non-support. The plea will include a demand for large alimony. After their marriage the young couple lived in the Gosford apartments for two weeks, and then the husband suddenly disappeared.

Efforts extending over several days to serve Raymond Belmont with a summons in the case have failed and it was learned that he was having a vacation in South Carolina. Application will be made in the supreme court next week for permission to serve him by publication.

Mrs. Belmont, who continued her residence in the Gosford apartments under the name of Ethel Lorraine, left that address recently without giving any indication of her new address. Her lawyers say they are aware of her present address, but decline to give it out at her request.

Albert Linder, father of Mrs. Belmont, reiterated his offer to provide a home for the pair in case they should come together.

"As far as I can see it," he said, "it is only the young man's father who stands between them, and if he could be brought around to agree to their happiness I would do everything that I could for them. They are quite welcome at any time to take up their abode at my home."

The romance between the two commenced three years ago and resulted in their elopement to Jersey City. The young man's father had been steadfastly opposed to the marriage, and when it was announced it was said that he insisted upon Raymond immediately giving up his wife.

TO IMPROVE UPPER RHINE

Industrial Centers to Be Brought Into Communication With the North Sea.

London.—The time honored joke about the "Swiss navy" looks as though it were in danger of losing its point.

There is a scheme afoot, involving a sum of about $5,000,000, to provide for the improvement of the upper portions of the River Rhine from Lake Constance via Schaffhausen and Basle, up to Strasburg that the industrial centers on the upper Rhine may be brought into direct water communication with the North sea.

An international committee, composed of representatives of Germany, Holland, Switzerland and the Duchy of Baden, are devoting their attention to the proposition, and it is quite likely that it will be carried out.

BONI IN LIMELIGHT AGAIN

Memories of Ill-Starred Marriage of Anna Gould and Comte De Castellane Revived by Libel Suit.

Naples.—Memories of the ill-starred marriage of Anna Gould, now the duchess de Talleyrand, and Compte Boni de Castellane were sensationally revived here recently by a libel action brought by a Count Aguisollo against the Abbe Tedeschi, at one time the confidential adviser of the deposed queen of Naples, a Bavarian princess, who now lives in Paris.

The quarrel between the count and the cleric hinges on their association some years ago in an attempt to establish a powerful newspaper which the abbe had persuaded the ex-queen of Naples to start in the Bourbon interest. It was proposed to make Naples the headquarters of this Bourbon organ, which was to have been backed by a lavish outlay of money, part of which was to have been supplied by the ex-queen and the balance by Comte Boni de Castellane, who at that time was mainly occupied in spending the wealth which his marriage with Anna Gould had put at his disposition.

The Abbe Tedeschi, the moving spirit of the scheme, obtained Boni de Castellane's promise that he would finance the establishment of the newspaper jointly with the ex-queen, and then he made arrangements for Count Aguisollo to take charge of the whole proposition. The count took the matter in hand and set to work with energy. He spent large sums of money on the preliminaries, rented a magnificent building in which to house the paper, engaged the staff, organized the correspondents and installed the printing plant. In fact, he brought matters to the point where nothing remained but to set the machinery to work and bring out the first issue of the paper.

It was at this stage that it became necessary to call on Boni de Castellane for the first installment of the money he had promised to put up, and Boni being then in Paris the Abbe Tedeschi set out to interview him there. Unfortunately for everyone concerned, and especially for Boni de Castellane, Anna Gould had grown tired of her husband's eccentricities and was just then preparing her suit for divorce, at the same time drawing tight her purse strings as far as the gay young count was concerned.

The result was that Boni was unable to fulfill the promise he had given to back the Bourbon newspaper, and as the ex-queen either had not enough money or enough enthusiasm to see it through alone the project fell through.

After this misfortune there was apparently a general falling out. In the course of a quarrel between Abbe Tedeschi and Count Aguisollo the latter accused the abbe of diverting to his own private purse sums which he had received to support the newspaper project from the ex-queen and other sources. Counter allegations were made, and so the unpleasant bickering went on.

MAKES PET SILVER SHOULDER

Doctor of San Francisco Puts Diamonds in Monkey's Ball and Socket Joint.

San Francisco, Cal.—Dr. Milton Francis Clark of this city, who recently provided a dog with a silver leg, fitted a pet monkey with a ball and socket shoulder joint of silver and diamonds. The dog's joint also had gem bearings, and a complication arose when an attempt was made to steal the animal immediately after the operation. Doctor Clark pointed out the advantage of the monkey over the dog, in that the former lives in a cage.

The muscles and tendons were secured in their usual places in the monkey's joint, and it moved its arm with considerable freedom. The operation was preliminary to one which will be performed on a man afflicted with ankylosis of the arms.

Superior, Wis.—Three generations of Malones have been lighthouse keepers on the great lakes. Al Malone, the third of the family that ships from the rock-bound island coat, is in charge of Isle Royale station.

The Superior man has been in charge of the Isle Royale light for nearly three years. He succeeded his father, J. H. Malone, and is the youngest lighthouse keeper on the great lakes. His age is twenty-nine, and as assistant to his father and later as keeper he has been in the government service 13 years. The elder Malone is now in charge of the Pipe island station on Lake Huron.

He has been in the service for 39 years, having taken charge of the Isle

Peter Malone, a grandfather of Al Malone, who died a score of years ago at the remarkable age of one hundred and eight, was also a keeper and was in charge of the Portage lake ship canal when it was established.

Does Friendship Do This?

"It may be true for some natures, as Leonardo said, that 'if you are alone you belong wholly to yourself; if you have a companion, you belong only half to yourself;' but it is certainly not so with me. With me friendship never divides; it multiplies. A friend always makes me more than I am, better than I am, bigger than I am. We two make four, or fifteen, or forty."—American Magazine.

Character Not Admired by Women.

Nothing displeases women more than an austere and self-contained character. They see that they have no hold upon it; its dignity awes them, its pride rebels, its preoccupations keep them aloof.—Hippolyte A. Taine.

The Library Corner
WOBURN PUBLIC LIBRARY

"For the use, benefit, and improvement of the people of Woburn."

INFORMATION ABOUT THE CARD CATALOGUE

Perhaps the most serious of the various details of re-organization planned by the Board of Trustees four years ago was that of re-cataloging the whole library. It was felt to be necessary, however, to take advantage of the modern materials of cataloguing which have been standardized in size at variance with the cards formerly used, and to make available the present large amount of expert co-operative work, of which the library of congress cards are a notable example. The revision has gone on apace without any appreciable disturbance to users of the library, until now over 95 per cent. of the circulation is from books entered in the new catalogue. As is already well-known to most of our borrowers this catalogue is in a case of light and easily removable trays, which, if desired, may be taken to a table for consultation. On the case are posted directions for the use of the catalogue, and also a list of the different classes of books thus far included.

There still remain a large number of cards of the old size representing the earlier and less-used books. These have now been transferred to a new sixty-tray case, uniform with the one containing the new catalogue, and standing on the opposite side of the entrance to the alcove room. In the upper section will be found the author cards, and in the lower section, the subject cards. Their arrangement is exactly the same as before, but they are now much more convenient to use on account of the light removable trays. The process of re-cataloguing is steadily replacing these old cards by fresher and more legible ones.

The new catalogue contains the same kind of entries as the old, namely: authors, titles, and subjects. But instead of being arranged in three separate catalogues, they are combined in one. The arrangement is strictly alphabetical, on the familiar plan of the dictionary.

For this reason the name of "dictionary catalogue" has become generally adopted. Any one who can look up a word in the dictionary can equally well find one in this catalogue, as the process is exactly the same. Each card carries a certain amount of information which corresponds to a separate entry in the dictionary, and the succession of cards is the same as that of the word entries of the dictionary. After many years of experiment by hundreds of libraries it is the consensus of opinion that this plan is the most easily understood, and offers less difficulties, than any other that has been devised for the use of the public.

No catalogue will answer every possible question. There are, however, three fundamental inquiries which in varying form comprise probably ninety-nine of every hundred questions which the catalogue is called upon to answer. They are as follows.

Has the library a book, or books, by a given author, for example: Arnold Bennett? On turning to the catalogue case it will be noted that each tray bears a label, similar to that on the back of a volume of a cyclopedia, to indicate just what portion of the alphabet it contains. A tray marked Barn-Bez would therefore contain all entries from the first one beginning with "barn" to the last one beginning with "bez," and obviously Bennett would be found in this tray, if at all. Following the cards in this tray, as we would the entries of the dictionary, we immediately find a complete list of all the books in the library written by this author. This is the type of question answered by the author card.

Another familiar question is that in which the title is the starting point. "Has the library a book by a given title, for example: 'The Makers of Modern Italy". Remembering that the article "the" at the beginning of a title is omitted or ignored in alphabeting, the inquirer looks in the tray which holds the first part of the "m's," and at once finds the title, if the library owns the book. To answer this kind of question is the office of the title card.

A third and very common question is that of the person who wants information, but does not know either author or title. In the hope that the library can supply the deficiency he asks: "Have you anything about poultry?" The process of looking up the answer is just the same. In the proper alphabetical place, under the entry, "Poultry," is found a list of all the books in the library on that subject. It should be noted, however, that "title" and "subject" are not synonymous terms, the title being the name of the book, and the subject being what the book is about. For example, "The New Egg Farm" is a book about poultry as particularly related to the production of eggs. This suggests a real difficulty which the cataloguer constantly encounters, namely: the selection of proper headings, and enough of them to meet all reasonable demands. Some one else is going to inquire about eggs, instead of poultry, and another about hens. The problem of the cataloguer is to anticipate these inquiries, and the office of the subject card is to answer them.

The catalogue also answers many other questions, such as the date of publication of the book, whether in more than one volume, etc., but the three questions mentioned above are the really important ones which are constantly recurring.

The book-number, which tells the location of the book on the shelves is always found in the extreme upper, left-hand corner of the card. It is usually in the form of a fraction, and both parts are necessary to find the book. In looking for "The Care of the House," by Clark, the number 640 will be found written above, and the expression C595 below, in the form of a fraction. The upper number indicates the class, or group of books, known as Domestic Economy, and the lower one the particular book within that class, which contains a large number of books. By the use of the first number we are able to bring together in one group on the shelves, all the books relating to the same subject, and by the second we can at once identify the individual book and make sure that it will always be found in the same relative position on the shelf. Particular attention is called to this double function of the book number, because people often come to the desk with a request for a book, together with a number which they suppose to indicate its location. The intention of the inquirer is to assist the busy attendant, but this thoughtfulness frequently fails of its purpose, because of failure to note the double form of number and to secure both parts. The only exceptions to this method are Biography, which requires only a single number, and fiction, which has no number.

Many borrowers, as soon as they learn the location of the subjects in which they are interested, prefer to go directly to the shelves. This has the advantage of immediate contact with the whole collection of books, and shows at once just which ones are in their places and available for use.

Always remember two things. The whole system of cataloguing is built up around the author's name. The one most important item to know regarding the book you seek is the author's name. This once known, everything else can be traced. The second point is, do not hesitate to ask questions.

PALACE OF ST. JAMES

Meeting Place of Balkan and Turk Peace Delegates.

Historic Building in London Was Made Royal Residence by Henry VIII.—Commissioners Attracted All Attention at Conference.

London.—St. James' palace, on which the attention of the whole civilized world has been fixed on account of the momentous peace conference, is a dark, gray pile, every stone of which enshrines historic memories.

For many years the visitor from America and elsewhere has made early morning pilgrimages to the palace, for it is here that the picturesque ceremony of "guard mount" takes place, and it is generally one of the regiments of flashing guards that supplies the officers and men to pursue their old-world task of protecting royalty and the Bank of England. It is also the haunt of the London nursemaid, for here she can combine the morning outing in the park for her aristocratic charges and the glimpse of the worshiped guardsman.

During the recent peace meet between the Balkan and Turk delegates the guardsmen and guard mount lost their attraction, and it was a more favorite occupation to stand among an idly curious crowd and watch the prominent statesmen arrive at and depart from the great conference.

There is nothing here to suggest the bloodshed and the carnage that have stained red the page of recent European history. The sequel of this battle of wits, carried on amid all the mild surroundings of metropolitan peace, sacrcely recalled the roar of the Creusot and Krupp guns. Men who looked upon or guided the course of the struggle gazed across the park where the out-of-works sleep through the summer days.

Now the park is a vista of frosted grass, with a flurry of sea gulls showing whitely against dull sky and blue-branched trees. There is no hint anywhere of the passion below the surface that accompanies the changing of frontier lines and the making of a new map of Europe.

Although "our Palace of St. James" is no longer used as a royal residence, it still gives its title to the English court. The levees are held in the throne room, well known to the late Ambassador Whitelaw Reid and the members of the American ambassy as well as to the citizens of the United States who have been presented to his majesty George V. and been allowed to kiss his hand.

The site of St. James' palace was formerly occupied by a leper hospital founded in 1190 and dedicated to St James the Less. Henry VIII. pulled down the old structure, laid out a park, and in 1532 began the building of a palace.

The Staurts were particularly fond of St. James' palace. That ill-fated prince, destined to be James II., was born there. Queen Anne lived there and George II. was the last of the English monarchs to reside at this place. Though he finally quitted it for Buckingham palace, he continued to attend the services at the Chapel Royal. There, according to Mme d'Arblay, the king stayed so long over his prayers that "the queen and family, dropping off one by one, used to leave the king, the parson and his majesty's equery to freeze it out together."

Hitherto the only dispute associated with St. James' palace was, when Queen Victoria wished to install her mother there, but was thwarted by the selfishness of the king of Hanover. Every other association has been overshadowed by the Balkan conference, which in times to come will be looked upon as the most important event in its history.

SIGNS DECEIVED THE QUEEN

King Edward Labeled Smoking Rooms in Palace "Bathrooms," and Ruse Succeeded.

London.—It is well known that Queen Victoria had an insurmountable objection to the "weed" and the smoking room was always relegated to very distant part of her various residences.

So great was her majesty's disapproval of the habit that when she first proposed to visit Sandringham after King Edward, who did not share his royal mother's objection to tobacco, to say the least of it, had practically rebuilt the house a good deal of alarm was felt as to what she would say to the number of smoking rooms.

At last some one hit upon the plan of labeling them "bathrooms," and the ruse succeeded admirably in dispelling her majesty's suspicions.

Practical Matters.

"When one reads he should read something to improve his mind."

"Quite so. Still, it is imperative for some of us to ready laundry lists and time tables occasionally."

SERVICE UNDER KAISER BRIEF

Von Jagow's Appointment Makes Twenty-Fifth Change in Twenty-Five Years.

Berlin.—The appointment of Ambassador von Jagow of Rome to succeed Kiderlen-Wachter as minister of foreign affairs has callen attention to the comparatively brief service in office of imperial ministers under William II., Von Jagow being the ninety-fifth minister appointed by the present emperor in his reign of less than twenty-five years.

It also has brought to the front the indisputable fact that Germany is not over rich in ministerial material. The list of names considered as comprehending all the possible appointments was strikingly short, and at that it included some men who have not thus far given any evidence of possessing the qualities demanded of a minister of foreign affairs.

The German press, with the exception of the conservative element, is inclined, as it has been for a long time, to blame the scarcity of diplomatic and ministerial timber to the fact that few but noblemen are given the opportunity to enter these posts and that the result is that the noblemen have no chance either to learn statecraft or to demonstrate that they possess it. It is pointed out that of Germany's forty ambassadors and ministers to foreign countries, only six were commoners, and that these six are assigned to the relatively unimportant posts of Abyssinia, Brazil, Cuba, Haiti, Roumania and Uruguay.

Moreover, of the forty secretaries of embassies or legations, all except two are noblemen. The directing spirits of the foreign office, the six councillors, are all noblemen except one, and the lower officials are in a great majority of cases noblemen.

LEPERS SLAIN BY CHINESE

Pit Is Dug and Filled With Kerosene-Soaked Wood, Upon Which Unfortunates Are Burned.

Shanghai.—Letters from the Catholic mission at Nanning (Kwangsi province), details of the barbarous massacre of thirty-nine lepers by order of the provincial authorities. It appears that for some years past lepers have been living in a wood a few miles outside the city, and in view of their pitiable condition the Catholic fathers sought permission to build a lazar house at their own expense.

The authorities first gave a blank refusal, but subsequently pretended to consent.

Meanwhile they caused a pit to be dug in the parade ground and the bottom was filled with wood soaked in kerosene. Into this pit the lepers were suddenly driven at the point of bayonets and shot and burned in the presence of large crowds.

Rewards were offered for the discovery of more lepers, and another has since been shot.

The Tutuh (governor) has issued a proclamation accusing the lepers of outrages, for which the writers of the letters say there was no foundation. The authorities, the letters add, are glorying in the deed.

THIEF LEAVES FAKE WHISKY

Burglar Breaks Glass in Saloon to Get Colored Water and Throws Loot Away.

St. Louis.—The crash of breaking glass attracted patrolmen to the saloon of Charles Crosick early in the morning. A plate glass in front of the place had been broken. But there was no sign of a burglar.

The police found a bottle in the hallway. It was a quart bottle such as is used to contain wrisky. The cork was out and lay nearby. Part of the contents had been spilled. The rest reflected a nice, ruddy glow. Taking it to the saloon, the police asked Crosick if it was his.

"Yep; that's all the fellow took, too," was the reply. "It's colored water."

The police imagined the look of disgust on the face of the burglar when he sampled the whisky.

Then it came again, still low but with an insistence which drew his brows together and made his hand fall from the wire he had been unconsciously holding through the mental debate which was absorbing him. Still he made no response, and the knocking continued. Should he ignore it entirely start up his motor and render himself oblivious to all other sounds? At every other point in his career he would have done this, but an unknown, and as yet unnamed, something had entered his heart during this fatal month, which made old ways impossible and oblivion a thing he dared not court too recklessly. Should this be a summons from Doris! Should (inconceivable idea, yet it seized upon him relentlessly and would not yield for the asking) should it be Doris herself!

Taking advantage of a momentary cessation of the ceaseless tap tap, he listened. Silence was never profounder than in this forest on that windless night. Earth and air seemed, to his strained ear, emptied of all sound. The clatter of his own steady, un-hastened heart-beat was all that broke upon the stillness. He might be alone in the Universe for all token of life beyond these walls, or so he was saying to himself, when sharp, quick, sinister, the knocking recommenced, demanding admission, insisting upon attention, drawing him against his own will to his feet, and finally, though he made more than one stand against it, to the very door.

"Who's there?" he asked, imperiously and with some show of anger.

No answer, but another quiet knock.

"Speak! or go away from my door. No one has the right to intrude here. What is your name and business?"

With an outburst of wrath, which made the hangar ring, Orlando lifted his fist to answer this appeal in his own fierce fashion from his own side of the door, but the impulse paused at fulfillment, and he let his arm fall again in a rush of self-hatred which it would have pained his worst enemy, even little Doris, to witness. As it reached his side, the knock came again.

It was too much. With an oath, Orlando reached for his key. But before fitting it into the lock, he cast a look behind him. The car was in plain sight, filling the central space from floor to roof. A single glance from a stranger's eye, and its principal secret would be a secret no longer. He must not run such a risk. Before he answered this call, he must drop the curtain he had rigged up against such emergencies as these. He had but to pull a cord and a veil would fall before his treasure, concealing it as effectually as an Eastern bride is concealed behind her yashmak.

Stepping to the will, he drew that cord, then with an impatient sigh, turned to the door.

Another quiet but insistent knock greeted him.

In no fury now, but with a vague sense of portent which gave an aspect of farewell to the one quick glance he cast about the well-known spot, he fitted the key in the lock, and stood ready to turn it.

"I ask you again your name and business," he shouted out in loud command. "Tell them or—" He meant to say, "or I do not turn this key." But something withheld the threat. He knew that it would perish in the utterance; that he could not carry it out. He would have to open the door now, response or no response. "Speak!" was the word with which he finished his demand.

The door remained unopened.

Stepping slowly back, he stared at its unpainted boards for a moment, then he spoke up quietly, almost courteously:

"Enter."

But the command passed unheeded; the latch was not raised, and only the slightest tap was heard.

With a bound he reached forward and pulled the door open. Then a great silence fell upon him and a rigidity as of the grave seized and stiffened his powerful frame.

The man confronting him from the darkness was Sweetwater.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

The Man Within and the Man Without.

An instant of silence, during which the two men eyed each other; then, Sweetwater, with an ironical smile directed towards the pistol, lightly remarked:

"Mr. Challoner and other men at the hotel are acquainted with my purpose and await my return. I have come—' here he cast a glowing look at the huge curtain cutting off the greater portion of the illy-lit interior—"to offer you my services, Mr. Brotherson. I have no other motive for this intrusion than to be of use. I am deeply interested in your invention, to the development of which I have already lent some aid, and can bring to the test you purpose a sympathetic help which you could hardly find in any other person living."

The silence which settled down at the completion of these words had a weight which made that of the previous moment seem light and all athrob with sound. The man within had not yet caught his breath; the man without held his, in an anxiety which had little to do with the direction of the weapon, into which he looked. Then an owl hooted far away in the forest, and Orlando, slowly lowering his arm, asked in an oddly constrained tone:

"How long have you been in town?"

The answer cut clean through any lingering hope he may have had.

"Ever since the day your brother was told the story of his great misfortune."

"Ah! still at your old tricks! I thought you had quit that business as unprofitable."

"I don't know. I never expect quick returns. He who holds on for a rise sometimes reaps unlooked-for profits."

The arm and fist of Orlando Brotherson ached to hurl this fellow back into the heart of the midnight woods.

But they remained quiescent and he spoke instead:

"I have buried the business. You will never resuscitate it through me."

Sweetwater smiled. There was no mirth in his smile though there was lightness in his tone as he said:

"Then let us go back to the matter in hand. You need a helper; where are you going to find one if you don't take me?"

A growl from Brotherson's set lips. Never had he looked more dangerous than in the one burning instant following this daring repetition of the detective's outrageous request. But as he noted how slight was the figure opposing him from the other side of the threshold, he was swayed by his natural admiration of pluck in the physically weak, and lost his threatening attitude, only to assume one which Sweetwater secretly found it even harder to meet.

"You are a fool," was the stinging remark he heard flung at him. "Do you want to play the police-officer here and arrest me in mid air?"

"Mr. Brotherson, you understand me as little as I am supposed to understand you. Humble as my place is in society and, I may add, in the department whose interests I serve, there are in me two men. One you know passably well—the detective whose methods, only indifferently clever, show that he has very much to learn. Of the other—the workman acquainted with hammer and saw, but with some knowledge too of higher mathematics and the principles upon which great mechanical inventions depend, you know little, and must imagine much. I was playing the gawky when I helped you in the old house in Brooklyn. I was interested in your airship—Oh I recognized it for what it was, notwithstanding its oddity and lack of ostensible means for flying—but I was not caught in the whirl of its idea; the idea by which you doubtless expect, and with very good reason too, to revolutionize the science of aviation. But since then I've been thinking it over, and am so filled with your own hopes that either I must have a hand in the finishing and sailing of the one you have yourself constructed, or go to work myself on the hints you have unconsciously given me, and make a car of my own."

Audacity often succeeds where subtler means fail. Orlando, with a curious twist of his strong lip, took hold of the detective's arm and drew him in, shutting and locking the door carefully behind him.

"Now," said he, "you tell me what you think you have discovered, to make any ideas of your own availa-in the manufacture of a superior self-propelling airship."

Sweetwater, who had been so vio-

"How's That for a Start?"

lently wheeled about in entering that he stood with his back to the curtain concealing the car, answered without hesitation:

"You have a device, entirely new so far as I can judge, by which this car can leap at once into space, hold its own in any direction, and alight again upon any given spot without shock to the machine or danger to the people controlling it."

"Explain the device."

"I will draw it."

"You can?"

"As I see it."

"As you see it!"

"Yes. It's a brilliant idea; I could never have conceived it."

"You believe—"

"I know."

"Sit here. Let's see what you know."

Sweetwater sat down at the table the other pointed out, and drawing forward a piece of paper, took up a pencil with an easy air. Brotherson approached and stood at his shoulder. He had taken up his pistol again, why he hardly knew, and as Sweetwater began his marks, his fingers tightened on its butt till they turned white in the murky lamplight.

"You see," came in easy tones from the stooping draughtsman, "I have an imagination which only needs a slight fillip from a mind like yours to send it in the desired direction. I shall not draw an exact reproduction of your idea, but I think you will see that I understand it very well. How's that for a start?"

Brotherson looked and hastily drew back. He did not want the other to note his surprise.

"But that is a portion you never saw," he loudly declared.

"No, but I saw this," returned Sweetwater, working busily on some curves; "and these gave me the fillip I mentioned. The rest came easily."

Brotherson, in dread of his own anger, threw his pistol to the other end of the shed:

"You knave! You thief!" he furiously cried.

"How so?" asked Sweetwater smilingly, rising and looking him calmly in the face. "A thief is one who appropriates another man's goods, or, let us say, another man's ideas. I have appropriated nothing—yet. I've only shown you how easily I could do so. Mr. Brotherson, take me in as your assistant. I will be faithful to you, I swear it. I want to see that machine go up."

"For how many people have you drawn those lines?" thundered the inexorable voice.

"For nobody; not for myself even. This is the first time they have left their hiding-place in my brain."

"Can you swear to that?"

"I can and will, if you require it. But you ought to believe my word, sir. I am square as a die in all matters not connected—well, not connected with my profession," he smiled in a burst of that whimsical humor, which not even the seriousness of the moment could quite suppress.

"And what surety have I that you do not consider this very matter of mine as coming within the bounds you speak of?"

"None. But you must trust me that far."

Brotherson surveyed him with an irony which conveyed a very different message to the detective than any he had intended. Then quickly:

"To how many have you spoken, dilating upon this device, and publishing abroad my secret?"

"I have spoken to no one, not even to Mr. Gryce. That shows my honesty as nothing else can."

"You have kept my secret intact?"

"Entirely so, sir."

"So that no one, here or elsewhere, shares our knowledge of the new points in this mechanism?"

"I say so, sir."

"Then if I should kill you," came in ferocious accents, "now—here—"

"You would be the only one to own that knowledge. But you won't kill me."

"Why?"

"Need I go into reasons?"

"Why? I say."

"Because your conscience is already too heavily laden to bear the burden of another unprovoked crime."

Brotherson, staring back, glared with open ferocity upon the man who dared to face him with such an accusation.

POSTAL CLERKS ON THE ALLEYS

Woburn and Winchester Teams in a Tryout for Championship

The Post Office clerks of Woburn and Winchester met in a friendly bowling match on Flanders' alleys last evening to settle the question as to which team is the champion. The teams broke even, each getting two of the four points. But the two points secured by the Woburn clerks were won by two individual strings, while one of the two points which the Winchester clerks captured was the total, for their 3 strings. Some claim that the total does not constitute a regular point, so in that light, the Woburn boys were the winners. Probably a return match will be rolled at Flanders' in the near future. The high three string total and high single of the match was held by Hogan of the Winchester clerks.

TIGERS LOSE TO CUB BOWLERS

Cans and M's Break Even in K. of C. Bowling Games

The Cubs took three out of four points from the Tigers, while the Cans and M's were breaking even in the K. of C. bowling games rolled last evening. The Cubs won the first string by a wide margin, and it looked like easy picking, but the Tigers were far from beaten, and took the second by 25 pins. The third string was a corker for excitement, the Cubs finishing in front with a five pin lead. Henry Looney had high string and total, 106 and 281.

The Cans won two out of the three strings bowled in their match with the M's, but the latter team won the second string by 56 pins, enough to give them the point for total pinfall by 12.

Honors were evenly divided for the evening's sport, but when the teams meet again the Can bowlers predict that they will trim their chesty rivals in a manner that will settle the question of superiority beyond all possibility of dispute. Macone rolled a single of 103, and a total of 270, and was high man. The scores:

McGarry-Cogan Trim Lynch and Byron

Second Game in Montvale Pool Tournament is one Sided but Well Played

The second game of the pool tournament between members of Div. 18, A.O.H. Montvale was played last evening with Thomas McGarry and Thomas Cogan on one side, and John Jynch and John Byron on the other.

The Toms were too much for the Johns, and won by a score of 100 to 64. It was a somewhat one-sided match, but at times the shooting was very good.

Up to the end of the sixth frame the teams played evenly, neither having any decided advantage. McGarry and Cogan were maintaining a slight lead all the while, but not enough to warrant any suspicion that they had anything like a sure thing. After the sixth frame they gradually opened up a breach in the score that finally landed them under the wire, winners in easy fashion.

The first frame was opened by Lynch who played the balls safe, and after each player had lost chances to make good runs he cleaned the table. Score McGarry-Cogan, 8; Lynch-Byron, 7.

Cogan shone in the second string and when the smoke of battle cleared he and his teammate had 19 to 11 for their opponents.

Byron was the star in the third frame, and at the finish the McGarry-Cogan combination had 25 while Lynch-Byron had 20.

The fourth frame was perhaps the most interesting of the match, all the players making difficult and brilliant shots, and Lynch and Byron reduced the lead of their competitors to two, 31 to 29. A beautiful cut shot for the side pocket by McGarry brought a round of applause in the next frame, and in the frame following Byron and Cogan for their respective teams aroused hearty demonstrations of approval from the crowd of onlookers by some nifty shooting. The score was now 48 to 42 in favor of McGarry and Cogan, but it was anybody's game. The next frame, however, was the beginning of the end, McGarry and Cogan scoring 11 balls and taking a 16 ball lead. Lynch who at one time was reckoned a pool player, second to none in the city, showed by a series of shots which netted him six balls, a flash of his old time form, but the opposing team was playing steadily and captured the big end of the frame.

The run of six by Lynch, which was a pretty exhibition of pool playing was the last desperate stand of the losing team, and flushed with the almost positive assurance of victory McGarry and Cogan played almost unbeatable pool up to the very last frame when Cogan pocketed the coveted ball and made the total 100 for his team. Tonight John Mulrenan first and Edward Byron will mix things with Frank Queenan and Martin Hooper, and some swell pool shooting is predicted. Last night's score:

McGarry Cogan Frames	Balls	Tot	Lynch Byron Frames	Balls	Tot
1	8	8	1	7	7
2	11	19	2	4	11
3	6	25	3	9	20
4	4	29	4	11	31
5	10	39	5	5	36
6	9	48	6	6	42
7	11	59	7	4	46
8	8	67	8	7	53

SOCIAL WORKERS MISSIONARY MEETING

Address by Mrs. Googins at Montvale Chapel Yesterday

At the missionary meeting of the social workers of the Montvale Congregational church yesterday, Mrs. Googins of Boston, gave a most interesting talk on "The Making of Americans." Mrs. Googins has had a splendid opportunity to know about the important work that is being done among the foreigners who have chosen America as their home, as she has had many years' experience in club work in Boston.

Her club consists of twenty-five girls, principally Jewish and Italian in the North End. In these clubs the girls are taught the American ways of doing things. for they are found to be pitifully in need of instruction in all the ordinary duties of home life. They learn to clean, sew, make beds, cook, trim hats, and best of all, these splendid women gain their confidence and have the opportunity of guiding them from temptations and difficulties that arise in their lives. They visit them in their homes and by constant love and kindness are able to suggest all kinds of improvement. Many of them would be glad to have cleaner surroundings but unfortunately the landlords of the tenements where they are obliged to live refuse to do anything to make them more habitable. Where the sanitary arrangements are found impossible, however, they are reported by the visitor and the landlords forced to make improvements. To our shame be it spoken most of these landlords are Americans, many of them well-to-do.

Mrs. Googins also spoke of the fresh air work, and said there was no more important work done than giving these poor women and children vacations in the country. Many of them have never seen vegetables except in grocer's stalls, and have no conception as to how things grow. The simplest thing in nature seems to them magical, and they ask very funny questions sometimes. A few simple wild flowers are marvellous to them, and a little plant will be treasured as long as there in any green left on it.

One of the important results of the work is that girls who would otherwise have taken some cheap position with no future in it just as soon as they are fourteen are encouraged to go to school as long as possible, and to attend night school, so that they are enabled to fit themselves for good positions in which they may progress.

Much of this work is done by volunteers and there is always work waiting for any who are interested. What has already been accomplished, though vital and important, is only the beginning of what ought to be done and can be done, if only people who have the welfare of future America at heart will give their time and their talents to it.

INVESTIGATES HOSE THREE CONDITIONS

Madden and Company Members Before Fire Committee

The aldermanic fire committee was in session until 11 o'clock last evening hearing evidence from members of the fire department, and from Lieutenant Edward J. Madden resently removed from the service, relative to conditions existing at hose company three of Cummingsville.

The meeting was held behind closed doors, Alderman Naven, who is chairman of the committee, announcing that nobody, not even representatives of the press would be admitted.

Chief Engineer Tracy, Captain James McGovern, ex-Lieutenant Edward J. Madden, and other members of hose three testified.

James McMorrow, a member of the company was called into the committee room but refused to testify saying that he had been so advised by counsel. Today it was difficult to glean much information as to the nature of the evidence, but it was stated on reliable authority that the committee had heard enough to warrant the belief that conditions in hose three are far from what they should be, there seeming to be an utter lack of discipline. It was voted to postpone a recommendation to the city council for two weeks.

Judge Declares Chicago is Worst City for Divorce Frauds.

Asserts Decrees Now Granted Would Not Be Asked if Proper Restrictions Were Placed About Marriage and Divorce.

Chicago.—"Chicago is the worst city in the world for fraud and collusion in obtaining divorces. In a single year our lax divorce laws result in the wrecking of 3,000 homes and in the orphaning of 4,000 children in Cook county alone. Fifty per cent. of the divorces now granted would not even be asked for if proper restrictions were placed about marriage and divorce."

These statements, made by Judge Marcus Kavanagh, speaking from experience gained in personal hearing of 1,000 divorce cases, made a profound impression upon the other members of the Illinois commission on marriage and divorce. The commission was considering three tentative bills, one of which it is proposed to select and offer to the legislature for the purpose of ameliorating the evil. Prof. Ernst Freund of the University of Chicago urged the commission to adopt a bill on the general lines of the one drawn by the conference on uniform laws.

The discussion was not one-sided. Senator Juul was not sure that there was anything wrong with the present laws.

"No one has pointed out the fault specifically," he said. "I want to know what the real trouble is. Of course, I will support any truly progressive bill. But I do not see how the state will benefit by making two persons live together whose married life has been a failure. The chancellor, I should think, ought to be able to look into an unhappy marriage relation and say: 'This is hell on earth, and I will sever these bonds.'"

The measures proposed by Professor Freund provide: Marriages of persons coming into or going out of the state to evade Illinois statutes shall be void; affidavits shall give full information regarding the parties, and fifteen days shall elapse between application for a license and its issuance; the state's attorney's office shall be a party to divorce proceedings.

Senator Juul objected to the fifteen-day clause, saying it would "enable busy-bodies to thrust their noses into affairs in which they have no business."

But nearly all of the comment was in favor of more stringent laws.

"Persons should be compelled to think before rushing into marriage," said Representative Michael L. Igoe. "Chicago is the worst city in the United States for fraud in obtaining divorces."

"It's the worst in the world," corrected Judge Kavanagh.

"I know that is true," interjected Senator John E. Madigan. "My own observation has been that at least 50 per cent. of the divorces in this county are fraudulent."

Charles N. Goodnow urged that health certificates should be required.

"Divorce is a symptom, not a remedy," he said.

GRANGE HAD BASKET PARTY

Unique and Pleasing Feature of Last Night's Meeting

At the close of the business meeting of Woburn grange last evening, the lights were lowered and a procession of ghostly apparitions filed into the hall. These ladies, disguised in sheets and pillow cases, each bearing a gaily decorated box or basket containing a dainty lunch for two, which were auctioned off to the highest bidder by Worthy Master Higgins, assisted by Worthy Stewards Doherty and Gustin. The ladies remained incognito until the lunches had all been purchased and they were seated with their partners, the purchasers, at the lunch tables. It was a jolly and pleasing feature and proved a great success.

Among the visitors present and participating in the enjoyment of the evening, were Past Master Newhall of Saugus Grange with a party of grangers from Saugus, and Past Master Marston of Everett Grange.

At the next meeting of the grange a class of more than 50 candidates will be initiated.

"Strange as it may seem to you," said Mrs. Lapsling, with pardonable pride, "I was a good speller when I was a little girl and went to school. Once I spelled the whole school down, and for one time in my life, anyway, I was the dinosaur of all eyes."

NEW THOUGHT MEETING YESTERDAY

Miss Alice Strong Speaks on Spiritual Side of New Thought

The New Thought Progressive league met with Mrs. H. C. Huntress, 60 Warren avenue, yesterday afternoon. Miss Alice Strong was the speaker of the day, and talked from her eighteen years' experience, on the spiritual side of New Thought.

She, like many others, objects to the term New Thought, as every one of its teachings are taken from the Scriptures. No other term seems to express just what we want, however, so New Thought stands and really expresses itself, "a new thought on an old subject."

Miss Strong led the silence and asked the people to come into harmony with their old spirits, taking as their watchword, "God is spirit." "They that worship Him must worship in spitir and in truth."

Miss Strong said that New Thought is practical Christianity as it has to be made practical by its application moment by moment in our daily lives. Our bodies are truth temples and are intended to express perfect life. Perfect life is perfect health of both mind and body. The brain takes impressions before the body gives expression. Big thoughts are to open the door of life, health, truth, love, harmony and strength. We are expressions of God, thoughts of God. We exist in and from the Creator and are entirely dependent upon Him. God is working through us and our openly reaching out to Him for help, makes the co-operation that heals. Begin each day by saying "I am God's child and He is leading me through each moment of this day." Then rest in the quiet of the spirit.

AN IMPORTANT DUTY

One of the important duties devolving upon the city council is the choice of assistant chief engineer of the fire department. Under the charter this duty must be met during the month of March every other year. It is possible therefore, and more or less probable, that the question will be launched at the meeting of the council this evening.

At the present writing three candidates have entered the lists, and are seeking the support of council members. The trio comprises: John F. Kenney the present incumbent, William G. Stretton, a member of the hook and ladder company and Lieutenant Amos Langill of the same company. Engineer Kenney is the senior of the three in point of service, having nearly 40 years of active fire work to his credit. The other two are veterans as well, and have had valuable experience in fire fighting. So that the council need have no trouble in selecting a man for the succession because of the inexperience of candidates.

Two years ago when Engineer Kenney was the successful candidate the only important objection raised against him was the fact of his residence in Montvale, an outlying section of the city, and, because of that fact, not as readily available when a fire claimed his presence. That objection, however, was overruled and he was elected. In some quarters, the argument of two years ago is again being urged, but no word against his ability, character, or general acquaintance with the duties of the office is being spoken.

One thing is certain, as the JOURNAL pointed out several days ago, in this contest party lines will be broken. Engineer Kenney, nominally the democratic candidate, is not expected to command the full party strength, and there are strongly defined rumors that he may receive one or more republican votes. The other candidates are republicans in party designation and affiliation, but neither of them, separately or combined, can claim the votes of the seven republican members of the council, and both of them are figuring on democratic support in case of a prolonged struggle. It has been hinted by some who claim to know that the early ballots may show the fifteen members equally divided among the three aspirants.

But, the council should not lose sight of the importance of the position to be filled. That overshadows all claims of personal friendship, location or party. The safety of life and the preservation of property is in the hands of the fire department. It is a sacred trust, not to be trifled with. The department, when it becomes an auxiliary of the politician, takes its first step towards inefficiency and demoralization.

The chief engineer is an autocrat when the alarm sounds, as he ought to be. He is liable in the performance of duty to be incapacitated by injury. Then the burden of responsibility falls upon the shoulders of the assistant chief. He should be a man capable of assuming full charge, intelligently and promptly when the emergency of illness or accident robs the department of the services of its chief.

In this regard, gentlemen of the council, you must see the importance attaching to the duty imposed upon you by the provisions of the charter. The people have the right to demand of you, action based on the serious nature of the duty, and will not be pleased if you play politics instead.

LOCAL CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNION ORGANIZED

On Sunday, February 16, the president and two delegates, representing the Christian Endeavor societies of the North Congregational, the First Baptist, and the First Congregational churches of Woburn met in the Baptist church and desided to form a union of the Christian Endeavor societies, to be known as "The Woburn Local Christian Endeavor Union."

The object is to stimulate an interest in the several societies in Woburn and its vicinity, increase their number, and the mutual inacquaintance of the members, and make them more useful in the service of God.

A constitution was drawn up and adopted, and a nominating committee appointed, and at tne second meeting of the congress on March 2, the following names were submitted and elected as the officers for the ensuing year: president, Arthur J. Moore; vice president, Clinton B. Tillinghast; sesretary and treasurer, Samuel J. Woods; lookout committee, Ethel E. Jewett, Lena G. French, Marjory Blake; social committee, Mabel P. Williams, Everett Thompson, Roy A. Howatt.

In order to begin the work at once and promote sociability among the young people of the community, it was decided to hold a social in the First Congregational church on Friday evening, March 14, to which all the young people of the Burlington church, the Montvale chapel, and the two Swedish churches are most cordially invited.

OLD FASHIONED MISSIONARY CONCERT

The members of the Baptist Sunday school provided the program last evening for the regular midweek church service. Agreeably to an old custom in the Baptist denomination these "concerts" do not mean a musical entertainment, but refer more particularly to the word when used to indicate a conference. The program last evening included, a resume of the life and character of David Livingstone by Rev. H. B. Williams D. D. a dialogue by Mrs. Hattie Northrup and Norman Northrup showing the child population of the world, which totals 250 millions, readings from the Missionary magazine by Superintendent G. W. West and pupils, recitations of scripture, by Miss Elsie Wood's class, chorus singing, and the story of "The Lord's Day Around the World" with map illustration by Mrs. H. B. Williams. The Baptist Publication society was the beneficiary of the meeting's offering.

AN ENTERPRISING FIRM

It is in the hour of calamity that character is demonstrated. An instance is found in the promptness which Gavin & Lydon, whose stock was rendered worthless by the Central house fire yesterday morning, have displayed in securing a location for the continuance of their business. Inside of 12 hours the firm had secured its former quarters at the corner of Main street and Mann's court, filled it with a fresh stock of clean high grade groceries, and announce themselves ready for business. It is cheering to find a firm that refuses to be cast down when disaster overtakes it. The firm's published card in another column tells its own story of pluck and energy.

Harry J. Paine, in a well-balance and original advertisement in this issue announces an opening of Spring Styles in suitings, that is worthy of perusal and thought. Harry is very wideawake, and his "ads" are always bright and seasonable.

SONS OF VETERANS IN TWO DRAMATICS

Double Attractive Bill to be Staged March 18, by Local Camp

The Sons of Veterans, Charles Bowers Winn Camp 66 are to present two one-act farces, entitled, "That Rascal Pat" and "Rubber Boots," in their hall on Tuesday evening March 18. Much time has been spent in rehearsing and an able cast has been selected for each play. A stage has been erected in the hall and all members of the society are exerting themselves to make the outcome a success, dramatically and financially.

The cast for "That Rascal Pat" is as follows: Pat Noggerty, a handy servant, Alfred E. Elson; Major Puffjacket, on half pay, Daniel Towse; Charles Livingstone, poor but ambitious, Homer Gates; Laura, niece to Puffjacket and in love with Charles, Mrs. Cora Gates; Nancy, her maid, in love with Pat, Mrs. Ida Dexter.

The play hinges upon the good-natured stupidity of "Pat McNoggerty" who tries to serve two masters at one and the same time, and in his dilemma complicates matters for both, so that a duel is imminent, and two broken hearts in prospect. The final catastrophe is averted of course. Cupid gets in his accustomed work, the lovers are happy, the crusty uncle blesses them all and "That Rascal Pat" wears a halo. Sixty laughs to the minute guaranteed.

The play "Rubber Boots" is a short skit, the cast consisting of three young ladies and a tramp. The adventures of the young ladies with a tramp in the absence of their parents are amusing and ludicrous, but come to a happy ending. The cast:

Pauline, Mrs. Cora Gates; Lou, Sadie Page; Sophie, Bessie Boutwell. A tramp, for and by whom there is nothing to be said, George Wyer.

Both plays are extremely amusing and full of lively situations and will prove great attractions to all attending. Club members and cast have the tickets for sale. Following the play, dancing will be enjoyed in Mechanic's hall to music furnished by the Apollo orchestra.

NOTED GUN FIGHTER

Adjutant General Canton Was Once a Texas Ranger.

Governor Cruce Always Commissions National Guard Officer to Supervise Prize Fights—Was in the Famous Cattle War.

Guthrie, Okla.—To enforce the provisions of the Oklahoma prize fight law and to see, particularly, that no blood is shed, Governor Lee Cruce always commissions Adjutant General Frank Canton, Oklahoma National Guard, to attend the fights in person and report to him officially just what occurred. Canton has acted in this capacity, as the eyes of the governor, at every fight of any consequence that has been pulled off in the state during the last two years. Such a course was adopted by the governor following his now famous ultimatum, issued during 1910, that forbade the Carl Morris-Jim Flynn fight being held in Oklahoma.

Especially commissioned by the governor, Canton attended the Abbott-Smith fight at McAlester, the Shaughnessey-Roman fight in Tulsa, the Ferns-Magirl bout at Dewey, the Morris-Comiskey meet at Sapulpa, and several others.

A native of Virginia—born within a few miles of Richmond—and a Texan by adoption, with varied experiences covering two continents, a Texas ranger and a cow puncher in his youth, a real product of the real southwest is Canton, the man who officially attends all the fights in this state.

Canton left Virginia for Texas when he was fifteen. The call of the west was too strong for him, and he wanted to be a cow puncher. Within a year, however, he had become a Texas ranger, and served in that capacity for about four years. He was one of the party, in the early '70s, that guarded Satank, Big Tree and Satanta, the Kiowa and Comanche Indian chiefs following the Indian massacre in the Salt Creek valley. Satank was shot and killed while trying to escape from Canton's party; Satanta took his own life when he was given a life sentence, and Big Tree was ultimately pardoned and lives with the Oklahoma Kiowas today.

Canton tired of Texas in 1878 and went to Montana and Wyoming. It was there he gained notice as a relentless foe of the cattle rustler, and this fact obtained for him the election in 1881 of sheriff of Johnson county, then larger than any New England state.

After one year as sheriff, Canton was placed in charge of the criminal work of the Montana and Wyoming Cattle Raisers' association, with a commission as deputy United States marshal. He participated in what is known as the Wyoming cattle war, which resulted in disbanding and convicting an organized gang of thieves and the dispatch of the members to the penitentiary. In this war Canton and a few cattle men ley in trenches near a Johnson county ranch for three days and fought a force of 200 men which had collected to resist any interference with their depredations.

Canton went to Alaska in 1897 with a deputy's commission in charge of the United States marshal's office at Circle City, on the Yukon river and north of the arctic circle.

After two years in the cold region Canton joined, as chief packer with two pack trains, the Ninth United States cavalry, outfitted and expedited for the campaign in China. He was present at the relief of both Peking and Tientsin.

Returning to the United States Canton located in the Osage Indian country, in northern Oklahoma, as a detective for the Texas Cattlemen's association and with a deputy marshal's commission. It was there that Gov. C. N. Haskell, Oklahoma's first state governor, found him in 1907 and commissioned him adjutant general. He was retained in office by Gov. Lee Cruce, who succeeded Haskell.

SICK CHILD CAN'T BE FOUND

Girl Is Taken to Hospital—Nurses Lose Trace of Her—Another Is Given Father.

Philadelphia.—The authorities at the municipal hospital for contagious diseases are trying to learn the identity of the three-year-old girl they supposed was Beatrice Kaufman and at the same time discover what has become of the real Beatrice, who was admitted to the institution six weeks ago, suffering from scarlet fever.

Beatrice's father, Isador Kaufman, a rain-coat manufacturer, received reports from the hospital every day, telling him the little girl was recovering.

He was notified to come and take her home. Hastening to the institution, Kaufman was surprised and shocked when a child he did not recognize was turned over to him. "That is not my Beatrice!" he exclaimed.

"Oh, yes, it is. She has changed in appearance because of her illness," declared the hospital attendants.

Unconvinced, but hoping he was mistaken, Kaufman took the child to his home, so that his wife might decide. Mrs. Kaufman also declared the child was not her Beatrice, and the little girl, failing to note any familiar surroundings, burst into loud sobs for "mamma." She was taken back to the hospital, but the real Beatrice could not be found.

OLD FIGHTER DIES

Sergeant Rogan Had Won Medals for His Bravery.

His Rescue of His Captain in an Action Against the Nez Perces at the Big Hole Basin a Notable Feat.

Rock Springs, Wyo.—First Sergeant Patrick Rogan, retired, one of the two noncommissioned officers of the Seventh infantry who received medals of honor for gallantry in action against the Nez Perce Indians at the Big Hole, Montana, on August 9, 1877, died here recently. Sergeant Rogan had served for 30 years in Company A, Seventh infantry, before being retired, taking part in a number of engagements against the Indians in Montana, Wyoming and Dakota, but it was at the Big Hole, when Chief Joseph was trying to escape from General Howard, that Sergeant Rogan won his decoration, and incidentally saved the life of an officer, now a brigadier general on the retired list of the army.

The Seventh infantry had been stationed in Montana for seven years, protecting travelers and settlers from Cheyennes and Sioux, when, in July, 1877, word was received at Fort Missoula that a large party of hostile Nez Perce Indians, under Chief Joseph, were coming over Lo Lo trail in their efforts to escape from General Howard's troops.

On August 4 Col. John Gibbon, commanding the Seventh infantry, left Fort Missoula with Companies A, D, F, G, I and K in pursuit of the Indians, making 25 miles the first day. The following day a march of 30 miles was made, and, after following the Indians three or four days longer, they were discovered, on August 8, camped in the Big Hole basin. The main camp was pitched on the south bank of the river, in an open meadow, partially surrounded by dense thickets of willow.

At daylight an Indian rode out of the willows directly in front of Lieut. James H. Bradley's position, en route to the pony herd on the hillside. The Indian was instantly shot. The Indians were surprised, and rushed from their lodges panic-stricken. When they recovered from their surprise they opened fire upon the troops, with terrible effect. The troops were then formed into two lines, back to back, and the order was given to charge through the brush in opposite directions, for the purpose of driving out the Indians.

In this part of the action Lieut. Charles A. Coolidge, while gallantly leading his company, was shot through both thighs. The lieutenant's predicament was seen by Sergeant Rogan, who did not hesitate, but carried Lieutenant Coolidge to a place of safety. It was not for that brave deed that Sergeant Rogan was given the medal of honor. He received it for his gallantry in obeying orders, and verifying and reporting his company while subjected to a galling fire from the Indians.

Three officers and nineteen enlisted men were killed in that fight, the officers being Capt. William Logan and Lieutenants Bradley and William L. English. Colonel Gibbon and Lieut. Charles A. Woodruff, the latter a retired brigadier general, were wounded. Lieutenant Coolidge was wounded three times in that action, but recovered. His commission as captain was dated from the day of the fight, August 9, 1877, and 13 years later he received the brevet of major for his gallant service. He became colonel of the regiment in 1901, and is now on the retired list as a brigadier general, living in Detroit.

BEATEN DEER KILLS ITSELF

Suicide Refuge of Animal That Failed in a Fight With an Enemy in London Park.

London.—A desperate fight between two of the fallow deer in Bushey park ended in the suicide of the beaten animal.

The beaten stag was the aggressor. It provoked a fight by dashing into its rival during a run across the turf. A fierce fight with antlers followed, and after nearly half an hour's combat the challenged animal snapped off one of the horns of the aggressor. Apparently recognizing that it was beaten, the loser then ran away until it came to the heron pond, which is close by, and walked straight into the water until it got out beyond its depth. The animal seemed to push its head under and keep it there. An eye-witness said it looked for all the world as if it committed suicide.

When assistance arrived, the animal's antlers were found firmly imbedded in the mud. Its dead body was subsequently recovered with ropes. The victor was found to be alive, and afterward recovered. "I have no doubt that the animal sought death wilfully," said the keeper. "Deer do strange things when beaten in a fight, and seem to try to hide their shame at defeat."

CALLED RADIUM KING

Baltimore Surgeon Largest Owner of Metal.

Bit Half the Size of a Pea, Worth $23,000, Added to Johns Hopkins Medical School Treasury.

Baltimore, Md.—Guarding jealously a hand satchel tucked away in the remotest corner of which was $23,000 worth of radium, Dr. Charles F. Burnam, associate in gynecology at Johns Hopkins Medical school and assistant to Dr. Howard A. Kelly, swung off a train in Baltimore.

No wonder if Doctor Burnam wore a furtive look and kept his eyes on the satchel, for it was his duty to deliver over his precious burden to Doctor Kelly, for whom he had brought the radium from Vienna. To tell the truth, the mineral could hardly be called a burden in view of the fact that it is about the size of half a split pea. It could easily have been placed on the end of the blade of a pocketknife. If a footpad had attacked Doctor Burnam, he probably never would have realized what a haul he had made and would have undoubtedly left the mineral.

Still Doctor Burnam was omitting no precautions. From the time he left Hamburg on the steamship Amerika, until the vessel landed in New York, the radium was stored away in the safe of the ship. Then the physician transferred the mineral to his satchel and kept that satchel by his side.

The bringing of the radium to Doctor Kelly means that the physician now possesses the largest amount of the mineral of any individual in the world. He had already about $27,000 worth of the precious stuff. His possessions in this respect mount up to the half-century mark in thousands. The London Radium institute has about $75,000 worth of radium. This is supposed to be the greatest amount owned outside of Austria, which may be called the birthplace of the mineral.

While Doctor Kelly's wealth in this respect will be apparently infinitesimal so far as bulk is concerned, it will last him a lifetime and will doubtless be doing duty for his followers in the medical profession thousands of years distant. The real merit of radium consists in the utilization of its rays. The use of these rays occasions no diminution of the mineral itself. Up to a short time ago the mineral was used almost exclusively in the treatment of cancer and kindred diseases. In fact, it was confined almost solely in its use to surgical cases.

Recently the emanations from the mineral were availed of in the treatment of chronic rheumatism, neuralgia, facial paralysis and many diseases of the joints. So successful was it that the authorities of Johns Hopkins hospital announced a few days ago that the new method would be followed here by the establishment of an emanatorium at the hospital. In this department the patients will breathe the emanations of the radium. This is known as the inhalation method.

BETTER HOMES FOR THE POOR

Corporation Capitalized at $500,000 Launched in Los Angeles to Erect Homes for Workers.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Based upon the theory of "business philanthropy," a corporation capitalized at $500,000, and managed by leading bankers and charity workers, has been launched here to build concrete houses for the poor and remove the shacks and courts that now thickly dot the slums.

According to the plan adopted by the corporation, land available in the so-called slum districts of the city will be used, and the shacks which now harbor numerous poor families will be replaced by sunny, four-room houses of concrete constructed according to plans suggested by Thomas A Edison. The houses will have all modern conveniences, including baths, the promoters of the plan being convinced that the tubs will be used for bathing instead of containing coal or potatoes or cradling the babies while the mothers go out to work.

These houses will be rented or sold on terms to suit the means of the families that will occupy them.

The corporation is managed by thirty-three trustees, among whom are Rev. Dana W. Bartlett, head of Bethlehem institute, and officers of women's clubs which have been promoting the movement for a number of years.

BOY BORN WITH THREE TEETH

Grandfather Writes Check for $3,000 as Natal Gift to Youngster in Chicago.

Chicago.—A boy, with three teeth, was born in the home of William Quigley, Jr., president of the Carpenters' union, 3229 Colorado avenue. On viewing the ivory giggle of the infant, his grandfather, William Quigley, Sr., who is a commission merchant at 76 South Water street, made out a check to the baby's father for $3,000, saying that it was a present for the child at the rate of $1,000 per tooth. The next gift was a motor car, and came from Louis Michelson, a real estate man, who is the uncle of the happy father, and lives at Western avenue and Harrison street.

MRS. LONGWORTH IS MILLINER

Washington Society Holds Show and Mrs. Taft Buys Three Hats.

Washington.—Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, Miss Alys Meyer and Viscountess D'Azy were voted the expert society milliners of Washington recently, after their beautifully trimmed hats were exhibited and sold for fancy prices to the smart set at the hat show of the Children's Country home.

Mrs. Longworth contributed a small Alice blue toque of velvet which she had trimmed. It was of the same modish effect that makes her own hats so famous.

Miss Alys Meyer had a picture hat on exhibition that the girls all voted "a dream."

But the picture hats trimmed by Viscountess D'Azy surpass the most Frenchy creation of the shops. In addition to making these hats, Viscount-esss D'Azy was on hand to try them on her customers, and saw that each purchaser had the proper Parisian tilt to her bonnet.

Mrs. Nicholas Longworth.

Mrs. Taft purchased three hats, one for herself and two for Miss Helen Taft. Among the others who donated favorite chapeaux were Mrs. Robert Roosevelt, Mrs. Edward McCauley, Mrs. Murray A. Cobb, Miss Gladys Hinckley and Mrs. Spencer Cosby.

HASN'T SLEPT IN 20 YEARS

Scientists to Study the Case of a Harvard Professor—Relaxed, But Was Conscious.

Boston.—A Harvard professor, who has not slept in twenty years, but has taken his rest in the "twilight state," is the subject of investigations by the psychological laboratory of the university and the state psychopathic hospital.

The "twilight state," in which the subject retains consciousness of all all that goes on about him, is declared to be a scientific relaxation more satisfying than sleep and restoring the bodily vigor in about half the time required by sleep.

While the identity of the Harvard professor is kept secret, Prof. Hugo Munsterberg, director of the psychological laboratory at Harvard, who is a close personal friend of the sleepless educator, has made a close study of his case. Professor Munsterberg said his experience showed that it is scientifically possible to sleep without a complete unconsciousness.

To assist in the experiment at the state psychopathic hospital on the "twilight state," a special easy chair has been constructed. It is described as a device to aid subjects to relax "as completely as a gallon of molasses on a slab of cold marble."

THROWS BABY FROM WINDOW

Crazed Mother in Chicago Hurls Infant to Pavement, Killing It.

Chicago.—A newly born babe was thrown through a bedroom window to a pavement three stories below by Margaret Dobson, its nineteen-year-old mother. It had been brought into the world without the assistance of a physician in the rooming house of Aaron Widner, at 1914 Indiana avenue. Dr. H. Dennison Cook of 2139 South Wabash avenue, called by a pedestrian, found the child dead. He attended the mother, who he declared was probably insane at the time she killed her child.

SEWER PIPE HOTEL

Starving Youth Led "Home" by Another Waif in Paris.

Boy Shares in Outcast's Fare—Stranger Able to Rescue Guide But Other Inmates Perish When Stove Upsets.

Paris.—Robert Epiphane was looking down at the river wondering. He was seventeen years old, and whenever the police arrested him his trade was entered on the books as "mattress-maker." Some years ago Robert had worked at mattress making. That is to say, he had a vague recollection of combing wool for an old woman who made over mattresses outside house doors and who gave Robert something to eat when he refused to do any more work on an empty stomach.

But that was a long time ago. Robert Epiphane was not quite sure how long ago it was, because he had been hungry for a long time. He had slept on a bench on the boulevards the night before.

Then the miracle happened. Robert Epiphane was looking at the water and wondering. And as he looked at the water a little boat drifted by—an absurd little boat made of an old cigar box, a bit of lead pencil and string. Robert Epiphane looked at it lazily. Then he shouted aloud.

He had seen a penny piece—two whole sous!—in the cigar box. Robert Epiphane never knew how he got down to the water.

"Halves," said a voice, in a whisper, behind him. Robert Epiphane gave a whimper that was meant to be a howl of rage. Then, slipping the penny into his mouth (it was weak, but it was safer than in his pocket), he struck blindly at another ragamuffin, who caught him as he fell.

The other ragamuffin was standing over him as he sat on the muddy ground. "Well, old man," he whispered, in the hoarse, voiceless whisper in which he had said "Halves"—the voice which starvation and exposure gives to Paris wastrels—"Well, old man, and what about it?" "It's mine," said Robert Epiphane; "I can get a bit of sausage and bread for it." "Come with me," said the other.

They had not far to go. On the way the second scarecrow, whose name he told Robert was Maurice Faction, was spinning a fairy tale which amused Robert but which he did not believe. It was all about a forgotten sewer pipe—a beautiful big piece of piping furnished with sacking and a stove—a big pipe in a quiet corner where no police ever came where Maurice Faction and three other men, Jules, George and Henri had been living for a week.

Robert Epiphane did not believe the story, but it amused his muddled brain, and as long as that penny was safe in his hand he did not care. Then they came to the palace, and to his amazement he saw what Maurice Faction had told him was true.

Robert nearly pitched head first on the stove when his eyes had accustomed themselves to the dim light in the palace, for near it, on a newspaper, there was a banquet. The poor of Paris call it "arlequin." It is a mixture of scraps of cold food from the restaurants, and you get quite a lot for a half penny, for bones are salable commodities, and the "arlequin" men have a better use for the fat than to sell it for food. There must have been quite three-penny worth there on the newspaper. Robert made a dash for a handful and his penny rang clear on the pipe. The three men woke up.

"What's that? Money?" they said all together. Maurice Faction explained. "Robert was a little off his head with cold and hunger like the rest of us," he told them. He had tried to kill him when he wanted to go halves in the penny. He thought they might take Robert in and let him be a lodger for the night.

The very poor don't talk much to each other. The other men glanced at Robert, grunted and made room for him. Jules looked at him keenly, pocketed the penny and then went to sleep again, satisfied.

He was dreaming that the smoke was choking him when he woke up. Somebody had kicked the stove over. The other four were sound asleep and stupefied. The palace was a stifling prison. He fought with the wooden door for what seemed hours. Then at last he broke it open. For more hours, many more, or that was what it seemed, he tugged at the four bodies till he pulled them out. Two policemen found them. Georges and Henry were dead, and Jules would never steal paving blocks again. But "the lodger" and Maurice are in the Pitie hospital in real beds, with real white sheets, now, and they drink milk out of clean cups all day long.

GIRL, SIX, HELPS MAKE LAWS

Child Sits With Colorado Legislature and Tells Father How to Vote.

Denver, Colo.—Little Gwendolyn Ardouerdel, six years old, sits daily with her father, Representative A. P. Ardouerdel, and advises him how to vote on legislative measures. She is particularly interested in legislation to benefit children, and recently her father voted "yes" on two child protective measures upon her suggestion. She always cautions him to vote on the side of right.

LONE GIRL STRIKER

Sidelights on Walkout of Garment Workers Are Given.

Young Women Are Arrested by New York Policemen for Saying "Good-Bye" to Comrades Taken by Officers.

New York.—Fannie Socolick's little story would be worth as much attention if she were not so pretty. But there is no reason why the fact that she is pretty should be forgotten. She is slender and dark-haired, and her eyes are deep and brown; and if she had a $40 hat and a slender skirt she could hold her own on Peacock alley. She is the "lone striker" of a white goods factory uptown.

"Are you going to beat it away from there?" asked the shipping clerk, impatiently, the third day she spent on duty as picket in front of the factory. "Because the boss' goat is loose."

Fannie Socolick is very much in earnest. She tried to explain to the shipping clerk that she would stay on picket in front of that factory until 20,000 odd white goods workers of the city have won their strike. Her voice is soft and low, and she has an appealing way of putting her hand on one's coat sleeve and looking up at one. But the shipping clerk was impatient. He beckoned to the policeman.

"This is the one I was tellin' you about," said he. "Pinch her."

So Fannie Socolick, twenty years old, pretty and well behaved, was arrested. The policeman placed a charge of disorderly conduct against her. When she faced the magistrate that charge seemed rather unconvincing. He strengthened it.

"She was cussin' out them scabs," said the policeman.

"Five dollars fine," said the hurried magistrate. "Next case."

Fannie Socolick didn't so much mind being arrested or being fined. She quite understands that the strike picket must expect such things. But she felt badly at the policeman's charge that she had been "cussing." She really isn't that sort of a girl.

"In Russia it is the czar," said she. "Here it is the policeman."

That's sheer prejudice on Fannie's part. No one has ever said the czar knocks down half-grown girls or stands by and laughs while thugs beat them. These charges have been made against the New York policemen in this strike—and in every other strike in the garment making industry in this city during the last half dozen years. Miss Rose Schneidermann is a well-bred, intelligent young woman who is a leader in the labor movement here.

"She was knocked down by a policeman the other night," said Miss Maud Younger, the San Francisco girl who is in command at the Labor Temple, where the dark-eyed little pickets report for orders. Miss Younger herself had an experience with the autocrat of the beat. She was arrested for picketing.

"We'll go telephone for the lawyers," cried a group of excited little kids. Remember, few of these white goods workers are more than twenty years old. Just for that, four more were arrested. They were packed into the patrol wagon in which Miss Yonger and the others were singing "The Union Forever," which is the "Marseillaise" of the strike.

"Good-by, Miss Younger," shrilled half a dozen others, standing on their little toes and waving their handkerchiefs. So they, too, were jammed into the crowded wagon. More would have been taken, but the driver called to the officers on the pavement:

"Have a heart about my horses. I got a load now."

Three other girls were following a group of "scabs," who were being escorted to their homes by an officer. They like to find where the "scabs" live. Then the strikers talk to their mothers. It's very likely that the three were tittering unpleasantly as they trailed along.

"If you don't go back," said the policeman, according to Mis Younger, "I'l shoot you."

He drew his revolver and placed it against the breast of the leader of the trio. It was a bluff, of course, and the girls called it. It strikes me they were pretty game, considering that they have seen policemen in action lately.

SEES NO HARM IN FLIRTING

Saves Children From Being Self-Conscious, a Colorado Professor Tells Students.

Colorado Springs.—"There is no harm in flirting if it is conducted artistically." This is what Prof. John V. Brietwieser, head of the department of psychology at the Colorado college and one of the widely known members of the faculty, told a large class of senior boys and girls.

The girls gasped and the boys winked.

Mr. Brietwieser said in part:

"In the adolescent stage the boy is either going to turn shy or try to show off. The girl will either be a flirt or be uncomfortable or self-conscious in society. Artistic flirting is the natural expression of the attraction of the sexes toward each other.

"Flirting expresses a fascination the boy has for a girl and vice versa. A girl can either draw a man along by artistic flirting or if she desires, her actions can repel him as plainly as words."

Anna Catherine Green.

"God! why didn't I shoot you on entrance!" he cried. "Your courage is certainly colossal."

A fine smile, without even the hint of humor now, touched the daring detective's lip. Brotherson's anger seemed to grow under it, and he loudly repeated:

"It's more than colossal; it's abnormal and—" A moment's pause, then with ironic pauses—"and quite unnecessary save as a matter of display, unless you think you need it to sustain you through the ordeal you are courting. You wish to help me finish and prepare for flight?"

"I sincerely do."

"You consider yourself competent?"

"I do."

Brotherson's eyes fell and he walked once to the extremity of the oval flooring and back.

"Well, we will grant that. But that's not all that is necessary. My requirements demand a companion in my first flight. Will you go up in the car with me on Saturday night?"

A quick affirmative was on Sweetwater's lips but the glimpse which he got of the speaker's face glowering upon him from the shadows into which Brotherson had withdrawn, stopped its utterance, and the silence grew heavy. Though it may not have lasted long by the clock, the instant of breathless contemplation of each other's features across the intervening space was of incalculable moment to Sweetwater, and, possibly, to Brotherson. As drowning men are said to live over their whole history between their first plunge and their final rise to light and air, so through the mind of the detective rushed the memories of his past and the fast fading glories of his future; and rebelling at the subtle peril he saw in that sardonic eye, he vociferated an impulsive:

"No! I'll not—" and paused, caught by a new and irresistible sensation.

A breath of wind—the first he had felt that night—had swept in through some crevice in the curving wall, flapping the canvas enveloping the great car. It acted like a peal to battle. After all, a man must take some risks in this life, and his heart was in this trial of a redoubtable mechanism in which he had full faith. He could not say no to the prospect of being the first to share a triumph which would send his name to the ends of the earth; and, changing the trend of his sentence, he repeated with a calmness which had the force of a great decision:

"I will not fail you in anything. If she rises—" here his trembling hand fell on the curtain shutting off his view of the ship, "she shall take me with her, so that when she descends I may be the first to congratulate the proud inventor of such a marvel."

"So be it!" shot from the other's lips, his eyes losing their threatening look, and his whole countenance suddenly aglow with the enthusiasm of awakened genius.

Coming from the shadows, he laid his hand on the cord regulating the rise and fall of the concealing curtain.

"Here she is!" he cried and drew the cord.

The canvas shook, gathered itself into great folds and disappeared in the shadows from which he had just stepped.

The air-car stood revealed—a startling, because wholly unique, vision.

Long did Sweetwater survey it, then turning with beaming face upon the watchful inventor, he uttered a loud hurrah.

Next moment, with everything forgotten between them save the glories of this invention, both dropped simultaneously to the floor and began that minute examination of the mechanism necessary to their mutual work.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

His Great Hour.

Saturday night at eight o'clock.

So the fiat had gone forth, with no concession to be made on account of weather.

As Oswald came from his supper and took a look at the heavens from the small front porch, he was deeply troubled that Orlando had remained so obstinate on this point. For there were ominous clouds rolling up from the east, and the storms in this region of high mountains and abrupt valleys were not light, nor without danger even to those with feet well-planted upon mother earth.

If the tempest should come up before eight!

Mr. Challoner, who, from some mysterious impulse of bravado on the part of Brotherson, was to be allowed to make the third in this small band of spectators, was equally concerned at this sight, but not for Brotherson. His fears were for Oswald, whose slowly gathering strength could ill bear the strain which this additional anxiety for his brother's life must impose upon him. As for Doris, she was in a state of excitement more connected with the past than with the future.

That afternoon she had laid her hand in that of Orlando Brotherson, and wished him well. She! in whose breast still lingered reminiscences of those old doubts which had beclouded his image for her at their first meeting. She had not been able to avoid it. His look was a compelling one, and it had demanded thus much from her; and—a terrible thought to her gentle spirit—he might be going to his death!

It had been settled by the prospective aviator that they were to watch for the ascent from the mouth of the grassy road leading in to the hangar. The three were to meet there at a quarter to eight and await the stroke and the air-car's rise. That time was near, and Mr. Challoner, catching a glimpse of Oswald's pallid and unnaturally drawn features, as he set down the lantern he carried, shuddered with foreboding and wished the hour passed.

Doris' watchful glance never left the face whose lightest change was more to her than all Orlando's hopes. But the result upon her was not to weaken her resolution, but to strengthen it. Whatever the outcome of the next few minutes, she must stand ready to sustain her invalid through it. That the darkness of early evening had deepened to oppression, was unnoticed for the moment. The fears of an hour past had been forgotten. Their attention was too absorbed in what was going on before them, for even a glance overhead.

Suddenly Mr. Challoner spoke.

"Who is the man whom Brotherson has asked to go up with him?"

It was Oswald who answered.

"He has never told me. He has kept his own counsel about that as about everything else connected with this matter. He simply advised me that I was not to bother about him any more; that he had found the assistant he wanted."

"Such reticence seems unpardonable. You have displayed great patience, Oswald."

"Because I understand Orlando. He reads men's natures like a book. The man he trusts, we may trust. Tomorrow, he will speak openly enough. All cause for reticence will be gone."

"You have confidence then in the success of this undertaking?"

"If I hadn't, I should not be here. I could hardly bear to witness his failure, even in a secret test like this. I should find it too hard to face him afterwards."

"I don't understand."

"Orlando has great pride. If this enterprise fails I cannot answer for him. He would be capable of anything. Why, Doris! what is the matter, child? I never saw you look like that before."

She had been down on her knees regulating the lantern, and the sudden flame, shooting up, had shown him her face turned up toward his in an apprehension which verged on horror.

"Do I look frightened?" she asked, remembering herself and lightly rising. "I believe that I am a little frightened. If—if anything should go wrong! If an accident—" But here she remembered herself again and quickly changed her tone. "But your confidence shall be mine. I will believe in his good angel or—or in his self-command and great resolution. I'll not be frightened any more."

But Oswald did not seem satisfied. He continued to look at her in vague concern.

He hardly knew what to make of the intense feeling she had manifested. Had Orlando touched her girlish heart? Had this cold-blooded nature, with its steel-like brilliancy and honorable but stern views of life, moved this warm and sympathetic soul to more than admiration? The thought disturbed him so he forgot the nearness of the moment they were all awaiting till a quick rasping sound from the hangar, followed by the sudden appearance of an ever-widening band of light about its upper rim, drew his attention and awakened them all to a breathless expectation.

The lid was rising. Now it was half-way up, and now, for the first time, it was lifted to its full height and stood a broad oval disk against the background of the forest. The effect was strange. The hangar had been made brilliant by many lamps, and their united glare pouring from its top and illuminating not only the surrounding treetops, but the broad face of this uplifted disk, roused in the awed spectator a thrill such as in mythological times might have greeted the sudden sight of Vulcan's smithy blazing on Olympian hills. But the clang of iron on iron would have attended the flash and gleam of those unexpected fires, and here all was still save for that steady throb never heard in Olympus or the halls of Valhalla, the pant of the motor eager for flight in the upper air.

As they listened in a trance of burning hope which obliterated all else, this noise and all others near and distant, was suddenly lost in a loud clatter of writhing and twisting boughs which set the forest in a roar and seemed to heave the air about them.

"Orlando!" a Shriek Went Up, "Orlando!"

A wind had swooped down from the east, bending everything before it and rattling the huge oval on which their eyes were fixed as though it would tear it from its hinges.

The three caught at each other's hands in dismay. The storm had come just on the verge of the enterprise, and no one might guess the result.

"Will he dare? Will he dare?" whispered Doris, and Oswald answered, though it seemed next to impossible that he could have heard her:

"He will dare. But will he survive it? Mr. Challoner," he suddenly shouted in that gentleman's ear, "what time is it now?"

Mr. Challoner, disengaging himself from their mutual grasp, knelt down by the lantern to consult his watch.

"One minute to eight," he shouted back.

The forest was now a pandemonium. Great boughs, split from their parent trunks, fell crashing to the ground in all directions. The scream of the wind roused echoes which repeated themselves, here, there and everywhere. No rain had fallen yet, but the sight of the clouds skurrying pell-mell through the glare thrown up from the shed, created such havoc in the already overstrained minds of the three onlookers, that they hardly heeded, when with a clatter and crash which at another time would have startled them into flight, the swaying oval before them was whirled from its hinges and thrown back against the trees already bending under the onslaught of the tempest. Destruction seemed the natural accompaniment of the moment, and the only prayer which sprang to Oswald's lips was that the motor whose throb yet lingered in their blood though no longer taken in by the ear, would either refuse to work or prove insufficient to lift the heavy car into this seething tumult of warring forces. His brother's life hung in the balance against his fame, and he could not but choose life for him. Yet, as the multitudinous sounds about him yielded for a moment to that brother's shout, and he knew that the moment had come, which would soon settle all, he found himself staring at the elliptical edge of the hangar, with an anticipation which held in it as much terror as joy, for the end of a great hope or the beginning of a great triumph was compressed into this trembling instant and if—

Great God! he sees it! They all see it! Plainly against that portion of the disk which still lifted itself above the farther wall, a curious moving mass appears, lengthens, takes on shape, then shoots suddenly aloft, clearing the encircling tops of the bending, twisting and tormented trees, straight into the heart of the gale, where for one breathless moment it whirls madly about like a thing distraught, then in slow but triumphant obedience to the master hand that guides it, steadies and mounts majestically upward till it is lost to their view in the depths of impenetrable darkness.

Orlando Brotherson has accomplished his task. He has invented a mechanism which can send an air-car straight up from its mooring place. As the three watchers realize this, Oswald utters a cry of triumph, and Doris throws herself into Mr. Challoner's arms. Then they all stand transfixed again, waiting for a descent which may never come.

But hark; a new sound, mingling its clatter with all the others. It is the rain. Quick, maddening, drenching, it comes; enveloping them in wet in a moment. Can they hold their faces up against it?

And the wind! Surely it must toss that aerial messenger before it and fling it back to earth, a broken and despised toy.

"Orlando?" went up in a shriek. "Orlando?"

Oh, for a ray of light in those far-off heavens! For a lull in the tremendous sounds shivering the heavens and shaking the earth! But the tempest rages on, and they can only wait, five minutes, ten minutes, looking, hoping, fearing, without thought of self and almost without thought of each other, till suddenly as it had come, the rain ceases and the wind, with one final wail of rage and defeat, rushes away into the west, leaving behind it a sudden silence which, to their terrified hearts, seems almost more dreadful to bear than the accumulated noises of the moment just gone.

HOOPER AND QUEENAN WIN THIRD GAME

Byron and Mulrenan Losers in Montvale Pool Tournament 100 Balls to 55

M. Hooper and Queenan showed championship form in the Montvale pool tournament last evening, winning hands down from Byron and Mulrenan, by a score of 100 to 55. The game opened as if it might prove a corker, Byron and Mulrenan taking the long end of the first frame, 8 balls to 7, and following up the good work in the second, the score standing 16 to 14 in their favor. Queenan and Hooper took the lead in the third frame, and were never headed afterwards. The only frames after the first two when the losing team showed strong was the sixth whe they scored 9 balls, and in the tenth when they got 10.

It is hardly fair to measure the comparative playing abilities of the teams by the one sided score of last evening, for, as is very often the case in pool contests, the balls broke hard for the defeated team, and on several occasions after making difficult shots Byron and Mulrenan found themselves left in positions from which it was next to impossible to pocket a ball. This does not in any way detract from the shooting of the winners, both of whom used excellent judgment, and at times some of the beautiful cut shots and combinations executed by them brought shouts of approval.

In the middle of the game Byron for his team and Hooper for his, made some nice shots, and later in the game Queenan and Mulrenan picked off some pretty shots just to show their partners that they were doing their share of the good playing. Despite the fact that it was apparent early in the game that Byron and Mulrenan were doomed to defeat, the spectators remained to the finish and enjoyed the difficult shooting that was exhibited quite frequently by all four of the contestants. Tonight John Mulrenan second and Peter Foley will try to take the measure of William McDonough and Hugh McCall. Last night's summary by frames:

MUST WED TO GET FORTUNE

Man Starts Out to Find Wife, But Falls Into Hands of Police.

Omaha, Neb.—With an option on $15,000 willed to him by his dead father, possession of which he would obtain provided he should marry, Carl Shoemaker of Omaha, Neb., sought the acquaintance of a young widow with three children, by means of correspondence.

His letter writing, however, provoked a series of answers written by detectives and his arrest resulted. Magistrate Foster dismissed Shoemaker.

The widow is said to be Mrs. Myrtle Zinn.

It has been alleged by the police that Shoemaker had seen the object of his unwelcome attentions on the street and had followed her home to ascertain her identity. But Shoemaker told a different and undisputed story.

Shoemaker said he entered into his campaign of letter writing with perfectly good intentions.

"I have never seen the woman," he said. "My first attention was attracted to her when an article appeared in a paper six weeks ago relative to a woman living in the southern part of the city, a widow with three children, who was out of funds and about to become the object of a church charity fund.

"I thought to help the woman and wrote her the first letter, asking her if she needed help and telling her I would like to meet her and talk the matter over. I received a reply to that letter and to two others. I didn't know whether or not the officers wrote all three replies. Had I not received the first reply I would not have written again. But my correspondence seemed to have been encouraged. The final answer proposed our meeting at the Paxton hotel, where the officers were waiting for me.

"It has since developed that the woman has wealthy relatives and was not in need of the help that was represented. The circumstances have been greatly misrepresented."

Shoemaker produced a copy of his father's will wherein he is named heir to $15,000 provided he married in five years. This will was written four years ago.

This is a graphic recital of a most unusual story; the story of his walk of 1200 miles through the storms and darkness of an Arctic winter to bring relief to his imperiled comrades. He gives a most vivid insight into the mysteries of our far-off Arctic wilds in this thrilling tale of adventure and achievements in the desolate northland. Mrs. Alice H. Marion will be the hostess at the social tea which will follow the lecture. The Schubert Trio will furnish music.

It was "Big" Arthur Davis, nineteen years in the show business, who worked his way up from a "hallyhoo," announcing the order of events at the first annual banquet of the Showmen's League of America at the Saratoga hotel.

The Showmen's league, organized to supersede all former organizations of showmen at the gathering of showmen from the country over, who held a convention recently in Chicago, elected officers.

Col. William F. Cody (Buffalo Bill) was named president. Other executives are: Charles Anderson, Chicago, vice-president; F. S. Albert, Chicago, second vice-president; W. J. Hermann, Chicago, general counsellor; C. W. Parker, Leavenworth, Kan., treasurer, W. A. Patrick, Chicago, secretary.

Woman, 105, Wants to Marry.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Unable to decide whether Mrs. Marceline Elisalda, one hundred and five years old, should be permitted to marry Pleasantino Leon, aged eighty-six, Superior Court Judge Rives has continued the case in probate court for one week.

Leon, who says he has loved Mrs. Elisalda for more than half a century, was present when lawyers were wrangling about his courtship.

Mrs. Elisalda's relatives object to the marriage. Their fight is being waged by a granddaughter, who was recently appointed the aged woman's guardian.

BOY SCOUTS FOR WOBURN

Meeting last Evening to Consider the Matter

On the invitation of Mr. George L. Hosmer, a Woburn boy, graduate of our high school and now an instructor at M.I.T., a few men gathered last evening to consider the advisability of forming a branch of the Boy Scouts movement in this city. After considering the situation thoroughly a committee was appointed to arrange for and call a public meeting in the near future, at which steps can be taken to form such an organization, and leaders chosen to take charge of it. Due notice will be given through the press of the date of this meeting at which it is proposed to have a speaker from Boston headquarters explain the purposes and aims of the Boy Scouts movement.

PRESIDENT JONES FREES HIS MIND

Declares editorial criticism unwarranted, and an insult to the City Council

OTHER BUSINESS TRANSACTED

After the city council had transacted in some form or other the regular order of business at its session last evening, President Jones called Alderman Rix to the chair and taking the floor himself he proceeded to take issue with editorial articles which have been published in the columns of the Woburn JOURNAL, declaring among other things that criticisms of aldermanic proceedings were unwarranted. He also stated that the press have no right to outline action upon matters concerning the public welfare that are under consideration by the city council, before that body has first considered the proposition.

He made the amazing statement that the Woburn JOURNAL was preaching sermons, and asserted that no man, or body of men had the right to criticise so "intelligent, capable and representative" a body of men as comprise the present city council.

In opening President Jones said: I take the floor to discuss an article which appeared in a local newspaper entitled "A Costly Lesson." He then read from the editorial page of the Woburn JOURNAL of Wednesday March 5, which condemned the recent council action in voting to expend approximately $2,000 to repair the old fire steamer, instead of using the money as part payment for the purchase of an up-to-date auto fire truck. He read, an extract. The editorial drew an object lesson from the valuable service rendered by the Winchester and Wakefield fire departments at the Central House fire with their modern equipments, and suggested that if the members of the present city council were at the fire, that they should have profitted by what they witnessed. President Jones read from the editorial: "Did the aldermen present learn the lesson of the catastrophe? If they did, they must have realized how unwise and nonsensical was their recent vote to repair the antiquated steamer."

The president continued, We are continually being advised from outside sources on what to do and how to do it. The latest criticism happened last night. We are severely criticized for paying $1800 to repair the old fire steamer.

The idea of repairing the steamer originated with the mayor, and the committee on finance reported the loan favorably and the council approved it.

Now everybody wants to see modern apparatus, and we do ourselves. But this was not a matter of wishes and desires. It was a matter of dollars and cents.

Who is the one man or one body of men who have the right to criticise this body of intelligent, capable and representative citizens? We have no objection to just criticism. But this is a direct insult to the city council, its committee on finance, and every member who voted for this appropriation.

And then again only in tonight's issue of the same paper we are read a sermon on what to do concerning the election of an assistant fire chief. As if we haven't the ability and common sense to do the right thing without being told. We are continually reading advice on what we should do.

Turning toward the table at which representatives of the press were seated the alderman said; "I suppose I am like Ajax defying the lightning and without doubt I shall be struck again."

While talking, President Jones held a copy of the Woburn JOURNAL in his hand and after delivering himself on the fire steamer controversey he alluded to another editorial which had for its caption "A Star Chamber Redivivus." This editorial was in criticism of the recent investigation by the committee on fire of conditions existing at the hose three company in Cummingsville.

The alderman said-This article gives you to understand that we do our business in secret. Committee meetings are not public and never have been public, and no business transacted by a committee should be made public until a report has been made to the city council. This so called star chamber hearing was not a hearing but was a committee meeting. The school committee hearings referred to in the editorial which were public are not parallel cases.

It is altogether too easy to criticise the city officials who are trying their best to perform their duty in the best possible manner. Outsiders do not understand and cannot understand as well as those so thoroughly conversant with public affairs as the members of the city council are.

Our borrowing capacity is small, and will be taxed to its utmost to satisfy the demands of the current year. I suppose the people who so kindly offer their criticism and advice would feel highly honored if they were permitted to run the city business instead of us. We would be glad to give them the chance provided they can get the opportunity. I wonder when these criticisms will end. I don't think they are necessary.

After President Jones sat down, Alderman Blake moved that a vote of thanks be extended to him for his defence of the city council against unwarranted attack. The motion was carried.

After the vote was declared, President Jones said, "And I don't intend to stand for these criticisms without replying to every one of them in public to show our spirit."

The business of the session was as follows:

A communication was read from Mayor William H. Henchey, which read as follows:

To the Honorable City Council:

Gentlemen:—I have had recently called to my attention the unsatisfactory conditions that are alleged to exist at our Post office in the handling and distribution of parcel post and mail, and I recommend that a committee be appointed by your Honorable Board to act with me, and obtain from the postal authorities, better mail service for our city.

Very truly yours,
William H. Henchey, Mayor.

A VOTE OF THANKS

"Votes of thanks" seem to be in order. Last evening the city council voted its thanks, and very properly, to the fire departments of Winchester and Wakefield for the efficient aid thus rendered on the occasion of the Central house fire. Then, later, carried away by the glowing periods of its president, the council voted its thanks for his scathing and withering attack upon the JOURNAL because that newspaper had dared to speak its mind about certain council action.

And so, to be in fashion, the JOURNAL wishes to vote its thanks in a public manner to President Jones of the council for the splendid advertisement he gave the JOURNAL, and the ammunition he furnished for a second volley. Indeed, he is reported to have said that very likely he was enacting the role of Ajax defying the lightning. The JOURNAL congratulates President Jones upon his familiarity with mythological history, and his perspicacity.

President Jones in his position, if he is reported correctly, recalls that of the elder Vanderbilt who in a similar strait said "The public be damned." Does President Jones, or the Council, individually or collectively, think for a moment there is "a divinity that doth hedge about a king?" Is this a monarchy? "Upon what meat doth this, our Caesar feed that he is grown so great?" Not so many moons ago, President Jones and his associates were asking the public for support at the polls. Having reached the top, he hastens to kick over the ladder by which he climbed.

The people who made him an alderman did so that he might represent them. He is but a servant. The people is his master, and reserves the right to criticize and give utterance to its views and wishes. And what medium shall the people use, if not the public press? And every word that has been published in the JOURNAL is but a reflex of sentiment expressed on every hand by the people. The JOURNAL has nothing to retract. It has attacked no man's character. It has pointed out what are generally conceded to be errors of judgment. And this it has the right to do.

"This the height and front of my offence, no more." And this the JOURNAL will continue to do whenever it appears that public interests demand it. No threats, or bombastic pronunciamentos will deter the JOURNAL from doing what is believed to be its duty. The JOURNAL is simple enough to believe that all the money which city councils spend so lavishly comes out of the tax-payer's pocket. And when it is being wasted, as we see it, it becomes a duty to tell the burden-bearer what the little game is.

The JOURNAL wishes that President Jones and other council members could have heard Woburn firemen as they talked the morning of the fire. Said one, in a group of five, "Why, when Wakefield's machine got to work it made us look foolish." And that was true. Our allies from Winchester and Wakefield had the centre of the stage from the moment they arrived until the "All out" sounded. The verdict in favor of up-to-date equipment was universal. Is it a crime to call public attention to a policy, that sticks Bourbon-like to antiquated methods? Do we not spend money enough on the fire department to have an equipment that shall match those of small towns all about us? Stop some of the leaks—they are not all ih the water mains—and find a way to buy somethidg modern add not pour public money into a bottomless pit. President Jones is reported to have said that the question of securing an auto pump for the fire department "is not one of wish or desire, but a matter of dollars and cents." Did he mean "cents" or "sense?"

Throughout the vocal effort of the council's presiding officer ran a tone of arrogated authority that does not dovetail with the sentiment of the time. "Publicity" is the slogan of the age. And that leads the JOURNAL to say just a word about that portion of President Jones attack upon this paper that referred to the hose three investigation held behind closed doors by the sub-committee on fire. The president offered no argument in answer to the JOURNAL'S criticism of the secret hearing. His parrot-like repetition of the committee's reason that it was a committee meeting and therefore sacred, has no force other than an assertion. The fact remains that any matter which affects the morale of a department upon which the city spends $20,000 of its good money annually is a matter that should not be canned in committee.

With the words which Shakespeare puts into the mouth of one of his characters, the JOURNAL closes this chapter: "Beggar that I am, I am even poor in thanks, but still I thank you."

When, by and by, her mother came in for a last look and kiss, she found her darling wide awake and reproachful. "Oh, mamma," was the unexpected exclamation of the small maiden, "I've been so lonely, lying here all alone, while you were having such a liberal time downstairs."

WOBURN BOYS SEEING WASHINGTON

Maj. Walker Writes of Interesting Experiences

Washington, D. C.
March 5, 1913.

Editor Woburn JOURNAL:

Monday evening we "rookies" visited the capitol. As we stood on the terrace before it we beheld a sight that we shall never forget. Before us Pennsylvania avenue stretched far away, illuminated by thousands of electric lights. Search lights were flashing about on prominent buildings, one playing constantly on a large American flag, one on Washington monument, one on the dome of the capitol, and with ever changing colors, on t h fountain before the capitol. We passed throughmost of the buildings the great hall under the immense dome impressing us the most. Congress was holding an all night session. I was not able to see much of the House but had a good chance to hear a speech on the Mexican revolution given by Senator Fall of New Mexico, who was trying to kill the Indian Appropriation bill. The only senator I recognized was Senator Lodge of Massachusetts.

Tuesday morning we spent in a walk about the Potomac Park. At 11 o'clock we reported at our quarters ready for the parade. Our regiment was formed in a side street not far away and there we waited for four hours until our turn in the parade came. This wait was far more tiresome than the march itself, but at last the order "forward" was given and with band playing and colors proudly waving we, representatives of the grand old Bay State, started into one of the greatest of parades, to be reviewed by our commander-in- chief himself, the new President, Woodrow Wilson.

Stands had been set up all along the way, and even chairs were placed in store windows, seats selling for from one to ten dollars. We passed from the Capitol down Pennsylvania avenue and from there by the White house where we were reviewed by President Wilson. I had a very good chance to see him when in passing before him the command "eyes left" was given. My impression was that already the cares of his office were weighing heavily on him, and I thought by his wearied expression that he wished the long parade over, more heartily than the most tired "rookie."

After being reviewed successively by our brigade commander, Governor Foss, our Colonel and Major, we were marched back to our quarters where we were dismissed. In the evening we went to see the fireworks in the Park near Washington monument.

The first thing we did today was to climb theWashington monument It is 550 feet high or 2 1-2 times as high as Bunker hill monument and it was more work to climb its 1000 steps than to make a long march. We then visited theBureau of Engraving where the bills and stamps are printed; the White house where we saw several members of the new cabinet; the Treasury building and the Army and Navy building. In the afternoon we took a long walk into Virginia. We high school fellows were nearly all together, and we stopped and talked to every one we met. It was not only amusing to us, but we learned more than we ever learned in so short a time in our lives. We passed through several negro settlements where every one seemed to have declared a holiday. Pitching horse shoes and "knucks," an interesting game of marbles, seemed to be the most strenuous exercise for adults as well as children. Everywhere we met that hospitality which is characteristic of the southern negro. We visited the Arlington cemetery, a national cemetery, the resting place of so many American soldiers, Lee's mansion and Fort Myers. At the latter place we were interested in the Hatfield Wireless station, the most powerful in the United States. The highest of its three towers is about 655 feet from the ground.

This evening we visited the Congressional Library. Without any exception it is the most beautiful building I ever saw. Words cannot describe its great halls, its marble staircases, its great reading room, its wonderful dome, and its statuary.

Yours truly,
Wilford A. Walker.

Omit the Word "Can't."

It is said that Napoleon the Great hated the word "can't," and that he never used it if he could possibly help it. In that respect most people differ from Napoleon. If they were to substitute the word "will" for "can't" they would be able to accomplish much more.

WOBURN MOOSE HOLD OPEN MEETING

Addresses and Vaudeville Program at Wilmington last Night

Woburn lodge, 1214, Loyal Order of Moose, held an open meeting in Grange hall, Wilmington, last evening, members of the lodge going to Wilmington in a special car chartered for the purpose. The meeting had been well advertised and the hall was crowded.

The program for the evening included addresses by George Taylor of Woburn lodge, who presided and introduced the other speakers: George Warde of Indianna, national lecturer, who gave a history of the order telling of its growth from a few hundred members a few years ago to an organization which at the present time numbers over 500,000 members in 1400 lodges. He also told of the new industrial home now being built and equipped by the order, under the direction of a committee of which John Hays Hammond is chairman. The new home is located at Anderson, Ind. Other speakers were Arthur W. Hayden, national diredtor, who spoke of the work and growth of the order in New England; William J. Read, national secretary; and Deputy National Director W. H. Doris, under whose direction and supervision, Wogurn lodge was organized.

Following the speaking there was a vaudeville program including three reels of moving pictures, some of the best to be had. The Woburn Lodge orchestra of six pieces under the leadership of Edward Connors, furnished music for the occasion. At the close of the meeting 61 applications for membership were received.

It was an interesting and enthusiastic meeting.

LENTEN MEETINGS AT ST. PAUL'S CHURCH

Many who are employed in or near the shopping district of Boston are regular attendants at the noon service which is held every day at the Episcopal Cathedral church of St. Paul on Tremont street, between Temple Place and Winter street. The service begins at 12.10 and occupies about twenty-five minutes, giving those who are in business ample time to attend within the noon hour. A short sermon by Dean Rousmaniere or another member of the Cathedral staff, or by a visiting clergyman, is included in the noonday service on every day except Sunday, when there is a service of hymn singing by the congregation led by the quartette that sings every noon.

These services at noon draw large congregations and some of the sermons have been gems of condensation. Bishop Lawrence will be the preacher from Monday, March 10 to Friday, March 14, inclusive. Everybody is invited to all services at the St. Paul Cathedral.

This was accepted and placed on file. The committee is President Jones, Aldermen Rix and Devlin.

A public hearing was held on a petition of the Edison company for the location of 6 poles or Spring Ct., northerly from Green street, and to set and remove one pole on Green street at Spring court. This was granted without protest, and passed the first reading. Also a petition by Edison company for authority to locate one pole on Middlesex street, south of Chestnut street, a public hearing will be given on it at next meeting of council on March 20; a petition to attach wires on one pole of the New England Telephone & Telegraph company on Salem street, east of Bow street was granted.

Petition of New England Telephone & Telegraph company for authority to attach wires to two poles of the Edison company on Newbury street, southerly from Eaton avenue, and also to one pole on Salem street was granted.

A petition of James A. Bruce of Center street for a license to transport intoxicating liquors into this city for a year, beginning April 1, was referred to committee on police and license.

Charles M. Flanders petition for a license for four pool, two billiard tables and five bowling alleys, was granted without reference.

After some verbal fire works between Aldermen Poole and Blake over the advisability of laying over the election of the assistant fire chief, until the present investigation in the department was reported upon, Alderman Blake by vote of the council was sustained and the election proceeded. The vote was as follows: For John F. Kenney for assistant fire chief Aldermen Blake, Boyle, Devlin, Ham, Hogan, Lynch, McLaughlin, Navin, Winn,—9. For Amos Langill for assistant fire chief, Aldermen Fox, Marshall, Poole, Rix, True, and President Jones,—6. Kenney elected, having 9 votes.

The Mayor's appointment of Frank E. Tracy as forest warden, was confirmed by the council, also James N. Stuart as inspector of animals, as was John C. N. Parker as cemetery commissioner for five years, and John O. Ray, trustee of Woburn public library for three years.

In reference to confirming the appointment by Mayor Henchey as regards Mr. Tracy as forest warden, Alderman True made the statement after receiving information on the subject that no representative of the city had ever been present to superintend the insulating of wires and cutting of limbs by the men of either the Edison company or the New England Telephone & Telegraph company. This was a legal requirement, which had been disregarded by city officials.

Chief Tracy was called in to explain the duties of forest warden which he did.

The petition of the New England Telephone & Telegraph company to lay and maintain underground conduits and manholes on Mishawum road was given its second reading and adopted. The annual order of appropriations was passed. The order for appropriation of $5,000 for a water main in Lexington street was adopted with instructions to take the funds from the surplus of the water department

An order for $10 to buy flags for Revolutionary soldiers graves was passed. For care of old Park street and Montvale avenue burying grounds $150 was appropriated.

A loan of $20,000 to be borrowed outside the debt limit, and a transfer of $10,000 from the income of the water department were each given a reading.

The order for $1,000 for the police department, introduced last year was unfavorably reported by the committee and the report was sustained.

The matter of using for outstanding bills $4,500 of the $5,000 heretofore appropriated for water meters was discussed but was finally postponed until the next meeting.

For fire alarm boxes $250 was voted.

City Collector Golden's request for $400 for clerical service got an adverse report by the committee which the council sustained.

For drain pipe on Montvale avenue and Central street $600 was ordered.

The annual budget as reported had its second reading and was adopted.

The council extended its thanks to the fire departments of Winchester and Wakefield for the efficient aid rendered at the Central house fire.

For the extension of the block system $500 was voted.

On motion of Alderman Marshall the superintendend of the Water Department was ordered to inspect all fire hydrants monthly.

The railroad commission notified the council that a hearing on the handling of suburban traffic at Sullivan Square will be given at 20 Beacon street Boston, March 13, at 10.30 a. m.

An order for concrete sidewalk and edge stone on the easterly side of Main street from Cross to Fowle streets was referred to the board of public works.

A proposition to try and have the 6.58 a. m. train changed to 6.43 was referred to committee on railroads.

Chief Engineer Tracey notified the council that the adoption of the act granting days off to firemen made the employment of another permanent man a necessity

The request of the Cemetery commissioners for new cast iron water mains in Woodbrook cemetery to cost $650 was referred to the Board of Public works.

Better Passenger Accomodation to be Considered

City Clerk Bernard F. McHugh has been notified by the Massachusetts Board of Railroad commissioners that a public hearing on the petitions of the Aldermen of Medford, Somerville and Woburn for better passenger accomodation at the Sullivan Square terminal station will be held at 10.30 o'clock in the morning of Thursday, March 13 at the office of the commission, 20 Beacon street Boston.

Much dissatisfaction has been freely expressed for some time because of the poor service and long waits for cars at this station, and Woburn people will welcome any improvement in the service that may result from the inquiry by the railroad commission.

THROWN FROM HIS WAGON

Rufus J. Snow Seriously Injured at Central Square This Morning

Mr. Rufus J. Snow, who runs a retail fish store at the corner of Salem street and Main street, while driving on one of his routes this morning was badly injured. It seems he had just come from a customer's house on Lowell street, near the railroad crossing at about 9.45. He stepped on the team and got ready to seat himself, when the horse started, upsetting the team. Mr. Snow was thrown out between the overturned team and a telephone pole, sustaining two broken ribs and many bruises on limbs and body. He was unconscious for a short time. Station Agent Otis B. Blanchard of the Central Square station helped him to the station from which he was removed to his home on Cleveland avenue. A midday report is that he is resting comfortably. Dr. W. H. Keleher attended him.

BODY TO SCIENCE

Archdeacon Colley Was Champion of Psychic Research.

Eccentric Churchman Who Died Recently in England Requested That His Brain Might Be Inspected After Death.

London.—Archdeacon Colley, who died recently, won notoriety outside the church as a champion of spiritualism, and his challenge to Mr. Maskelyne, which led to the latter's producing a "spirit form" from, and returning to, his side and the litigation which followed it are fresh in the public mind.

Eight years ago the archdeacon had his coffin made and stored in the music room of the rectory. In 1904 he made a will bequeathing his body to the University of Birmingham for dissection, "to be cut up in the interests of anatomical and surgical science when I have done with it."

In a letter to the university the archdeacon recalled that as a child he was laid out for dead and narrowly escaped being buried alive, and, therefore asked that "it may be seen that I am really dead."

"Please, again, tell me what I should do," he wrote, "about giving in a letter or other formal disposal of my mortal remains, to be brought under my hand with my coffined body, particulars of what I should write as to mental idiosyncrasies, bias of will, likes and dislikes, with whatever else may be useful when the top of my skull, as we arranged, shall be sawn off, to enable exploration to be made, that it may be known if I am, or have been, any more mad than other people."

Last New Year's day the archdeacon was carried round his church in the coffin, or box, clothed as he had expressed a wish to be clothed after death—a performance that startled a congregation already accustomed to his eccentricities. "I desired to impress on my parishioners that 'death is the gate of life,'" he said afterwards. "I hope and expect that after death and a spell of rest—which may be one year or 500—I shall return again for useful work. That is the doctrine I have taught, and the doctrine I believe in."

In the following months he announced to his congregation at Stockholm that he had resigned his living and that it was his intention to go to South Africa, where he had property. During the '80s, he said, he bought land near Johannesburg for which before the Boer war he was offered £4,000,000.

Of all his extraordinary spiritualistic experiences none is more amazing than his "psychic" parcels post. Here is his own story of his experience:

"At Southsea, some years ago, I with no little discomfort wore all day under my clothes and next the skin several yards of white muslin. In the evening, still wearing it, I cycled to Chichester, for a surprise visit to a young woman of my own developing. Making there an unwrapped up small bundle of the attire, and loosely pinning my card to it with no other address, I and a friend and the young woman's sister saw the muslin fade away, disappear, and melt like vapor from the lap of the little medium.

"It was then nearly midnight and I had willed the muslin to go to London to a friend. Next day came a telegram from my friend, quickly followed by a letter, to the effect that at the first hotel he had chanced on—having been to the opera and missed the last train that would have taken him to his home out of London—the muslin and card so insecurely pinned to it had fallen upon his face as he had gotten into bed, and seeing my name and address, he wired to me the first thing in the morning."

He afterward found that it had taken less than five minutes by aerial flight of about seventy miles from Chichester to secure midnight delivery of the goods in London somewhere at a chance hotel by psychic parcels post.

U. S. GIRLS TO STOP FAMINE

Fifty Coryphees Leave to Fill Places of Those Who Married Peers In London.

New York.—Half a hundred American chorus girls are on board the liner Majestic, bound for London to stem the drain of ballet beauties from the English stage by noblemen via the marriage altar route. For a time the London musical productions were threatened with a chorus famine, so popular has become the marriage of chorus girls into the English nobility.

So prevalent is this practice that a hurry-up call was finally sent to America and the group of girls was immediately dispatched. Arrangements are being made for further shipments, and before long it is anticipated that practically all London choruses will be composed of American girls.

Among the most notable of recent alliances between the stage and English nobility have been those of Zena Dare, the actress, who was married to the Hon. Maurice Brett, second son of Lord Esher; Denise Orme, the Gaiety Juno, who married the Hon Richard Yarde-Buller, son of Lord Churston; Olive May, "the girl with the Chippendale legs," a Gaiety beauty who married Lord Victor Paget, and Camille Clifford, a former stage beauty, who is now the wife of the Hon. Henry Lyndhurst Bruce, son of Lord Aberdale.

—BY—

Anna Catherine Green.

Orlando was in that shout of natural [illegible] but he is not in this stillness. They look aloft, but the heavens are cold. Emptiness is where life was. Oswald begins to sway, and Doris, remembering him now and him only, as thrown her strong young arm about him, when—what is this sound they hear high up, high up, in the rapid clearing vault of the heavens! A throb—a steady pant—drawing near and yet nearer—entering the circlet of great branches over their heads—descending, slowly descending—till they catch another glimpse of those hazy outlines which had no sooner taken shape than the car disappeared from their sight within the elliptical wall open to receive it.

It had survived the gale! It has reentered its haven, and that, too, without colliding with aught around or any shock to those within, just as Orlando had promised, and the world was henceforth his! Hail to Orlando Brotherson!

Oswald could hardly restrain his wild joy and enthusiasm. Bounding to the door separating him from this conqueror of almost invincible forces, he pounded it with impatient fist.

"Let me in!" he cried. "You've done the trick, Orlando, you've done the trick."

"Yes, I have satisfied myself," came back in studied self-control from the other side of the door; and with a quick turning of the lock, Orlando stood before them.

They never forgot him as he looked at that moment. He was drenched, battered, palpitating with excitement; but the majesty of success was in his eye and in the bearing of his incomparable figure.

As Oswald bounded towards him, he reached out his hand, but his glance was for Doris.

"Yes," he went on, in tones of suppressed elation, "there's no flaw in my triumph. I have done all that I set out to do. Now—"

Why did he stop and look hurriedly back into the hangar? He had remembered Sweetwater, Sweetwater, who at that moment was stepping carefully from his seat in some remote portion of the car. The triumph was not complete. He had meant—

But there his thought stopped. Nothing of evil, nothing even of regret should mar his great hour. He was a conqueror, and it was for him now to reap the joy of conquest.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Night.

Three days had passed, and Orlando Brotherson sat in his room at the hotel before a table laden with telegrams, letters and marked newspapers. The news of his achievement had gone abroad, and Derby was, for the moment, the center of interest for two continents.

His success was an established fact. The second trial which he had made with his car, this time with the whole town gathered together in the streets as witnesses, had proved not only the reliability of its mechanism, but the great advantages which it possessed for a direct flight to any given point. Already he saw fortune beckoning to him in the shape of an unconditional offer of money from a first-class source; and better still—for he was a man of untiring energy and boundless resource—that opportunity for new and enlarged effort which comes with the recognition of one's exceptional powers.

All this was his and more. A sweeter hope, a more enduring joy had followed hard upon gratified ambition. Doris had smiled on him—Doris! She had caught the contagion of the universal enthusiasm and had given him her first ungrudging token of approval. It had altered his whole outlook on life in an instant, for there was an eagerness in this demonstration which proclaimed the relieved heart. She no longer trusted either appearances or her dream. He had succeeded in conquering her doubts by the very force of his personality, and the shadow which had hitherto darkened their intercourse had melted quite away. She was ready to take his word now and Oswald's, after which the rest must follow. Love does not lag far behind an ardent admiration.

Fame! Fortune! Love! What more could a man desire? What more could this man, with his strenuous past and an unlimited capacity for an enlarged future, ask from fate than this. Yet, as he bends over his letters, fingering some, but reading none beyond a line or two, he betrays but a passing elation, and hardly lifts his head when a burst of loud acclaim comes ringing up to his window from some ardent passer-by: "Hurrah for Brotherson! He has put our town on the map!"

Why this despondency? Have those two demons seized him again? It would seem so and with new and overmastering fury. After the hour of triumph comes the hour of reckoning. Orlando Brotherson in his hour of proud attainment stands naked before his own soul's tribunal and the pleader is dumb and the judge inexorable. There is but one witness to such struggles; but one eye to note the waste and desolation of the devastated soul, when the storm is over past.

Orlando Brotherson has succumbed; the attack was too keen, his forces too shaken. But as the heavy minutes pass, he slowly regathers his strength and rises, in the end, a conqueror. Nevertheless, he knows, even in that moment of regained command, that the peace he had thus bought with strain and stress is but momentary; that the battle is on for life; that the days which to other eyes would carry a sense of brilliancy—days teeming with work and outward satisfaction—would hold within their hidden depths a brooding uncertainty which would rob applause of its music and even overshadow the angel face of Love.

He quailed at the prospect, materialist though he was. The days—the interminable days! In his unbroken strength and the glare of the noonday sun, he forgot to take account of the nights looming in black and endless procession before him. It was from the day phantom he shrank, and not from the ghoul which works in the darkness and makes a grave of the heart while happier mortals sleep.

And the former terror seemed formidable enough to him in this his hour of startling realization, even if he had freed himself for the nonce from its controlling power. To escape all further contemplation of it he would work. These letters deserved attention. He would carry them to Oswald, and in their consideration find distraction for the rest of the day, at least. Oswald was a good fellow. If pleasure were to be gotten from these tokens of good-will, he should have his share of it. A gleam of Oswald's old spirit in Oswald's once bright eye, would go far towards throttling one of those demons whose talons he had just released rom his throat; and if Doris responded too, he would deserve his fate, if he did not succeed in gaining that mastery of himself which would make such hours as these episodes in a life big with interest and potent with great emotions.

Rising with a resolute air, he made a bundle of his papers and, with them in hand, passed out of his room and down the hotel stairs.

A man stood directly in his way, as he made for the front door. It was Mr. Challoner.

Courtesy demanded some show of recognition between them, and Brotherson was passing with his usual cold bow, when a sudden impulse led him to pause and meet the other's eye, with the sarcastic remark:

"You have expressed, or so I have been told, some surprise at my choice of mechanician. A man of varied accomplishments, Mr. Challoner, but one for whom I have no further use. If, therefore, you wish to call off your watch-dog, you are at liberty to do so. I hardly think he can be serviceable to either of us much longer."

The older gentleman hesitated, seeking possibly for composure, and when he answered it was not only without

"Did You Love Edith Challoner as Much as That?"

irony but with a certain forced respect:

"Mr. Sweetwater has just left for New York, Mr. Brotherson. He will carry with him, no doubt, the full particulars of your great success."

Orlando bowed, this time with distinguished grace. Not a flicker of relief had disturbed the calm serenity of his aspect, yet when a moment later, he stepped among his shouting admirers in the street, his air and glance betrayed a bounding joy for which another source must be found than that of gratified pride. A chain had slipped from his spirit, and though the people shrank a little even while they cheered, it was rather from awe of his bearing and the recognition of the sense of apartness which underlay his smile than from any perception of the man's real nature or of the awesome purpose which at that moment exalted it. But had they known—could they have seen into this tumultuous heart—what a silence would have settled upon these noisy streets; and in what terror and soul-confusion would each man have slunk away from his fellows into the quiet and solitude of his own home.

Brotherson himself was not without a sense of the incongruity underlying this ovation; for, as he slowly worked himself along, the brightness of his look became dimmed with a tinge of sarcasm which in its turn gave way to an expression of extreme melancholy—both quite unbefitting the hero of the hour in the first flush of his new-born glory. Had he seen Doris' youthful figure emerge for a moment from the vine-hung porch he was approaching, bringing with it some doubt of the reception awaiting him? Possibly, for he made a stand before he reached the house, and sent his followers back; after which he advanced with an unhurrying step, so that several minutes elapsed before he finally drew up before Mr. Scott's door and entered through the now empty porch into his brother's sitting-room.

He had meant to see Doris first, but his mind had changed. If all passed off well between himself and Oswald, if he found his brother responsive and wide-awake to the interests and necessities of the hour, he might forego his interview with her till he felt better prepared to meet it. For call it cowardice or simply a reasonable precaution, any delay seemed preferable to him in his present mood of discouragement, to that final casting of the die upon which hung so many and such tremendous issues. It was the first moment of real halt in his whole tumultuous life! Never, as daring experimentalist or agitator, had he shrunk from danger seen or unseen or from threat uttered or unuttered, as he shrank from this young girl's no; and something of the dread he had felt lest he should encounter her unaware in the hall and so be led on to speak when his own judgment bade him be silent, darkened his features as he entered his brother's presence.

But Oswald was sunk in a bitter revery of his own, and took no heed of these signs of depression. In the reaction following these days of great excitement, the past had re-asserted itself, and all was gloom in his once generous soul. This, Orlando had time to perceive, quick as the change came when his brother really realized who his visitor was. The glad "Orlando!" and the forced smile did not deceive him, and his voice quavered a trifle as he held out his packet with the words:

"I have come to show you what the world says of my invention. We will soon be great men," he emphasized, as Oswald opened the letters. "Money has been offered me and—read! read!" he urged, with an unconscious dictatorialness as Oswald paused in his task. "See what the fates have prepared for us; for you shall share all my honors, as you will from this day share my work and enter into all my experiments. Cannot you enthuse a little bit over it? Doesn't the prospect contain any allurement for you? Would you rather stay locked up in this petty town—"

"Yes; or—die. Don't look like that, Orlando. It was a cowardly speech and I ask your pardon. I'm hardly fit to talk today. Edith—"

Orlando frowned.

"Not that name!" he harshly interrupted. "You must not hamper your life with useless memories. That dream of yours may be sacred, but it belongs to the past, and a great reality confronts you. When you have fully recovered your health, your own manhood will rebel at a weakness unworthy one of our name. Rouse yourself, Oswald. Take account of our prospects. Give me your hand and say: 'Life holds something for me yet. I have a brother who needs me if I do not need him. Together, we can prove ourselves invincible and wrench fame and fortune from the world.'"

But the hand he reached for did not rise at his command, though Oswald started erect and faced him with manly earnestness.

"I should have to think long and deeply," he said, "before I took upon myself responsibilities like these. I am broken in mind and heart, Orlando, and must remain so till God mercifully delivers me. I should be a poor assistant to you—a drag, rather than a help. Deeply as I deplore it, hard as it may be for one of your temperament to understand so complete an overthrow, I yet must acknowledge my condition and pray you not to count upon me in any plans you may form. I know how this looks—I know that as your brother and truest admirer, I should respond, and respond strongly, to such overtures as these, but the motive for achievement is gone. She was my all; and while I might work, it would be mechanically. The lift, the elevating thought is gone."

Orlando stood a moment studying his brother's face; then he turned shortly about and walked the length of the room. When he came back, he took up his stand again directly before Oswald, and asked, with a new note in his voice:

"Did you love Edith Challoner so much at that?"

A glance from Oswald's eye, sadder than any tear.

"So that you cannot be reconciled?"

A gesture. Oswald's words were always few.

Henry Looney's Team Win Three out of Four Points

Henry Looney and his team of bowlers evened up matters to a certain extent with the pin splitters under the leadership of Pete Hogan last night, winning three out of four points. Team two won the third string and avoided a whitewash, after coming within two pins of getting away with the second point. Looney and Hogan divided the individual honors the former rolling 101 for high single and the latter 277 for total. The score:

WALNUT HILL BOWLERS BEATEN

Old Timers Again Walloped by Flanders' Recruits

Flanders' Specials again walloped the veteran team of Walnut Hill bowlers last evening, taking three out of the four points. The veterans were minus the valuable services of Frank Quinn and were badly handicapped on this account, but made a mighty good showing at that.

After losing the first string by 27 pins they got going in good shape in the second and won by 42, securing a 15 pin lead for the point on total with the third string to be rolled. The Specials came back strong and won the last string by 62 wiping out the temporary lead enjoyed by the veterans. The third string gave Flanders' recruits two strings and total, and the honors for the evening. Flanders single of 104 and his total of 290 were high. The summary:

McDONOUGH AND McDONALD WIN

Take Fourth Game in Montvale Pool Series from Mulrenan and Foley

McDonald and McDonough were winners in the fourth game in the Montvale pool tournament played last evening. John Mulrenan second and Peter Foley were the losing team, and it was a spectacular contest from start to finish. Dennie McDonald substituted for Hugh McCall, who was originally drawn as partner to William McDonough. McCall at the last moment found it impossible to play, and Dennie rather than dissappoint the large crowd who had assembled to witness the game volunteered to fill in. And he made good too, his position playing, and occasional sensational shooting keeping his team in the running when his partner was getting bad breaks and poor leaves.

Foley and Mulrenan were out to win, and disputed every inch of the way. At the end of the eighth frame the score stood 60 balls each, and the rooters commenced to pull hard for their favorites. And each team had its share of rooters, a fact which, coupled with some nice shooting helped to make the game one of the most interesting seen in Montvale for many a day.

The players stuck to it, and when at the end of the eleventh frame the scorer announced the standing 84 to 81 in favor of the "Macs" the audience was in an uproar. It was almost impossible from the hearty applause which greeted every skilful shot, regardless of who made it, to determine which team was the favorite, in fact it is safe to say there was no favorite team, the onlookers applauding liberally the good work of all four men, no matter who the performer was, or what effect it had on the outcome of the game.

The "Macs" pocketed 11 balls to 4 for their opponents in the twelfth frame, making their total 95, and in the unlucky thirteenth got the other 5, ending the game.

A beautiful combination by McDonald in the tenth frame followed by a series of nice shots for a run of 8, was one of the features of the game. In the same frame Foley made a remarkable cut shot for the corner pocket running off all the remaining balls, and he was accorded a well deserved hand by the spectators.

In the eighth frame when his team scored 11 balls, Mulrenan was the star, picking off several nice shots, and in the twelfth McDonough did the best execution, and by difficult shooting, starting with a hard combination he was responsible for the score which turned the tide of victory in favor of himself and teammate. Tonight the teams will be Fred Carpenter and Bernard Hanley vs. James Cogan and Lawrence Byron. Last night's game by frames:

Outwitted the Cabby.

One day it was raining very heavily in Berlin, and a wealthy merchant, on leaving the exchange, hailed a cab and asked to be driven to a distant part of the city. On the way the merchant discovered that he had forgotten to put his purse in his pocket. What was to be done? On reaching his destination he got out of the cab and said to the driver: "Will you please give me a match? I have dropped a gold-piece on the floor of the cab." Instanter the cabman whipped up his horse and soon disappeared round the next corner.

TRUSTEES ACCOUNT HAS BEEN FILED

Interesting Facts Regarding Marshall Simonds' Will

Of special interest to the citizens of Burlington is the first account of the trustees under the will of Marshall Simonds, which has just been filed in the probate court at Cambridge. Marshall Simonds died in Woburn in 1905, leaving the residue of his property to the town of Burlington, provided the town accepted certain property in the center of the town, which had been the old Simonds homestead, and dedicated it to the purposes of a park. This the town voted to do and thus received the benefit of the residue of Marshall Simonds' estate. This residue, under the will of the donor, was given to Otis Simonds, James Otis Simonds and Walter W. Skelton, as trustees. The trustees are empowered by the will to expend the funds in their hands for the benefit of Simonds park, so-called, and any balance of income not so expended can, in the discretion of the trustees, be used for any municipal purpose of the town. The account now filed shows that the town received from the trust fund in 1909, the sum of $2,000, for this purpose, and, in 1911, the sum of $1,616.18. The trust fund now held by the trustees amounts to $62,057.27 of invested sesurities, and there is also real estate in Burlington of $2,575 and also some real estate in Chicago. The town of Burlington is certainly fortunate in having such a source of revenue which can be used for any purpose for the benefit of the town.

A certain man purchased a setting of eggs for $15, from which he hatched five cockerels and four pullets. He selected the best cockerel, put him with the four pullets into a Poultry Show, got first prize, and was offered $750 for the five birds.

You have the same chance. To be "at the top" is old fashioned now. The struggle of modern times is to "aviate," soar above the fellow at the top, knock him off his perch, and make a new high record.

To aviate in the poultry business you must have the goods. Get the best eggs you can buy—if only a few, three or four or more—and get them early so they will be fully matured for the Fall Shows.

S. C. White Orpingtons have captured the public heart all over the world. They have a record, point for point, that can't be beaten. Get your eggs from the best pen of the best breed that ever scratched for their living, and they will scratch for yours.

My pen of S. C. White Orpingtons took first at Boston, January 7, 1913. I can furnish eggs from this pen at 60 cents each, one or more as you may want, and baby chicks at 90 cents each. Others at 30 cents each for eggs and 45 cents each for chicks. Get them early and try your luck.

RAILROAD COMMISSION POSTPONES HEARING

Date for Investigation of Passenger Accomodation at Sullivan Square is now March 25

The Massachusetts railroad commissioners have notified City Clerk McHugh that the date for the public hearing on the petition of the city governments of Woburn, Medford and Somerville, which was originally set for Thursday, March 13, has been changed to Tuesday, March 25, at 10.30 o'clock A. M.

The hearing will be held at the office of the commission, 20 Beacon street, and the commission explains the necessity for a change in date by stating that the time set for investigation of other important legislative matters conflicts with the March 13 date.

It is expected that the protest against the present poor system of accommodation from residents of the localities affected will be of such a vigorous nature that the commission will take immediate steps to improve the service.

REGULAR MEETING OF THE WOMAN'S CLUB

Lincoln Wirt tells of the Conquest of the Arctic

Mr. Lincoln Wirt's lecture on "The Conquest of the Arctic" yesterday afternoon was one of the most graphic recitals ever given before the club, a story of personal achievements and adventures such as few men encounter. Tears often dimmed the eyes of his hearers, and then a touch of quaint humor would bring smiles. Some of his descriptions of the aurora, the snow and glaciers, and the appearance of the midnight sun were exquisite. Mr. Wirt with his wife spent several years in what he called America's last frontier. United States paid $7,200,000 for Alaska and has already taken out $600,000,000 and has only just begun to develop what may well be called America's treasure house. The word Alaska means great, and it is indeed great in its many resources and in its future. The journey over the mountains in the summer was difficult enough but not to be compared to the journey back in midwinter. Mr. Wirt said that he had stood on many of the famous mountains of the world but from none could such a view be seen as was spread out before him from these in the heart of Alaska; the stately forests below, for Alaska has timber enough to last the United States for many generations, and above the stretches of snow and ice. The avalanches are to be dreaded. Shortly after his party had crossed a mountain a party of 167 men were buried by an avalanche on the same sopt. The winter was spent in the village of Anvil, named for a great rock near it which is shaped like a blacksmith's anvil. In midwinter the little company was threatened with starvation and disease. The rude hospital had no supplies, doctors or nurses. Help must be had and Mr. Wirt volunteered to undertake the perilous journey of 1250 miles, across ice floes and mountains to the open sea. The story of the hardships and suffering of that awful journey was pathetic indeed.

He said that it never could have been accomplished but for the courage, sagacity and intelligence of his eight dogs. He paid a glowing tribute to his dog "Whiskers," the most faithful friend a man ever had. He finally reached Kodiak island, embarked on the steamer to Seattle, thence across the continent to Washington. As a result of that awful mid-winter tramp the little village of Anvil has a hospital with a doctor and nurses, churches and a school house the nearest to the north pole of any school in the land, and the trail which he opened up for the first time is now a nation's highway with dog teams going from Esquimaux village to village and carrying mail and supplies to those held in the terrors of an eight months' winter. The four conditions which make up the horrors of the northern Arctic winter is first the cold: if he should begin to describe how cold he would be thought cousin to Dr. Cook, or a member of the Ananias club. He had camped out in a temperature of 60 degrees below zero. Second the darkness: in it mind, body and soul grow dark. The longing for light and the sun makes a condition of desperation, mental, spiritual and physical. Then the lonesomness. Fourth the silence. The Eternal stillness.

Mr. Wirt had a pleasing personality and told his story in a manner that held the closest attention of his audience. At the close of the lecture, tea was served under the direction of Mrs. Alice H. Marion, Miss Grace Norris and Mrs. Helen C. Stephenson pouring. The Schubert trio furnished music during the tea.

BOY SCOUTS

One of the best pieces of local news that has come to the JOURNAL office in some time is the information that a branch of Boy Scouts is to be established here in Woburn. As is well known, this organization originated in England and has as its sponsor, Lieutenant General Sir Baden-Powell, and its adaptability to the needs and likes of boys of all countries has caused it to spread within a very few years with remarkable success onto the Continent and also to this country, where its membership is numbered by thousands. The President of the United States is its Honorary President.

Contrary to a wide-spread impression, it is not military in its thought or spirit, although it does instill in boys the military virtues of honor, loyalty and obedience. Most boys are well cared for in the home; in the school, the city provides for their supervision and training; but with most of us we let our boys in their play roam about as they will, and it is the the purpose of the Scout movement to give the boy the pleasure, fun and tasks in which all healthy young fellows delight, yet under such supervision and with such organization as shall unconsciously help him in the development of his character and intelligence. It includes instruction in first aid, life-saving, tracking, signalling, tramping, wood craft, nature-study, camp craft, etc. All that is needed is the out-of-doors, group of boys, and a competent leader. Character building and manhood, not scholarship, is its aim, and its purpose is to make good, wholesome, intelligent, self-contained citizens out of the young manhood of the day.

We understand a public meeting is shortly to be held for the purpose of selecting a council and leaders, and we can only wish that it may be of the same service here in Woburn as it has shown itself to be where it has been in existence in other communities.

HIGH SCHOOL SYSTEMS OVERHAULED

High school methods in Massachusetts were overhauled at a meeting of the State superintendents' association held in Boston yesterday, and some startling statements were made by leading educators. They afford food for earnest thought, and widespread application. There is a growing feeling that present methods are largely based on tradition, and that the age has outgrown them.

It was proposed at this gathering that committees of experienced and successful teachers be formed by subjects or groups of subjects now taught, said committees from time to time to issue bulletins showing the best course of policy and attack to be pursued.

Dr. David Sneeden, Commissioner of Education, denounced severely the present educational methods of the High schools and declared that the courses are determined in large degree by tradition.

"At present we do not know where we are going in High school education," he said. We do not know just why we are teaching certain subjects in the High schools even though we think we do. We do not know where we are going in terms of the ultimate, broad well being of the child who is to be an adult culturally, civically and vocationally efficient. We are coming to a time when we shall have to go through a process of entire reconstruction of every High school subject on lines of more definite direction.

"We are teaching algebra in the schools, teaching it to every child, practically, when not one of us knows why we should teach algebra to any but a prospective engineer. We are teaching Latin, and I don't believe we know why.

"The time has come when we must set up for ourselves more specific aims and find out where we are going. We must not go on teaching subjects because of traditional associations and conservative purposes."

Deputy Commissioner Kingsley said:

"We must bear in mind, that it is the general development of the child that we are all bent on improving and not the development of the subject. The material taught must be a means and not an end.

"We want to take each High school subject or group of subjects separately and have suggestions gathered together from those who are qualified to discuss them, those who have studied theories broadly and sensibly and who have found some way of appealing to the child Get them all together and then tell the rest of the teachers what the result is. Make the teaching of every subject, even if only for a year, of ultimate advantage to the child, no matter what he may do thereafter."

The agricultural course in high schools, and its relation to the state college were discussed, at length.

Resolutions were passed for the appointment of a committee to confer with the authorities of the Massachusetts Agricultural college and the board of education so that the relation of the former with the new county agricultural school may be defined. An effort will be made to have any subject which counts for graduation in a high school included among the subjects which count for admission to the college.

A NEW MOTOR CAR

A very attractive motor car is being exhibited by Robert T. Portal who has accepted the agency for Woburn, Stoneham, Reading and Wakefield.

The Stutz car is a 50 H.P. machine weighing only 3300 pounds, easily the most powerful and fleetest car of its class on the market. It is made in Indianapolis by the Stutz Motor Car company and represents the latest cry in high grade workmanship and up-to-date equipment.

The car is made with 4 or 6 cylinders, and has a wheel base of 124 inches. Its outlines are graceful, and its finish makes it one of the most attractive motor vehicles offered for public inspection. The price of the car is based on the cost of first class construction and high grade material: 4 cylinder, $2000; 6 cylinder, $2300 f.o.b. Indianapolis.

Mr. Portal will be at the Automobile show in Boston all of next week, but may be reached in Woburn by calling, Woburn 163—4, or 399.

ARRIVED HOME FROM WASHINGTON

Major Walker Tells of Last Days of Trip and the Return

Thursday morning we visited the National Museum. There were things there to interest all of us. We saw paintings by Corot, Rembrandt, Sir Joshua Reynolds and many other noted artists, but the ones that interested us all the most were the marine paintings of Edward Moran. In the afternoon we visited the Navy Yard. We went through the machine shops and saw the guns in different stages of construction. We saw one that had just been completed "The Pride of the Navy" a 14-inch gun, weighing 74 tons and effective at a range of 8 miles.

Friday morning the "first call" awoke us at 4.30 a. m. and at 7 we were aboard the train. As the ride lasted seven hours many of us took this opportunity to make up the sleep we had missed during the last week. As the train was late we only had about an hour and a half in New York and we spent this in a walk on Broadway, Wall street and about the Battery. We came to Fall River on the same boat that we went on, the "Providence." On the dock at Fall River was a special train waiting to take us home.

The trip to Washington was enjoyed, I think, by all, but I know that we eight High school fellows had the best time of our lives. We cannot express too strongly our gratitude to Captain Kean and the others in the company for the way we were treated and the splendid opportunity which their generosity and hospitality afforded us.

S. GORIN GRANTED TEMPORARY INJUNCTION

Judge Hall Issues Restraining Order in Business Controversy

Solomon Gorin, shoe repairer of 474 Main street, who for years has enjoyed a very satisfactory portion of the patronage of Woburn people, has secured a temporary injunction against Bernard Gorin and Nehias Gorin prohibiting them from doing business under the name of Solomon Gorin.

The injunction issued from Judge Hall at the East Cambridge court house, and Solomon Gorin was represented by Attorney William H. Scharton who represents "Dakota Dan" in the famous Russell will case. The defendants were not present, and proceedings have been instituted to secure a permanent injunction and to recover damages. The immediate cause for legal action was the opening of a boot and shoe repairing shop on Main street under the name of S. Gorin in the vicinity of the place of business of the petitioner Solomon Gorin, who has been established under the business name of S. Gorin for many years.

The next lecture in the 21st annual Burbeen Free lecture course will be given in Lyceum hall Monday evening, when Professor Frank W. C. Hersey head of the English department at Harvard University will speak on "Italy." The lecture will be finely illustrated. Prof. Hersey is one of the brightest platform lights of the present age, and under his treatment the land of art and poetry and sunshine will be presented in a delightful manner. We believe Prof. Hersey will be greeted by an old-fashioned Burbeen audience.

AUTOMOBILE SHOW

Boston has had many trade shows, and there is probably no city in the country that supports these shows so loyally. This in a great measure is due to the fact that in no other city so much care and attention is paid to actual setting of these exhibitions. This is to a great extent due to the man, who, during the past decade, has been the power behind, and that the public appresiates this is evident by the success that has attended every exhibition that Manager Chester I. Campbell has had in charge.

However, "the Show is the thing," and the one that has been the most talked of is the Annual Show under the auspices of the Boston Automobile Dealers association. With a small beginning, just 10 years ago, small because at that time only a few crude cars were in existence, each year the annual exhibition of this association has been improved at a wonderful ratio, until last year when it seemed the acme of exhibits and beautiful settings had been reached.

But the management said, "No," even better things were coming and this year would show its usual great improvement. Briefly, the management have "made good." Never before in an exhibition with such a short run has there been so much money expended in decorations. For months scores of skilled workmen have been making ready and last Tuesday, when the building was taken over, more than 500 men started erecting a setting that simply transformed the Mechanic's building. In Grand hall "The Hanging Gardens of Bablyon" were represented as the theme and such celebrated scenic artists as Ernest Albert and Walter Burradge are responsible for the magnificent paintings that drape the ceiling and walls. Thousands of vari-colored electric lights, electric fountains and illuminated flowers add to the beauty of the scene and enhance the splendid array of cars shown.

In Exhibition hall one is taken back to our grandparents. In the "Garden of 100 years ago," Architect Campbell's conceit for his decorative scheme he has presented a really "homey" picture and any one who loves the green fields, flowers and the old picket fence will enjoy the rustic simplicity. Everywhere one turned the sounds of sweet music met the ear as no less than four orchestras were provided. The throng on Saturday evening was immense. Not less than 40,000 people surged through the huge building from 7 o'clock until the closing time at 10.30, enjoying the decorations, the beautiful cars, and wonderful accessories.

The Show should prove a great success as it deserves to be, and as all predict that the coming year will be a good one for industry much business will probably be done the coming week. Wednesday will as usual be "Society Day" when the price of admission is boosted from 50 cents regularly to $1.00 for that day. This seems to have no effect on attendance as it is always the banner day of the week. Closing the pleasure car section on March 15, there will be three days leeway when the great trucks will be shown, a truck for every business and every purpose, say the management. This sestion runs from March 19, to 26 when the 1913 Auto Shows will become history.

COLONIAL THEAARE

All Boston remembers how a year ago, after fifteen weeks of capacity houses at the Colonial theatre, Klaw & Erlinger's production of "The Pink Lady" was compelled to leave in order to prepare for the London engagement at the Globe theatre which lasted for twenty triumphant weeks. Since then this, the most popular musical comedy of many years, has been seen in the larger cities with the original cast, and everywhere the Boston triumph has been duplicated. Now these favorite players, who are so pleasantly remembered here, are coming back to the Colonial, Boston, to resume the interrupted run. Frank Lalor is still the Dondidier and Hazel Dawn the lady in pink. Alice Dovey as Angele and Alice Hegeman as Mme. Dondidier will also be here. Then there are Jack Henderson, Louis Kelley, Craufurd Kent, William Clifton, Jed Prouty, Eddie Morris, Juanita Fletcher, Flora Crosbie, Charles Bird, Joseph Carey, Violini, S. S. Humerson, Edward Tarver, Mae Carmen, May Hennessy, Teddy Hudson, Jean Barnette and Marie Benedict and all the familiar names.

The company still numbers nearly one hundred, the Pink of Perfection chorus is as charming as ever, and the production spick and span, with new costumes that were imported from Paris for this tour.

BOSTON THEATRE

The remarkably successful engagement of Robert Hichens' and Mary Anderson Navarro's interesting play, "The Garden of Allah" is now entering upon its last two weeks at the Boston theatre. The engagement it is now definitely announced, ends Saturday, March 22.

The play, as a drama follows closely the novel of Robert Hichens and tells the story of a monk, Boris, who becomes dissatisfied with life in a monastery, runs away and finds himself in the desert, in search of peace and quietude. He meets another restless soul like himself, a wanderer, but a young and attractive woman, Domini Enfilden, with whom he falls in love and whom he eventually marries.

Two of the most pretentious and alluring of the scenes are shown twice in the course of the performance, the garden of Count Anteoni, which is dispayed throughout part two, and is shown again in the epilogue, and a section of the desert at Mogar, which is shown as part three, under the varying atmospheric conditions of evening and dawn.

B. F. KEITH'S THEAARE

Who is the possessor of the best known face in the civilized world? This man is not a statesman, a great general, or a monarch, but John Bunny, the famous comedian, who has appeared as the central character in over 3,000.000 different pictures. These prints have been distributed all over the civilized world, and it is safe to say that there is scarcely a city or town where moving pictures are shown on the face of the globe, that has not laughed at the antics of Mr. Bunny. Bunny's face is his fortune. The engagement of this famous comedian to appear at B. F. Keith's theatre next week is another brilliant stroke on he part of Mr. Keith. John Bunny will appear in a new and original monologue, written especially for him, besides introducing a special moving picture of himself taken for this engagement. The countless thousands throughout New England who have laughed at Mr. Bunny in "the movies" will not want to miss this opportunity to see the original. The wonderful Thomas A. Edison "Talking Motion Pictures," or Kinetophone, will be continued for a third triumphant week, with all new subjects. Other big attractions of a brilliant bill will be the Australian Woodchoppers, champion woodmen of the world; Eddie Leonard, the famous minstrel man; Madge Maitland, the character comedienne; the Empire Comedy Four in songs and funmaking; A. O. Duncan, the premier vantriloquist; Redford and Winchester, juggling comiques, and other big attractions yet to be announced.

Children's Natural Way of Talking

Improvement in School by Practice Under Proper Direction

PUPILS ARE RESPONSIVE

By George Lincoln Clapp

On the contrary what the teacher says and does produces a different feeling in the pupils. Perhaps his way of keeping order produces fear, his way of criticizing pupils generates dread, his reckless sarcasm causes derision and contempt. Under such conditions talking, properly so called, cannot be even started, much less sustained. Even in recitations in history, geography, grammar and arithmetic the pupil will be on their guard not to say too much to be commented upon, show a decided disposition to sit down, and say they understand a point under consideration when they do not, so as to escape the usual galling fire of questions and supplementary comments. Here is one reason for children's reticence in talking in the school room, not to mention lack of attention, disorder, etc. Pestalozzi said, "I would go so far as to lay it down as a rule, that whenever children are inattentive and apparently take no interest in a lesson, the teacher should always first look to himself for a reason."

What passes for talking on stories and history is merely reciting. It is compulsory, without enthusiasm, often without interest, without individuality in expression by any possibility, because the ideas, words and phraseology are those of the book, and, to complete the antithesis to talking properly so called, no digestive and assimilative process, such as characterizes talking is required or ezpected. So there is no talking about it and it is of little value in developing the power to talk well.

Suppose a school boy should declaim Webster's "Reply to Hayne," and some one should imagine and declare that he made an eloquent speech. The words and ideas were Webster's, the memory and vocal expression the boy's. The boy became a graphophone for the occasion. In the case of the recitation it is much the same, the words and ideas being those of the author, the memory and vocal expression being those of the reciter Talking is fundamentally different from that.

*The study of nearer things than stories and history will help children to talk intelligently, interestingly, and perhaps, eloquently in the future. How it has been done will be described later. Those things are more natural and attractive for their study and practice in talking than stories and history, because the ideas are obtained from the things themselves, and the proper words have been fitted to characteristics so closely and repeatedly that real knowledge and real expression of it, or talk, result inevitably.

Those things are such as touch them on every side in their environment, flowers, minerals, earth, water, birds, insects, natural phenomena, simple experimental works with sand, paper, wood, blocks, etc., local industries, neighborhood geography, and other simple and appropriate things. Such things are within the range of the children's understanding, a very important matter. They are simple enough and complex enough to tax the faculties of children all the way from the kindergarten through the grammar grades, at least, to any desirable extent. They are accessible every day, neither remote nor historical. The children can employ all their senses upon them, and generally do so with interest, even delight, when they are permitted to have them, because they naturally stimulate the senses to pleasurable self-activity by beauty of form, color, or motion, agreeable qualities, and perfect adaptability to satisfy the children's curiosity and desire to handle, arrange and make things of a childish kind. These near, understandable, and adaptable things are the best possible to start and continue talking of a genuine kind. The extensive and varied vocabulary acquired in their study is of the clearest and most serviceable nature. When they desire to talk and make sentences in the first grade they are prepared in the right way and to the right extent. With such suitable preparation there is a clarity in the composition writing, as well as an eagerness to do it, that cannot possibly be understood or appreciated by teachers who do not use such means, and it is nearly always futile to simply talk with them, on the subject of cultivating talk and composition by the best means. Incredulity comes up and stays up. So blinding are old methods handed down to us from archaic times. Only when they observe the children so educated (for all the essential features for education are incorporated in the work) actually at work and producing generally results that they may have seen before only occasionally in individual cases will they believe or partly believe. Many believe that there is some trick about the work. It is well nigh impossible for those who use dull tools in hard cross-grained ways to believe in the results obtained by those who use sharp tools along the lines of least resistance.

Testimony to the same effect is found in the work and words of live educators somewhat sparsely scattered over the United States. Here is one piece from Frederick T. Gates, chairman of the board of education and promoter of a new era in rural school management in the West. "The moment we cease to pursue the three R's as abstract ends, disassociated with anything which the child has experienced, and bring them forward only when and as the child needs to use them in his business, he will pick them up as readily as ball and bat. The difficulties of school life, disciplinary and otherwise are of the teacher's making. (This last statement certainly needs considerable qualification.) They belong to a false method that has become traditional. How do we teach children to use carpenter's tools, for illustration? By studying pictures of these tools in books or by putting the tools themselves into the hands of the children, with the material to work upon and things to make? Precisely so with the three R's. They are nothing in the world but tools. Give them to the children as tools that they now need in something definitely put before them, and they will learn to use them easily and naturally. Nature studies shall acquaint every child with all that he can take in of that portion of nature which lies about him, in the waters below him, in the clouds and skies above him. The children shall learn the names of all the trees, their leaves, the peculiarities of their branching, their methods of growth, their value and use; the names also of all the wild birds, their songs and their habits. Curiosity shall be aroused about the mysteries in the waters, in the fields, and in the forests. Insect life not less than plant life shall disclose wondrous secrets to their eager eyes, so that the minds of the children shall be filled with interesting themes of thought, and their glance, wherever it falls, shall beam with intelligence and inquiry. So the children shall be kept from torpor and vacancy of mind. The breath of life shall be breathed into their clay, and they shall at last become living souls."

All this in that region is as yet an aspiration, a prospect, a prophecy, a plan determined upon, but not yet worked out. Will it fail? Never. Eternal truth and justice are its foundation stones. The same material and a similar plan were tried out with the utmost definiteness and thoroughness two score years ago in the east. The results accomplished were precisely, so far as words convey the meaning, such as Mr. Gates aspires to attain. Moreover, other valuable results, apparently not dreamed of or, at least, not mentioned, in Mr. Gate's plan, were obtained—the greatest eagerness and power to talk and write on natural science topics and life round about them, and that power was transferred to every subject in the course, so that there was real talk in arithmetic and all subjects in which the words and ideas of the book could not be committed to memory easily, and the frequent discussions seemed to be based on well filled storehouses ready for any corner in the word market. Talking was a fact, not a delusion nor a pretense.

*It should have been stated before this writing that, whatever comments, criticisms, or commendations are made in these articles, they have no special reference to local conditions unless so stated plainly, the writer having no special knowledge of such conditions, but are based on a long experience in many schools in various cities and towns.

COTTERS GIANTS SWAMP LYON'S COLTS

Last night in the absence of their captain, the Cotter's Giants put the Indian sign on to their ancient enemies, the Lyon's Colts, led by Captain "Ed" Lyons. It was some match from start to finish. The shouts, cheers, yelling and noises of all kinds, issuing from the alleys would make an outsider think of an Indian war dance or a jamboree.

Some old timers were in the lineups, among them being Fred Lowell and Alvah Buckman. After the Giants won the first string, the Colts tried to come back, but no avail, they hadn't the come back qualities. Frank Davis was high man for the evening, getting 127 and 311 for a total. The summary:

Richardson, has one and one half years of his term to serve yet, and so the contest hsa some time in which to develop.

Maintained Belief in Ignorance.

Opposition to state education in the past was due largely to a belief that too much learning was not good for the masses. The worthy Hannah More even, who was one of the most earnest supporters of the movement for the establishment of schools for the poor in England, had very definite ideas as to how far the children should be educated. The curriculum, she declared, should comprise only reading the Bible and the catechism, and "such coarse works as may fit the children for servants," adding decisively, "I allow of no writing for the poor."

Infants Demand "Ragtime."

A song writer says ragtime is as legitimate music as the lullaby. "The ragtime," he says, "marks the passing of the old-fashioned mother who lullabied the baby into dreamland. Today the infant is 'ragged' to sleep, and, according to the statement of an experienced nursery maid, they will not close an eye unless this particular kind of music is hummed while they are being rocked."

Undaunted Lover.

"Muriel," said the old gentleman, sharply, "that young man you had in the parlor last night is dull of comprehension. All I had to do was cough when the other chaps remained too late, and they would take the hint and depart. Did this one say anything when I coughed last night?" "Yes," replied the beautiful daughter; "he said the next time he called he was going to bring you some cough-drops."

Recipe for Love Letter.

To write a good love letter you ought to begin without knowing what you mean to say and to finish without knowing what you have written.—Rousseau.

INITIALS ONLY.

—BY—

Anna Catherine Green.

Orlando's frown deepened.

"Such grief I partly understand," said he. "But time will cure it. Some day another lovely face—"

"We'll not talk of that, Orlando."

"No, we'll not talk of that," acquiesced the inventor, walking away again, this time to the window. "For you there's but one woman—and she's a memory."

"Killed!" broke from his brother's lips. "Slain by her own hand under an impulse of wildness and terror! Can I ever forget that? Do not expect it, Orlando."

"Then you do blame me?" Orlando turned and was looking full at Oswald. "I blame your unreasonableness and your overweening pride."

Orlando stood a moment, then moved towards the door. The heaviness of his step smote upon Oswald's ear and caused him to exclaim:

"Forgive me, Orlando." But the other cut him short with an imperative: "Thanks for your candor! If her spirit is destined to stand like an immovable shadow between you and me, you do right to warn me. But this interview must end all allusion to the subject. I will seek and find another man to share my fortunes! (as he said this he approached suddenly, and took his papers from the other's hand) or —" Here he hastily retraced his steps to the door which he softly opened. "Or," he repeated—but though Oswald listened for the rest, it did not come. While he waited, the other had given him one deeply concentrated look and passed out.

No heartfelt understanding was possible between these two men.

Crossing the hall, Orlando knocked at the door of Doris' little sitting-room.

No answer, yet she was there. He knew it in every throbbing fiber of his body. She was there and quite aware of his presence; of this he felt sure; yet she did not bid him enter. Should he knock again? Never! but he would not quit the threshold, not if she kept him waiting there for hours. Perhaps she realized this. Perhaps she had meant to open the door to him from the very first, who can tell? What avails is that she did ultimately open it, and he, meeting her soft eye, wished from his very heart that his impulse had led him another way, even if that way had been to the edge of the precipice—and over.

For the face he looked upon was serene, and there was no serenity in him; rather a confusion of unloosed passions fearful of barrier and yearning tumultuously for freedom. But, whatever his revolt, the secret revolt which makes no show in look or movement, he kept his ground and forced a smile of greeting. If her face was quiet, it was also lovely—too lovely, he felt, for a man to leave it, whatever might come of his lingering.

Nothing in all his life had ever affected him like it. For him there was no other woman in the past, the present or the future, and, realizing this—taking in to the full what her affection and her trust might be to him in those fearsome days to come, he so dreaded a rebuff—he, who had been the courted of women and the admired of men ever since he could remember—that he failed to respond to her welcome and the simple congratulations she felt forced to repeat. He could neither speak the commonplace, nor listen to it. This was his crucial hour. He must find support here, or yield hopelessly to the maelstrom in whose whirl he was caught.

She saw his excitement and faltered back a step—a move which she regretted the next minute, for he took advantage of it to enter and close behind him the door which she would never have shut of her own accord. Then he spoke, abruptly, passionately, but in those golden tones which no emotion could render other than alluring:

"I am an unhappy man, Miss Scott. I see that my presence here is not welcome, yet am sure that it would be so if it were not for a prejudice which your generous nature should be the first to cast aside, in face of the outspoken confidence of my brother Oswald. Doris, little Doris, I love you. I have loved you from the moment of our first meeting. Not to many men is it given to find his heart so late, and when he does, it is for his whole life; no second passion can follow it. I know that I am premature in saying this; that you are not prepared to hear such words from me and that it might be wiser for me to withhold them, but I must leave Derby soon, and I cannot go until I know whether there is the least hope that you will yet lend a light to my career or whether that career must burn itself to ashes at your feet. Oswald—nay, hear me out—Oswald lives in his memories; but I must have an active hope—a tangible expectation—if I am to be the man I was meant to be. Will you, then, coldly dismiss me, or will you let my whole future life prove to you the innocence of my past? I will not hasten anything; all I ask is some indulgence. Time will do the rest."

"Impossible," she murmured.

But that was a word for which he had no ear. He saw that she was moved, unexpectedly so; that while her eyes wandered restlessly at times towards the door, they ever came back in girlish wonder, if not fascination, to his face, emboldening him so that he ventured at last, to add:

"Doris, little Doris, I will teach you a marvellous lesson, if you will only turn your dainty ear my way. Love such as mine carries infinite treasure with it. Will you have that treasure heaped, piled before your feet? Your lips say no, but your eyes—the truest eyes I ever saw—whisper a different language. The day will come when you will find your joy in the breast of him you are now afraid to trust." And not waiting for disclaimer or even a glance of reproach from the eyes he had so wilfully misread, he withdrew with a movement as abrupt as that with which he had entered.

Why, then, with the memory of this exultant hour to fend off all shadows, did the midnight find him in his solitary hangar in the moonlit woods, a deeply desponding figure again. Beside him swung the huge machine which represented a life of power and luxury; but he no longer saw it. It called to him with many a creak and quiet snap—sounds to start his blood and fire his eye a week—nay, a day ago. But he was deaf to this music now; the call went unheeded; the future had no further meaning for him, nor did he know or think whether he sat in light or in darkness; whether the woods were silent about him, or panting with life and sound. His demon had gripped him again and the final battle was on. There would never be another. Mighty as he felt himself to be, there were limits even to his capacity for endurance. He could sustain no further conflict. How then would it end? He never had a doubt himself! Yet he sat there.

Around him in the forest, the night owls screeched and innumerable small things without a name, skurried from lair to lair.

He heard them not.

Above, the moon rode, flecking the deepest shadows with the silver from her half-turned urn, but none of the soft and healing drops fell upon him. Nature was no longer a goddess, but an avenger; light a revealer, not a solace. Darkness the only boon.

Nor had time a meaning. From early eve to early morn he sat there and knew not if it were one hour or twelve. Earth was his no longer. He roused, when the sun made everything light about him, but he did not think about it. He rose, but was not conscious that he rose. He unlocked the door and stepped out into the forest; but he could never remember doing this. He only knew later that he had been in the woods and now was in his room at the hotel; all the rest was phantasmagoria, agony and defeat.

He had crossed the Rubicon of this world's hopes and fears, but he had been unconscious of the passage.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

The Avenger.

"Dear Mr. Challoner:

"With every apology for the intrusion, may I request a few minutes of private conversation with you this evening at seven o'clock? Let it be in your own room.

"Yours truly,

"ORLANDO BROTHERSON."

Mr. Challoner had been called upon to face many difficult and heartrending duties since the blow which had desolated his home fell upon him.

But from none of them had he shrunk as he did from the interview thus demanded. He had supposed himself rid of this man. He had dismissed him from his life when he had dismissed Sweetwater. His face, accordingly, wore anything but a propitiatory look, when promptly at the hour of seven, Orlando Brotherson entered his apartments.

Winning the Greatest Things.

It is flattering to our lower natures to be envied. But for the esteem that is worth having, one kindly action, one tender, considerate word, will do more than the fullest measure of glittering success. Hustling, pushing, grabbing, will win many rewards according to their desert; the nature of the reward meets the nature of the effort. But they will not win affection, they will not win tenderness and love. —Exchange.

Judge's Two Rules.

Judge Hans Hamilton, at the Blackpool (Eng.) county court, replying to an expression of regret at his forthcoming retirement, said that, in order to expedite business and save time, he always had in front of him, written in large letters upon a piece of blotting paper, the words: "Do not talk. Do not make jokes."

HANLEY SHINES IN MONTVALE TOURNAMENT

Gives Remarkable Exhibition of Pool—Score 100 to 48 in Favor of His Team

Carpenter and Hanley won the pool game in the Montvale tournament last evening, only ten frames being necessary for them to subdue the strong Cogan and Byron combination. The score was 100 to 48.

There was little surprise exhibited when Hanley throughout the entire game made shot after shot that was next to impossible, because the dapper shoemaker has long since by superior pool playing made the Montvale boys tip their hats to his skill. But at that the blond haired expert outdid himself last evening, and he was the whole show, making the other players, even his teammate look like second ratres. After the first frame when Hanley and Carpenter got the short end of a 9 to 6 score Hanley found himself, and while Carpenter helped at intervals it was distinctively a one man game and practically all the long runs, interspersed with swell pool shooting must be credited to Hanley. Combination shots, difficult cuts from any old position, and long straight drives, the full length of the table didn't bother him a particle. He had his eye with him, and not once during the game did he falter. It was easily the best individual exhibition of pool playing of the present series, and the gallery was not slow to show its appreciation, applauding the clever Hanley repeatedly for his remarkable work.

It must not be inferred that Carpenter, Cogan and Byron did not at times shoot some pool, but they were completely lost by comparison with the star of the evening, and their playing which on other occasions might be described as good, looked very ordinary. Carpenter in the sixth frame made a run of 12, and it required steady playing and several handsome shots before he completed the run. Byron showed class in a number of frames but did his best work in the seventh, when he gave his admirers a chance to root by a series of clever drives.

Cogan awakened sweet memories among his friends, by occasionally picking off a hard combination or else by the most delicate cut imaginable landing the object ball into a pocket when the feat appeared almost out of question. His work recalled to the boys the days when he won a gold watch in a single man tournament, and was the recognized Montvale pool champion. Tonight the fun goes on, Bartholomew and Scanlon and Douglass Cairns vs. B. J. Golden and Anthony Lux will be the competing teams. Last night's score by frames:

RETURN OF G COMPANY

From Enjoyable Trip to Inaugural Exercises at Washington

At 8.51 this morning G company 5th regiment M.V.M. Capt. Fred C. Kean commanding arrived in this city, after one of the most enjoyable trips in its history.

Capt. Kean is happy to report that throughout the trip no cases of indisposition occured and that the boys behaved in an exemplory manner from departure to arrival, no breach of discipline taking place during the trip.

The captain is very enthusiastic over the details of the inaugural services, and was deeply impressed by the manner in which the great multitude listened to the words of the incoming executive. With twenty officers, Capt. Kean attended a reception at the White House where he met, shook hands and conversed with the President in the famous East room of the executive mansion. He was present when the delegation of Indian chiefs was received, and bestowed upon the president a pipe of peace and a pair of handwrought moccasins.

He says there seemed to be no such classes as Republicans or Democrats in Washington. So greatly does the president impress all who meet him, they are Wilson men rather than party followers. Capt. Kean met old acacquaintances of Spanish-American war days. Among them was Capt. Fred Austin, from whom he received an invitation which he accepted to visit Fort Myers in Virginia He is very enthusiastic over military excellence he found in this noted army post.

He also called on General Weafer, now chief of staff in the U.S.A. artillery corps, and at one time Lieut Colonel of the 5th Mass. M.V.M In Capt. Kean's opinion the high standing of the 5th today is largely due to Gen. Weafer's efforts when he was its commander.

The captain saw both houses of congress in session, got a good view of Speaker Champ Clark, and admires his ability and personality. He saw Senators Lodge and Crane, and many of the state representatives. The dignity of the proceedings in both houses was especially marked and will never be forgotten.

Capt. Kean is confident the country will never regret its presidential choice, and he is proud to recall that he and his command had a slight share in the popular demonstration, and equally proud of the conduct of the men of G. Co.

The Misses Stickney who will take part in the service at the First church on Sunday evening will be remembered from their appearance at Lyceum jhall in the Baraca course. The large attendance at the People's services testify to the appreciation of the public. A still larger congregation should be present this week.

Better Than Drugs.

For people who are severely troubled with the inability to sleep soundly, some diversion is needed, a party, an entertainment or theater. Reading poets and philosophers will help, and very often a hot drink will prove a great help in inducing a natural and restful sleep. But, above all, breathe deeply of good pure air just before retiring, and have your sleeping room well ventilated.

FOUND DEAD AT NEIGHBOR'S HOUSE

Mrs. Francis Maguire Expires at Home of Peter McLaughlin Lake Avenue

Mrs. Mary Maguire, wife of Francis Maguire of 9 Buck street, was found dead early this morning, at the home of Peter McLaughlin, 11 Lake avenue. She went there yesterday afternoon and it is supposed that she spent the night there. The exact cause of death is as yet unknown, but Medical Examiner William H. Keleher will perform an autopsy tomorrow morning at the undertaking rooms of B. J. McLaughlin. When Dr. Keleher was summoned this morning to view the remains, he could not get any information concerning the circumstances of the death, although he made numerous inquiries. The body of the woman was found in an entry, and it is believed that she had lain there for some time before occupants of the house found her.

DESPERATE ATTEMPT AT SELF DESTRUCTION

Dennis J. Maguire, Commits Deed while Temporarily Deranged

Dennis J. Maguire, 35 years of age, living with his family at 13 Kendall street, Winchester, while rendered temporarily insane by his inability to secure employment after having been out of work for several weeks, made a desperate attempt at self-destruction yesterday afternoon during the absence of the other members of the family. Securing a razor, he slashed his throat from ear to ear.

At three o'clock yesterday afternoon his wife and child went to the Winchester hospital to visit a sister of Mrs. Maguire. Returning, Mrs. Maguire found the doors locked and calling Albert R. Libbey a neighbor, they looked through the windows and saw Mr. Maguire on the floor of the kitchen. Chief of Police McIntosh was notified and with Patrolman McCauley forced an entrance. They found the man alive, and Drs. Sheehy and Brown were summoned. The physicians sewed the wound and ordered Maguire committed to Danvers. When the police first arrived Maguire fought desperately.

Mr. Maguire is well known in Woburn. He drove a grocery wagon for John Maloney and afterward was employed at the freight yard of the B. & M. railroad. He has been out of work for several weeks and it is thought that his inability to secure employment preyed upon his mind until he became despondent and temporarily unbalanced.

WILLIAM REDFORD PASSED AWAY

Old Time Provision Dealer Died Yesterday at 9 Bennett Street

William Redford, one of Woburn's best known and respected citizens passed away yesterday at his home, 9 Bennett street. He was born in Roxbury 65 years ago, the son of James and Mary (Gibson) Redford, and came to live in Woburn at an early age. He was at one time a prosperous local provision dealer, doing business in the old railroad depot at the Main street crossing.

Mr. Redford suffered severe internal injuries 20 years ago when the staircase of the old auditorium, since destroyed by fire, collapsed. It was the occasion of a popular public function and with others, Mr. Redford went down when the staircase gave way. His back was badly injured, and he had been unable to work since the accident.

He leaves a wife. Funeral services will be held Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the late home of the deceased.

PEOPLE'S SERVICE AT THE FIRST CHURCH

Auditorium Filled with Large and Appreciative Audience

The large auditorium of the First church, was filled with an appreciative audience at the peoples' service last evening, and the program was one of the best of the season. The musical features were exceptionally fine and well rendered, the large chorus of over 40 voices singing a number of selections and there were violin and 'cello selections by the Misses Stickney of Boston and bass solos by Charles H. Furber.

Dr. Norton gave a very interesting and timely talk on the life and work of David Livingston. The pastor's address was especially apt, as this month marks the centennial anniversary of the birth of Livingston.

Beginning with the birth of the noted scientist-reformer in the humble Scotch village, Dr. Norton gave the story of his life and work in a simple but intersting and comprehensive manner, dwelling especially on his absolute honesty of purpose, his integrity, his work in the missionary field, and his contributions to science, making special reference to his efforts in behalf of humanity in Africa.

He called attention to the work he did in combatting the slave trade carried on by the Arabs, a single-handed battle against an organized body of thieves and highwaymen, and gave many pertinent facts regarding the work and accomplishments of this great man, whose life was devoted to the uplift of humanity.

RUBBER GLOVES

It is surprising how many are astonished at how cheaply they can buy rubber gloves.

Frequently we hear the remark, "If I had known that I could get rubber gloves at that price I would have had them long ago."

Spring season is the time when rubber gloves are most needed. House-cleaning with the use of strong chemicals like ammonia, furniture polishes, etc., quickly makes the hands unsightly unless protected by rubber gloves.

The transplanting of flowers or other light work about the garden during springtime becomes a pleasure if the hands are protected by rubber gloves.

We have just received a new stock of 50c rubber gloves which we will sell for the next ten days at 39c each

These gloves are guaranteed perfect.

We also carry a heavier and better glove for $1.00 a pair

A KNOCKOUT BLOW

Well! Well! Well! Isn't it a shame! Here's Postmaster General Burleson, one of President Wilson's cabinet, announcing that no republican postmaster is to be turned out in order to make way for a democrat no matter how active the latter may have been in the recent national campaign. He further says that republican officials will be permitted to serve out the time for which they were appointed except in cases where misconduct or inefficiency is proven. Wouldn't that jar you?

Right here in Woburn the budding hopes of at least ten hungry aspirants for Postmaster Wyer's position will be nipped by the stinging frost of this edict. And they were busy too, corralling the support of town committee men, and others more or less prominent in party circles. Some of them were ridiculous to be sure, and their claim for advancement made them the laughing stock of their party fellows, but they were hungry just the same.

When the JOURNAL thinks of the long fast covering three years that is before them, and ot the "hope deferred that maketh the heart sick" it is almost tempted to shed a sympathetic tear. But as they sing in "Pinafore" Burleson "himself hath said it," and it goes. There are only two avenues of relief for these patriots so sadly rebuffed by the powers that be—go to work or apply for help at the outside relief department.

In earnest, however, Postmaster General Burleson's decision will meet the hearty approval of thinking men of all parties. It is of course a solar plexus for those who believe that "to the victor belongs the spoils," or with George the Third of England who said "Any man is good enough for any office he can get," but to "the loyal, the patriotic, and the forward-looking men" to whom President Wilson appealed in his matchless inaugural it has an honest ring.

Representative J. H. Parker Jr., requests the JOURNAL to say that if Woburn is to benefit this year under the apportionment for parkway construction, it is highly necessary that all land options be signed at the office of J. W. and E. F. Johnson this week. Land owners, who have so far delayed signifying their willingness to come into the agreement, are hereby notified that their failure to act if adhered to will prevent the institution of the work upon an improvement that must enhance the value of every foot of land adjacent to or in the neighborhood of the parkway reservation.

Man's Superiority Early Shown.

Rude sculpture dating back, scientific authorities believe, at least 200,000 years, show that primitive man made representations of other creatures at a stage of human development when the conditions of existence were little in advance of those prevailing among the higher mammals of that period. But no other denizen of the earth manifested the slightest desire or ability to make images of anything.

The People's Forum

A PLEA FOR REFORM

Editor Woburn JOURNAL:

We have had a little over two months' experience with the new administration. It was hoped and expected that there would be many reforms, and a better condition of things prevailing in Woburn but this has not come to pass. That same evil element that guided affairs the last few years, and brought such havoc and shame to Woburn, is evidently still behind the scene, and controls things. What is the use of changing the name of the mayor, and not change the policy of the government? I tell you Mr. Editor, things have come to such a pass in Woburn that something has to be done, and that quickly. Look at the disgraceful condition of things, the other night, at the fire at the Central house. Here was an incipient fire, at the start, which could have been put out by a single fire extinguisher, if promptly and properly used, but what happened? The fire department was late, and when they tried to get a stream on to the fire the hydrant right opposite the fire was found out of order and several minutes were wasted in efforts to make it respond to its requirements. Finally the firemen got a hydrant in front of Whitcher's drug store and travelled down through Park street, passing a hydrant on Park street that was a hundred yards nearer the fire than the one that had been connected with (all through the ignorance of the firemen of its location.)

The old dilapidated engine was there, and must have been brought to the scene of the fire more as a joke by the firemen than anything else. The water pumping station had to be called up before a sufficient supply of water could be had. Look at our humiliation in having to call on two neighboring towns for help for such a small fire. What must have been the opinions of the firemen of these two companies that came to our relief, of Woburn's inefficiency to cope with a most ordinary fire. I tell you Mr. Editor, it comes to about as near disgrace as it is possible, for one to have to admit he is a citizen of Woburn, and, as I say, something has got to be done. Look at the small towns all around us that are all getting the most up-to-date fire autos, while we are squandering money in trying to restore an antiquated old fire engine that even if made to do better work than it ever did, so far as it's pumping power is concerned, still remains an unfit instrument, the way things are going today. What we need most is an up-to-date fire auto, something on the style of that of Wakefield or better, let it cost what it may. Look at the immense territory Woburn covers, and that nine-tenths of the buildings are nothing but fire traps, and in many cases burn to the ground before our inadequate antideluvian fire department can get to the scene for action. With an up-to-date fire auto it would be possible, from the first alarm, to have it on the scene of action anywhere from two to five minutes, in nearby sections, and ten minutes at the most extreme point. We all know what a rotten condition of things exists in the road department of the city, and now it would appear as if the fire department was as bad if not worse. Incompetency and indifference permeating the whole outfit from top to bottom. The stand you have taken, and your editorials, regarding the Central house fire, were to the point, and must have been appreciated by all good minded Woburn citizens. I was not only pained but surprised at the attitude President Jones of the council took the other night, for I looked for him to be the most prominent man of the future. Are we to understand that this city council are to run things just as they see fit, and that the press must not criticize their actions, as it is an insult to the intelligent, capable and representative men that compose that council? Where does the intelligence and capableness come in when they pass an order to remodel this dilapidated engine of ours at such a cost, and when fire occurs to find hydrants out of order and that there is not water pressure sufficient and cannot be had until the power house is telephoned to give increased pressure. There are some good men in the council, but, as a body, they are not of a calibre to bring about a higher standard of things which Woburn is so much in need of and must have to make progress. I must confess, I have little hope of things in Woburn being better unless we apply to the legislature for a commission.

Mr. Editor: You must allow me to congratulate you, and the owners of the Woburn JOURNAL, at your success since the JOURNAL has been changed from a weekly to a daily paper. Your fearless attitude in attacking "Matters in Woburn" must appeal to the minds of all good citizens who will look to you for hope in a better condition of affairs in Woburn. Go right along on the lines you have adopted and you will receive the applause and will have to accept the gratitude of an afflicted community.

READ THE CHARTER

Editor of the JOURNAL:

Sec. XVI. "Neither the city council nor any member or committee thereof shall directly or indirectly take part in the conduct of any executive or administrative business of the city."

Sec. XXII. "The executive powers of the city shall be vested solely in the Mayor and may be exercised by him either personally or through the several officers and boards of the city in their departments under his general supervision and control."

It seems difficult to believe that you have correctly reported so intelligent a man as President Jones in making him say in effect that your editorial advising, suggesting or criticising, is an insult to the members of the city council; but assuming that you are correct, I hesitate to quote even the city charter for fear that I also may be guilty of tendering such insult, and can only offer as an excuse that the much-admired inaugural of our new President closed with the sentiment that he wished the co-operation and counsel of all forward-looking men. However, he is only the president of the United States.

These extracts from the charter, and, nothing elsewhere in that document conflicts with these, leads me to rise for information. What business has the city council or any committee of that body holding a hearing on fire department matters? They don't hire the men; they can't discharge the men. These are matters solely under the control of the Mayor and Chief.

If there is any one thing which the framers of our revised charter tried to accomplish it was to divorce the city council from any administrative functions. Under the old charter the fire committee practically ran the fire department, and the highway committee practically ran the highway department, and it was largely because of the evils of this plan that the new charter was framed.

This matter of an investigation is solely up to the mayor and the chief. I don't suppose there is any objection to the council holding an investigation on tariff conditions in this country, but I don't see as it is any of their business, and yet it is more their business than holding investigations in the fire department, for in the one case they are not conflicting with the duties of any other department, and in this fire department matter they are attempting to something that belongs to other officials.

This whole affair should be referred to His Honor the mayor and the chief. If public rumor be true there is need enough of an investigation, but let it be an open one, and by the parties with authority to act after they shall have learned the truth.

Common Citizen.

IS GIVEN HONOR MEDAL

Former United States Soldier Who Killed Diablo, Leader of the Apaches, Rewarded.

Lonaconing, Md.—William A. Garnett, a newspaper man of Lonaconing, this county, who served in the Eighth United States infantry from 1871 to 1876, has been awarded a medal of honor for his part in the defense of Camp Apache, Arizona, Jan. 9, 1875.

Garnett, on that day, when the Apache Indians attacked the post, shot the Chief Diablo. Garnett was at the corral some distance from the post and saw the Indians advancing. Taking a rifle and some cartridges from the cavalry saddler's shop in the corral, Garnett shot the chief and then ran to the post and joined his company.

The women and children in the post were locked in the stone guardhouses, and 200 regulars, under the command of Capt. William Baird, Sixth cavalry, defended the post and drove the Indians away.

Captain Baird is a son of General Absalom Baird, an army corps commander in the Civil war, and a native of Maryland. Mr. Garnett also recently received a government pension through a special act of congress.

A Model Banking Room

The Woburn Five Cents Savings Bank in New Quarters

The new rooms of the Woburn Five Cents Savings Bank, in the corporation's building corner of Pleasant and Federal streets, will be open for public inspection tomorrow, and for the transaction of its regular business Wednesday morning.

In transferring its quarters from the second to the street floor, the bank is keeping step with modern banking methods, and is affording the public increased accommodation, which must be appreciated by every patron. Then again the bank corporation has made a distinct addition to the business-like appearance of its property, as well as improving architecturally the business section of the city.

The front is framed in massive oak timbers, heavily barred, giving a sense of strength, solidity and safety. Through the steel grills the rich coloring of the interior offices may be plainly seen. Upon the upper timber of the front is incised in gold letters the title of the institution.

Stepping within the outer and vestibule doors, a vista of neat panelling, and offioe fittings in mahogany and plate glass greets the eye. The tone is restful in its freedom from glaring colors or violent contrasts. Upon the left is the consultation room, and immediately beyond the office of the treasurer, the latter separated from the working space by an ornamental steel grill with sliding doors. The working space is ample and splendidly lighted by many windows upon the west side. Artificial light is supplied by hidden electrics above the working desks and by bronze framed lights pendant from the ceiling.

The office furnishings are of the latest pattern, with every possible device for the saving of labor and time. The desks are of mahogany covered with plate glass. All work is done by the card system, the cumbersome books of earlier days being discarded. The card cabinets are rolled into the record safe at night.

At the extreme end of the office is the directors' room plainly but substantially furnished. Flanking the directors' room are the vaults, in themselves a wonderful bit of up-to-date construction. This feature in the bank's equipment is the last word in safeguarding appliances. Into the construction of these vaults have entered 300 tons of cement and stone, and 60 tons of steel. There are two compartments in this vault, one for the records and card cabinets, the other for the treasure and securities of the bank. The concrete walls, which are two feet in thickness, are filled with a tangle of electric wires, all of which are connected with the burglar alarm located outside the building. The doors of these compartments are double, and very heavy. Between each layer of steel of which they are made is a sheet of tinfoil the slightest puncture of which will start the loud voiced alarm.

The doors are fitted with time locks of the latest pattern and compressors that make the vaults absolutely airproof. In the larger vault, is a section of steel deposit boxes which may be rented, all of which are guarded by the latest inventions in the way of locks. The vaults are lighted by electric lights so that access to any portion of their contents may be reached without delay.

Alongside the vaults are a group of small coupon rooms for the convenience of customers. These are fitted with every convenience. Beyond them are the sanitaries.

In the basement, and forming the support of the vaults above is a massive wall of concrete forming a large cell like room for the keeping of records.

Throughout the institution are the evidences of a clearly defined and well matured plan. There is no better equipped or handsomer banking room in Greater Boston than that of the Woburn Five Cents Savings Bank.

The institution which now has 8700 depositors, with deposits totaling $2,600,000 was incorporated in 1854. At its head have been: Bowen Buckman 1854-65, Abijah Thompson 1865-68, Stephen Dow 1868-79, John Cummings 1879-96, Benjamin Hinckley 1896-1905, Charlie A. Jones 1905-10, Charles G. Lund 1910-.

This is the fifth location occupied by the bank since its inception. It has occupied quarters at the corner of Main and Park streets; in a building where is now the Woburn National bank; in the rooms now occupied by David Ronco on Main street; on the second floor of its own building on Pleasant street which was built in 1888, and last in the splendidly equipped quarters described above.

J. H. DEVANEY DIES SUDDENLY

Dropped Dead this Morning at Home of His Aunt on Winter Street

James H. Devaney, aged 37 years, brother of Thomas and Patrick Devaney died suddenly this morning at the home of his aunt, Mrs. Anton Weberg on Winter street, North Woburn. Mr. Devaney arose at his usual hour and complained of experiencing a sharp pain in his chest, but prepared to go to his daily labor. With his foot on a chair, tying his shoe without a word of warning he fell forward against the wall and thence to the floor. He died almost immediately, life being extinct long before Dr. J. P. Bixby who was hastily called, arrived. Medical Examiner William H. Keleher viewed the body and pronounced death due to natural causes, pleuropneumonia being the immediate cause. The funeral will be held Wednesday morning with a high mass of requiem at St. Charles church.

Mr. Devaney is survived by his mother, two brothers, Thomas and Patrick, and his aunt, Mrs. Anton Weberg with whom he made his home.

UNION Y.P.S.C.E. TO HAVE SOCIAL

The recently formed Woburn local Christian Endeavor Union is to hold a social in the First Congregational church on Friday evening, March 14, at 7.45 o'clock. In order to begin the work of the union at once and to promote sociability among the young people, it was decided to have a social immediately. The social committee, Miss Mabel P. Willians, Everett Thompson, and Roy A. Howatt, met Friday evening and completed the plans. An extra fine program has been prepared, and a very enjoyable evening is anticipated. The Y.P.S.C.E of the First Congregational church is to have charge of the refreshments. The union is composed of the Christian Endeavor societies of the First Congregationa, the North Congregational, and the Baptist churches, and cordially invites the young people of the Burlington church, the Montvale chapel, and the two Swedish churches to attend the social.

RAFFLES ATTEND A COTILLION

Philadelphia Police Arrest Society Young Man at Exclusive Club for Alleged Robberies.

Philadelphia.—A series of baffling and Raffles-like robberies in the exclusive Belfield club at Germantown, in which vanity boxes and even a dainty pair of satin pumps with rhinestone studded heels formed part of the loot, has been solved, the police say, in the arrest of two young society, men, sons of wealthy parents in Pelham. The accused men were arraigned still garbed in the evening clothes in which they were taking part in the Washington cotillion given at the Belfield club. They are Charles Shapely, twenty-four years of age, and George Peberty, twenty-one years old.

The arrests caused excitement in the beautifully decorated banquet hall of the club, coming as they did when the minuet of colonial times was in progress. The affair was a costumed one, but Shapely and Peberty had contented themselves with dominoes of red and black, respectively.

Detectives from the central bureau apparently had received a tip as to the red and black masks, because as the detectives slid across the waxed floor, sending dainty colonial clad and spotted belles scurrying in all directions they immediately grasped the immaculately clad and masked young men.

Despite their protests the latter were taken to the Germantown police station and placed in separate cells. Both refused to answer questions when brought before Lieutenant Jacob Buchanan.

A large number of overcoats, silk hats and walking sticks have been recovered from the pawnshops and the the police are looking for the slippers with the glittering heels. The two men have been identified, the police say, by tailors and pawnshop proprietors as having disposed of quantities of loot to them.

COLONEL FEARED HIS FATHER

Roosevelt Writes of Vain Flight From Parent When, as Boy of Four, He Bit Sister on Arm.

New York.—There has been only one man of whom Theodore Roosevelt ever was afraid. That was his father, who inspired a terror in the soul of his son when the latter was four years old that remained with him ever afterward.

In Roosevelt's "Possible Autobiography," now appearing as a magazine serial, the colonel relates how he bit his older sister's arm, and, conscious that he had committed a crime tried vainly to escape punishment, first escaping to the yard.

"From the yard," he writes, "I went into the kitchen, got some dough from the cook and crawled under the kitchen table. In a minute or two my father entered from the yard and asked where I was. The warm-hearted Irish cook had a characteristic contempt for 'informers,' but although she said nothing, she compromised between informing and her conscience by casting a look under the table. My father immediately darted under the table. I feebly heaved the dough at him, and, having the advantage of him because I could stand up under the table, got a fair start for the stairs, but was caught half way up them. The punishment that ensued fitted the crime and I hope—and believe—that it did me good."

USED ENGINE TO SAVE WIFE

Switchman Summoned Home by Spouse When Robbers Break Into Home.

Chicago.—"Jim, burglars are breaking into the house. Come home quick!"

Mrs. James Powers, wife of a switchman on the Rock Island railroad, living at 9618 Houston avenue, telephoned the message to her husband at the railroad yards, eight miles away.

Mrs. Powers was alone. She had heard some one prying open a window in the back of the house. She at once tiptoed to the telephone. Then she returned to her room to wait.

She heard two men walking through the dining room. In a moment they had discovered her. She was bound and gagged and thrust into a clothes closet.

Then the robbers took a sheet from her bed and started filling it full of silverware and other family valuables.

But "Jim" had received the message. Calling his friend, John Allington, an engineer, he uncoupled a locomotive from a freight car. James Hern, a fireman, and two other switchmen were taken aboard. The engine and its crew thundered down the track to Jim Powers' home. The railroad right of way is 20 feet from the Powers home.

The husband had a key to the front door. He opened it and entered, accompanied by the two switchmen. Warned by the noisc of the engine, the robbers had stopped their work. They heard the door open, and, leaving their loot behind them, jumped out of the back window, through which they had entered. Powers searched the rooms, found his wife and liberated her. The police of South Chicago were notified.

SAYS NEW YORK IS "AWFUL"

Never Heard of Worse Place, Pennsylvania Farmer Tells Gotham Magistrate.

New York.—Michael Casey, thirty-five years old, a farmer of Athens, Pa., told Magistrate O'Connor, in the west side court, that as a result of his experience since he arrived here he has come to the conclusion that New York is the worst place he ever heard of.

According to Casey's story he had been here but one day, had taken a drink with a stranger and awoke in a hospital minus $100 and a gold watch. Later three men relieved him of 90 cents, all the money he had left.

At Thirty-eighth street and Eighth avenue an officer arrested two of the men and Casey appeared against them.

Anna Catherine Green.

His pleasure or his displeasure was, however, a matter of small consequence to his self-invited visitor. He had come there with a set purpose, and nothing in heaven or earth could deter him from it now. Declining the offer of a seat, with the slightest of acknowledgments in the way of a bow, he took a careful survey of the room before saying:

"Are we alone, Mr. Challoner, or is that man Sweetwater lurking somewhere within hearing?"

"Mr. Sweetwater is gone, as I had the honor of telling you yesterday," was the somewhat stiff reply. "There are no witnesses to this conference, if that is what you wish to know."

"Thank you, but you will pardon my insistence if I request the privilege of closing that door." He pointed to the one communicating with the bedroom. "The information I have to give you is not such as I am willing to have shared, at least for the present."

"You may close the door," said Mr. Challoner coldly. "But is it necessary for you to give me the information you mention, tonight? If it is of such a nature that you cannot accord me the privilege of sharing it, as yet, with others, why not spare me till you can? I have gone through much, Mr. Brotherson."

"You have," came in steady assent as the man thus addressed stepped to the door he had indicated and quietly closed it. "But," he continued, as he crossed back to his former position, "would it be easier for you to go through the night now in anticipation of what I have to reveal than to hear it at once from my lips while I am in the mood to speak?"

The answer was slow in coming. The courage which had upheld this rapidly aging man through so many trying interviews, seemed inadequate for the test put so cruelly upon it. He faltered and sank heavily into a chair, while the stern man watching him, gave no signs of responsive sympathy or even interest, only a patient and icy-tempered resolve.

"I cannot live in uncertainty;" such were finally Mr. Challoner's words. "What you have to say concerns Edith?" The pause he made was infinitesimal in length, but it was long enough for a quick disclaimer. But no such disclaimer came. "I will hear it," came in reluctant finish.

Mr. Brotherson took a step forward. His manner was as cold as the heart which lay like a stone in his bosom.

"Will you pardon me if I ask you to rise?' said he. "I have my weaknesses too. (He gave no sign of them.) "I cannot speak down from such a height to the man I am bound to hurt."

As if answering to the constraint of a will quite outside his own, Mr. Challoner rose. Their heads were now more nearly on a level and Mr. Brotherson's voice remained low, as he proceeded, with quiet intensity:

"There has been a time—and it may exist yet, God knows—when you thought me in some unknown and secret way the murderer of your daughter. I do not quarrel with the suspicion; it was justified, Mr. Challoner. I did kill your daughter, and with this hand! I can no longer deny it."

The wretched father swayed, following the gesture of the hand thus held out; but he did not fall, nor did a sound leave his lips.

Brotherson went coldly on:

"I did it because I regarded her treatment to my suit as insolent. I have no mercy for any such display of intolerance on the part of the rich and the fortunate. I hated her for it; I hated her class, herself and all she stood for. To strike the dealer of such a hurt I felt to be my right. Though a man of small beginnings and of a stock which such as you call common, I have a pride which few of your blood can equal. I could not work, or sleep or eat with such a sting in my breast as she had planted there. To rid myself of it, I determined to kill her, and I did. How? Oh, that was easy, though it has proved a great stumbling-block to the detectives, as I knew it would! I shot her—but not with an ordinary bullet. My charge was a small icicle made deliberately for the purpose. It had strength enough to penetrate, but it left no trace behind it. 'A bullet of ice for a heart of ice,' I had said in the torment of my rage. But the word was without knowledge, Mr. Challoner. I see it now; I have seen it for two whole weeks. I did not misjudge her condemnation of me, but I misjudged its cause. It was not to the comparatively poor, the comparatively obscure man she sought to show contempt, but to the brother of Oswald whose claims she saw insulted. A woman I should have respected, not killed. A woman of no pride of station; a woman who loved a man not only of my own class, but of my own blood—a woman, to avenge whose unmerited death I stand here before you a self-condemned criminal. That is but justice, Mr. Challoner. That is the way I look at things. Though no sentimentalist; and dead to all beliefs save the eternal truths of science, I have that in me which will not let me profit, now that I know myself unworthy, by the great success I have earned. Hence this confession, Mr. Challoner. It has not come easily, nor do I shut my eyes in the least to the results which must follow. But I cannot do differently. Tomorrow, you may telegraph to New York. Till then I desire to be left undisturbed. I have many things to dispose of in the interim."

Mr. Challoner, very white by now, pointed to the door before he sank again into his chair. Brotherson took it for dismissal and stepped slowly back. Then their eyes met again and Mr. Challoner spoke his first word:

"There was another—a poor woman—she died suddenly—and her wound was not unlike that inflicted upon Edith. Did you—"

"I did." The answer came without a tremor. "You may say and so may others that I was less justified in this attack than in the other; but I do not see it that way. A theory does not always work in practice. I wished to test the unusual means I contemplated, and the woman I saw before me across the court was hard-working and with nothing in life to look forward to, so—"

A cry of bitter execration from Mr. Challoner cut him short. Turning with a shrug, he was about to lift his hand to the door, when he gave a violent start and fell hastily back before a quickly entering figure of such passion and fury as neither of these men has ever seen before.

"Murderer! Doubly-Dyed Murderer of Innocent Women!"

It was Oswald! Oswald, the kindly! Oswald, the lover of men and the adorer of women! Oswald, with the words of the dastardly confession he had partly overheard searing hot within his brain! Oswald, raised in a moment from the desponding invalid to a terrifying ministrant of retributive justice.

Orlando could scarcely raise his hand before the other's was upon his throat.

"Murderer! double-dyed murderer of innocent women!" was hissed in the strong man's ears. "Not with the law, but with me you must reckon, and may God and the spirit of my mother nerve my arm!"

CHAPTER XL.

Desolate.

The struggle was fierce but momentary. Oswald with his weakened powers could not long withstand the steady exertion of Orlando's giant strength, and ere long sank away from the contest into Mr. Challoner's arms.

"You should not have summoned the shade of our mother to your aid," observed the other with a smile, in which the irony was lost in terrible presage. "I was always her favorite."

Oswald shuddered. Orlando had spoken truly; she had always been blindly, arrogantly trustful of her eldest son. No fault could she see in him; and now—

Impetuously Oswald struggled with his weakness, raised himself in Mr. Challoner's arms and cried in loud revolt:

"But God is just. He will not let you escape. If he does, I will not. I will hound you to the ends of this earth and, if necessary, into the eternities. Not with the threat of my arm—you are my master there, but with the curse of a brother who believed you innocent of his darling's blood and would have believed you so in face of everything but your own word."

"Peace!" adjured Orlando. "There is no account I am not ready to settle. I have robbed you of the woman you love, but I have despoiled myself. I stand desolate in the world, who but an hour ago could have chosen my seat among the best and greatest. What can your curses do after that?"

"Nothing." The word came slowly like a drop wrung from a nearly spent heart. "Nothing; nothing. Oh, Orlando, I wish we were both dead and buried and that there were no further life for either of us."

The softened tone, the wistful prayer which would blot out an immortality of joy for the one, that it might save the other from an immortality of retribution, touched some long unsounded chord in Orlando's extraordinary nature.

Advancing a step, he held out his hand—the left one. "We'll leave the future to itself, Oswald, and do what we can with the present," said he. "I've made a mess of my life and spoiled a career which might have made us both kings. Forgive me, Oswald. I ask for nothing else from God or man. I should like that. It would strengthen me for tomorrow."

But Oswald, ever kindly, generous and more ready to think of others than of himself, had yet some of Orlando's tenacity. He gazed at that hand and a flush swept up over his cheek which instantly became ghastly again.

"I cannot," said he—"not even the left one. May God forgive me!"

Orlando, struck silent for a moment, dropped his hand and slowly turned away. Mr. Challoner felt Oswald stiffen in his arms, and break suddenly away, only to stop short before he had taken one of the half dozen steps between himself and his departing brother.

"Where are you going?" he demanded in tones which made Orlando turn.

"I might say, to the devil," was the sarcastic reply. "But I doubt if he would receive me. No," he added, in more ordinary tones as the other shivered and again started forward, "you will have no trouble in finding me in my own room tonight. I have letters to write and—other things. A man like me cannot drop out without a ripple. You may go to bed and sleep. I will keep awake for two."

"Orlando!" Visions were passing before Oswald's eyes, soul-crushing visions such as in his blameless life he never thought could enter into his consciousness or blast his tranquil outlook upon life, "Orlando!" he again appealed, covering his eyes in a frenzied attempt to shut out these horrors, "I cannot let you go like this. Tomorrow—"

"Tomorrow, in every niche and corner of this world, wherever Edith Challoner's name has gone, wherever my name has gone, it will be known that the discoverer of a practical airship, is a man whom they can no longer honor. Do you think that is not hell enough for me; or that I do not realize the hell it will be for you? I've never wearied you or any man with my affection; but I'm not all demon. I would gladly have spared you this additional anguish; but that was impossible. You are my brother and must suffer from the connection whether we would have it so or not. If it promises too much misery—and I know no misery like that of shame—come with me where I go tomorrow. There will be room for two."

Oswald, swaying with weakness, but maddened by the sight of an overthrow which carried with it the stifled affections and the admiration of his whole life, gave a bound forward, opened his arms and—fell.

Orlando stopped short. Gazing down on his prostrate brother, he stood for a moment with a gleam of something like human tenderness showing through the flare of dying passions and perishing hopes; then he swung open the door and passed quietly out, and Mr. Challoner could hear the laughing remark with which he met and dismissed the half-dozen men and women who had been drawn to this end of the hall by what had sounded to them like a fracas between angry men.

CHAPTER XLI.

Five O'clock in the Morning.

The clock in the hotel office struck three. Orlando Brotherson counted the strokes; then went on writing. His transom was partly open and he had just heard a step go by his door. This was nothing new. He had already heard it several times before that night. It was Mr. Challoner's step, and every time it passed, he had rustled his paper or scratched vigorously with his pen. "He is keeping watch for Oswald," was his thought. "They fear a sudden end to this. No one, not the son of my mother knows me. Do I know myself?"

Four o'clock! The light was still burning, the pile of letters he was writing increasing.

Five o'clock! A rattling shade betrays an open window. No other sound disturbs the quiet of the room. It is empty now; but Mr. Challoner, long since satisfied that all was well, goes by no more. Silence has settled upon the hotel;—that heavy silence which precedes the dawn.

ICE-BOAT RACES ON MYSTIC LAKE

Medford Boat Club held Mid-Winter Carnival Saturday Afternoon

Last Saturday afternoon and evening, and yesterday morning the Medford Boat Club held its annual mid-winter carnival, during which it ran off various kinds of races and ice sports. Saturday afternoon drew the largest attention, having as it did a splendid program, including ice boat races, akate sailing races, straight-a-way skate races, and potato races on skates. The ice boat races were held over a 20 mile triangular course on the upper Mystic. In the evening the club house and shore were beautifully illuminated with colored electric lights strung on supports erected for the occasion. Bonfires were also lighted on the shore and added to appearance. A Hurdy gurdy party was held in the evening, dancing on the ice and in the club house, being enjoyed. A bountiful collation was served and the evening whiled away until midnight.

After the races on Saturday afternoon, Harry Towle in the "Brute" the winner of the big event of the day, was doing some fancy boating on the ice and in his daring ventured too near a large opening and both he and his craft received a ducking. No damage resulted. William Frazer and Arthur Fiske collided, about the same time in their ice boats and Frazer's boat had the mast knocked out. There was about 800 spectators, members and friends of the Medford and Winchester boat clubs.

The results of the races were as follows: 20 mile ice boat race,
Harry Towle, entrant in the "Brute 30 minutes 35 sesonds.
Winthrop Karshick in the "Clarice" 36 minutes 56 seconds.
James Newman in the "H. and S." 37 minutes 27 seconds.
Frank Trott in the "Marion" 38 minutes 5 seconds.
Edward Trott in the "Syndicate" 41 minutes.

Frank Gerlach and Arthur Fiske finished the course and being so late, their time wasn't kept. Jack Sheridan and William Frazer withdrew from the race.

Five mile skate sailing race:
"Sandy" Moffet of Harvard,
George Winslow of Medford,
Benjamin Jacobs, Medford Boat club.

One mile straight away skating race:
L. Kinsman, C. B. Rivetson.

Potatoe Race on skates:
Fred Mitchell, E. V. Evans, W. A. Hyde.

The officials were: Richard Smith of Medford boat club, starter and clerk of course; Henry Perham, of Medford boat club, P. A. Goodale of Winchester boat club and Henry Pidgeon of East Boston, judges.

The Ice boat races Sunday morning at 10.30 a. m. were attended by a large gallery of spectators, as it was the probable last race of the season. The entrants finished as follows:
Harry Towle, "Brute" 25 minutes,
Frank Trott, "Marion,"
Jack Sheridan, "O. U.,"
Edward Trott, "Syndicate."

Winthrop Kershick and James Newman, collided after the start, and disqualified.

GOLDEN AND LUX WIN POOL HONORS

Scanlon and Cairns on Short End of Score in Game Saturday Evening

Barney Golden and Anthony Lux were winners in the Montvale pool tournament game played Saturday evening, defeating Bartholomew Scanlon and Douglass Cairns 100 balls to 88.

It was a good game and it looked like a cinch at the start for Scanlon and Cairns. In the first two frames they pocketed 24 balls to six for their opponents, and it seemed all over but the shouting. But Golden and Lux came right back getting 10 in the third, 12 in the fourth and 12 in the fifth, taking the lead, and they were never headed afterward.

Golden and Scanlon were the headliners, shooting crackajack pool, Barney displaying an inside knowledge of the game that brought the long end of more than one frame to his team, while the boy wonder as Scanlon is familiarly called by his associates, did some spectacular work. In the first frame Scanlon made a nice run of 12, and followed up the good work by copping 11 in the second, coming within an ace of getting the "Golden goat," a feat hitherto believed to be out of the question by friends of the genial city collector. But Scanlon had Barney going for a while and were it not for a few tough breaks in the luck, it is almost certain that the city collector and his teammate would be on the short end of the score.

At the outset Cairns was a little bit off color, but was fast getting his eye as the playing progressed, and at the finish picked off several difficult shots.

Lux played steadily and in the eighth frame when his team scored 10 balls, he showed some classy shooting. The teams were well matched and the audience was the largest since the tournament commenced, the spacious A. O. H. room being taxed to its capacity. Tonight Sam Hooper and Michael Golden mix it up with Thomas Haley and William Cogan. Saturday's game by frames:

Charles O'Reilly who fractured his right ankle a couple of weeks ago is still in a serious condition. Symptons of gangrene which developed shortly after the injury are still in evidence, but yesterday the foot showed signs of improvement.

Tramp's Memory Was Faulty.

A Kansas City (Mo.) man met a tramp in the street the other day and was asked for a meal. The man consented with surprising rapidity. He took the tramp to a restaurant, ordered him a meal and then called an officer and identified the tramp as one of a gang that had held him up and robbed him a few days before.

Winchester High 3 Country Club 2

Thirty Minutes Overtime to Decide the Winner

In a close, fast, and slashing game, full of interest and enthusiasm, which necessitated playing three extra ten minute periods, Winchester high emerged the winner over the Country club seven, Saturday afternoon on Wedge pond Time and time again, close shots seemed as if they would bring the game to a finish, but the excellent guarding of the goal keepers made scoring almost an impossibility.

At the end of the first period the score stood one to one, then in the first of the second period, L. Hunt of the Country club drove a swift one by Heath of the High school team and it seemed as if the usually victorious school aggregation would reseive a knock out blow. But just as the period was drawing to a close, Warren Goddu, captain, of the high school team and all star rover, dodged and dribbled his way through the whole club team and by one of his accurate shots sent the puck hurtling by Gifford and tied the score, two and two, amid great cheering and excitement.

Extra periods were then played but not till the very end of the third ten minute period did L. Goddu, by his star work shoot the winning goal.

All the Winchester team played well, especially W. Goddu, Woods, L. Goddu and Heath. For the Country club, L. Hunt, Kinsley and Gifford put up a nice exhibition of dribbling and excelled in defensive work.

The line up and summary:

H. S.	Winchester Country club

MOOSE HOLD ANNUAL MEETING

Officers Elected for the Ensuing Year last Night

The first annual meeting and election of the Woburn lodge 1214, Loyal Order of Moose, was held last evening, and the following officers were elected: Past Dictator, Patrick T. McDonough; dictator, Bernard J. Golden; vice-dictator, George E. Taylor; prelate, Harry DeLoricа; sergeant-at-arms, Everett Dobbins; treasurer, Ernest Vezina; secretary, Lewis A. White; trustees, Bernard F. McHugh, Lewis Newcomb; physician, Dr. C. Guy Lane; representative to national council, Frank G. Davis; alternate, Patrick T. McDonough.

The lodge was recently instituted and has grown rapidly, with every prospect of becoming one of the largest organizations in the city. The charter list is still open and Deputy Organizer W. H. Doris is working to bring the number up to 200 or more before closing the list. Quite a number of candidates were balloted for last evening, and several new applications were received.

Another Grievance.

"There's a difference in time, you know, between this country and Europe," said a man in New York to a newly arrived Irishman. "For instance, your friends in Cork are in bed and fast asleep by this time, while we are enjoying ourselves in the early evening." "That's always the way," exclaimed Pat. "Ireland niver got justice yit."—New York Telegraph.

THROUGH ITALY IN WORD AND PICTURE

Large Audience Listens to Prof. Frank W. C. Hersey in Burbeen Course

An audience, that filled every seat in Lyceum hall last evening, listened with interest to a lecture on "Italy" by Prof. Frank W. C. Hersey of the English department at Harvard University. The text of the instructive address was illustrated by a large group of most excellent views, which, for clearness, have not been surpassed in any previous offering of the Burbeen free course.

Prof. Hersey is not a rapid-fire talker, but his diction is that of the travelled scholar, who knows what to look for when he goes abroad, and is able to present it acceptably. The lecture was largely of course descriptive of the scenes fthrown upon the screen, but the lecturer braided into this description, much of historical value, brightened it with flashes of appreciative humor, and quoted quite freely from the writings of the world's noted poets and travellers who have felt the charm of the country's beauty, and the majesty of its ruined palaces and historic buildings.

The pictures were well chosen and illustrated ancient, medieval and modern Rome, the Forum, the Colosseum, the Circus Maximus, the Arch of Constantine commemorative of the triumph of Christianty, the Appian way, the Vatican, its gardens and art treasures, the Scala Santa St. Peters' without and within the gruesome Catacombs, scenes in Venia, Florence, Pisa, and Vecchio, along the Tiber, and along the picturesque lakes which form the jewels of the peninsula.

The management was delighted with the popular response to its invitation, and as ex-Mayor Arthur H. Linscott said as the great audidience filed out "With the newspapers and the pictures the Burbeen lectures are reaching the people."

JOHN LAMBERT DIED IN OLEAN

Former Woburn Man Passed Away in New York Hospital

Word has been received here by relatives, of the death of John Lambert in Olean N. Y. The sad tidings were not unexpected for it has been known for several weeks that Mr. Lambert was confined with a complication of troubles, and that his death was almost sure to result. He was about 48 years of age and was a native of Woburn living in the South End of the city up to 20 years ago. He was a currier by trade and while a resident of Woburn, his cheerful, happy disposition won him many friends, who will mourn the news of his death.

The body will be brought to Woburn for burial, leaving Olean tonight, but arrangements for the funeral are not yet completed. Mr. Lambert is survived by two sisters, Julia, wife of James Carroll of Broad street, Mary McVey, and two brothers James of Woburn, and Daniel of Chicago, Ill.

Startling Sight.

Soon after the installment of the telegraph in Fredericksburg, Va., a little darky saw a piece of newspaper that had blown up on one of the telegraph wires and caught there. Running to the house in a great state of excitement, he cried: "Miss Liza, come quick! Dem wires done buss and done let all the news out!"

BUSY BURGLARS RANSACK STATIONS

Railroad Depots at Cross street, North Woburn and Central Square Entered Last Evening

Three Boston and Maine railroad depots were broken into last night or early this morning, and while there was nothing of any great value stolen, it was due to the fact that the thief or thieves after thoroughly ransacking all three places were unable to locate any booty of consequence.

The Cross St., Central Square and North Woburn stations were entered, and the nature of the breaks indicate that whoever committed one was guilty of all three. The Cross street station is in Winchester, and Chief of Police McIntosh of that town is co-operating with the Woburn officers in the investigation being made.

At Cross street a window on the south side of the building was pried open, and a razor belonging to the station agent, an old watch and about $1.50 in money was taken.

At North Woburn station a window in the rear was broken at the sash, and a catch opened. A 500 mile railroad book, some stamps, and a quantity of gum from a slot machine are missing. The machine was undoubtedly broken in a search for money, the panel in the ticket office was smashed, and all the cash drawers or anything apt to contain property of value was rifled. At Central square a window was broken but the sash was securely nailed down and a jimmy was used to force an entrance. Here cigars and cigarettes were stolen and 25 cents in money. The Woburn police are of the opinion that the breaks occurred sometime between 8 and one o'clock, but they have no clew at present which would lead to a derection fo the thieves-

RUBBER GLOVES

It is surprising how many are astonished at how cheaply they can buy rubber gloves.

Frequently we hear the remark, "If I had known that I could get rubber gloves at that price I would have had them long ago."

Spring season is the time when rubber gloves are most needed. House-cleaning with the use of strong chemicals like ammonia, furniture polishes, etc., quickly makes the hands unsightly unless protected by rubber gloves.

The transplanting of flowers or other light work about the garden during springtime becomes a pleasure if the hands are protected by rubber gloves.

We have just received a new stock of 50c rubber gloves which we will sell for the next ten days at 39c each

These gloves are guaranteed perfect.

We also carry a heavier and better glove for $1.00 a pair

WORTHY OF SUPPORT

The Lowell Textile school, of which William W. Crosby of Woburn was one-time principal, and which is a credit and honor to the state is called upon to fight on the floor of the house and senate at Boston to get suitable support from the state in a financial way to enable the school to progress and to maintain its highest standard.

It is a matter of no little regret that appropriations for this cause, which are never very large and which are expended in such a way that they are always entirely beneficial, are not forthcoming without any such contest as has now developed at the state house.

It is conceded that the state needs to exercise careful supervision of its expenditures, otherwise the treasury would rapidly be depleted, but for such a purpose as the Lowell Textile school offers, reasonable expenditures are advisable.

The school has been so well conducted that it has made its influence felt all over the world. It is in direct line with the question of vocational education, and has demonstrated its practical usefulness.

Asking for financial aid is no new idea, for the state has been appropriating yearly and all the school asks is to have a stated sum regularly available for the next few years and a small sum for some needed equipment.

o-o-o

Some facetious individual asks, "Where did the bunch of pretty girls come from who were seen on the 1.56 train last Saturday afternoon?" That's easy. They were all from Woburn, of course.

COMMUNICATION

Editor JOURNAL:

I read with a great deal of interest the letter setting forth certain conditions existing in this city by George A. Cochrane, which appeared in the JOURNAL yesterday afternoon. I am thoroughly in sympathy with Mr. Corcoran on several of the subjects treated, and was especially interested in what he had to say regarding the fire department. From the tenor of his letter, one would get the impression that he was familiar with fire department matters, but I would like to know how he happens to know so much on this subject and where he gained the knowledge from which he speaks so positively. Perhaps he will enlighten us on this point.

POLICEMEN ARE EAGER AND ANXIOUS

To Meet Hogan's Quintet of "Used to Think They Were" Bowlers

The police force is greatly amused over that alleged "defi" of Alderman Dennis P. Hogan who is reported to be anxious to match his team of bowlers, chosen from among the City Fathers, against an aggregation of blue-coated, brass-buttoned guardians of the peace.

They are amused because the veteran members of the force are confident they have forgotten more about the bowling game than Hogan ever knew. Of course the police would prefer to go up against some first class team.

They feel that it would be somewhat beneath their dignity to meet a group of conceited cripples. However, if it is necessary for them to step down from the pedestal of acknowledged superiority which they now occupy, in order to prick the bubble of the Hogan vanity they are willing to do it.

The force has asked the JOURNAL to voice their acceptance of the challenge. All they ask is 24 hours notice and they will be on the job, and give the alderman what is coming to him. It's up to you Mr. Alderman. Set 'em up!

A NEW SERIAL

Going Some

By Rex Beach

A Romance of Strenuous Affection

We are pleased to announce that we have arranged to print as our next serial this screaming comedy.

THE STORY is all about a house-party on a Western ranch—they are a jolly group of young people. Trouble arises from the fact that the hero has led his friends to believe he is an athlete, when, as a matter of fact, he never did anything more athletic than lead the cheering for the others. His predicament and that of a fat man who is with him as his "trainer" form a humorous background for a dashing love romance.

CHAFING DISH LUNCH

Miss Camilla Burdett invited several of her friends to a chafing dish supper at her home on Mishawum road last Saturday. After a delicious welsh rarebit, prepared as only Miss Burdett can prepare it, games were played and piano selections given.

The hostess kept her guests in a state of continuous merriment and before they knew it the clock told altogether too plainly that it was time to leave. The guests were: Miss Marjorie Eastman, Miss Alice Wyer, Gordon Shattuck, Clifford Blaisdell, and Clark Mendum.

EDWARD ABELES
with Officer 666 now playing at Park Theatre, Boston

"OFFICER 666"

All hail Cohan and Harris! Abundant acclaim to Augustine MacHugh! Here is a playwright who has put real fun in farce, real drama in melodrama and given the jaded playgoer "Officer 666" a novel, unique and original play of mystery, love and the law, that won the unqualified approbation of the critics and the enthusiastic appreciation of the capacity audience that crowded the Park theatre Monday night to witness the premier presentation of this long awaited international success in Boston. I am not surprised to learn that "Officer 666" has been translated into French, German, Italian and Spanish and is soon to be presented throughout Continental Europe, which is proof positive that rapid-fire fun in farce does not depend upon "the eternal triangle," suggestive situations or compromising complications. I have seen farces galore that have provoked laughter enough and to spare, and have enjoyed "gentleman crook" plays since the days of "Raffles," but it was a masterstroke to unite laughs and thrills in one play, combined with consummate skill, thus accentuating the most striking features of farce and melodrama. It is high art and good craftsmanship coupled with splendid acting that makes "Officer 666" irresistible in appeal.

The superb New York cast, headed by George Nash and Edward Abeles is one of the best seen in Boston in many a day. Don't miss it. Take your mother, sister, wife or best girl, and you'll have the time of your life as I did.—Marie Bascombe.

BOSTON JOURNAL CHANGES HANDS

New Management Makes Announcement of its Policies

The Boston Journal, one of the oldest newspapers in Boston was sold yesterday by Frank A. Munsey, the well known magazine and newspaper publisher to Matthew Hale, a prominent attorney of Boston.

This newspaper property which has been owned by Frank A. Munsey, for the past eleven years, changed hands yesterday noon.

Mr. Hale announced last night that the policy of the Boston Journal would remain the same and that as long as the Progressive Party continues to fight for these principles without compromises and without entangling alliances with other parties, just so long and no longer will the Journal support the Progressive Party. He further announces that the price of the paper would be changed from three cents to its former price of one cent.

Mr. Hale in taking over the Boston Journal makes the following announcement:—"In the fight now being waged in this state for human rights and against special privilege, the support of a metropolitan daily paper is almost essential. We all know how great has been the help rendered in the past by Mr. Munsey and the Boston Journal. It was a great blow, therefore, to learn a few days ago that Mr. Munsey proposed to withdraw from New England and concentrate his energies in other parts of the country. There seemed to be only one thing to do under the circumstances—to buy the paper. This has been done.

"The Journal, under the new management, believes in the principles for which the Progressive Party is fighting, and as long as the Progressive party continues to fight for these principles without compromise and without entangling alliances with other parties just so long and no longer will the Journal support the Progressive party.

"In this new work which we have undertaken we realize that alone and without help we can accomplish nothing, but with the active co-operation and help which we are certain will be rendered us by the men and women of this state who believe in the great principles for which we have all been fighting, we feel that the success of the Boston Journal is assured.

In order that all may join in this work of co-operation, rather than any limited class in the community, the price of the Boston Journal, commencing today, will be one cent.

Frank A. Munsey in his statement in the Boston Journal speaking of the change of ownership says:—"Mr. Hale as National Committeeman for Massachusetts and State Chairman of the Progressive party, occupies a very unique and commanding position that should help him enormously in getting a big circulation for the Journal.

"Mr. Hale has the further advantage over me of being a citizen of Boston. He known Boston, and Boston knows him. He speaks the language of New England, and New England understands him. He is young, clean, clear headed, energetic, and ambitious."

Mr. Hale stated last night that he would at once take active charge of the management of the Boston Journal.

Mr. Charles E. L. Wingate, former general manager of the Boston Journal has already accepted a prominent position on the staff of the Boston Post.

GOVERNOR GRUBS STUMPS

Meanwhile Lawmakers Deliver Bills by Force—Broke Into Private Office.

Portland, Ore.—"I have been down on my farm grubbing stumps. I was so glad to get away from that bunch I could hardly nerve myself to go back," said Governor Oswald West here.

The governor's outburst came when he was informed that the speaker of the house and the president of the senate, with their respective chief clerks, had forced their way into his private office and left there the bills passed by both houses. The houses then adopted resolutions declaring that these constituted "delivery to the governor," who has five days after delivery in which to sign or veto them.

The legislature normally would have adjourned sine die last Saturday, but for fear the governor, with whom the majority is not in accord, would veto many measures, a five-day recess was taken, with intent not to adjourn until the governor had been compelled to pass upon all bills.

"I may go away again," said the governor, "and if I do there will be none of these roughnecks breaking into my office. What they did does not constitute 'delivery.'"

He Can't See.

Many a man thinks he knows it all in spite of the fact that he is constantly proving that he doesn't.

ALL WITH LEFT HAND MOVE

Pastor of Church Defends Its Use, and Even Music Is Played on Left Side of Organ.

Chicago.—This is a story for left-handed persons. It was written by a left-handed reporter about a left-handed minister who preached a sermon with left-handed gestures to a left-handed congregation in a church on the left-hand side of Sixty-fourth street, away down in the lower left-hand corner of the city.

The ushers shook hands with the left hand, the organ voluntary had the tune away off on the left-hand side of the keyboard and when the plate went round the congregation didn't let the right hand know what the left hand was doing.

Rev. William Albert Frye was the minister and Woodlawn Park Methodist Episcopal was the church. The left-handed congregation was aroused over being classed with freaks, savages, criminals, monkeys and jokes.

"I'm tired of it," said Mr. Frye, with a left-handed flourish. "Queen Victoria was born left-handed. It was the left hand that brought Michael Angelo fame. Rube Marquard, Sir Robert Baden Powell, Landseer, Ty Cobb, the Crown Prince of Germany and most of the crowned heads of Europe are left-handed or ambidextrous. Yet that man Caesar Lambroso says left-handed people are criminals, weak-minded, insane; that they belong to the lower, savage order of mankind, akin to the beasts.

"I would have liked to punch that man Lombroso—he was a fakir. His facts are not facts. He asserts our kinship with monkeys and parrots—says these are left-handed. But that is not true. Of twenty-five monkeys I tried twenty-three reached out for a cookie with the right hand, and of seventy-five parrots sixty-three grabbed a cracker with the right claw. Who's close to the animals, right-handed men? Answer me that!

"In the New Jersey insane asylum the only left-handed man is the doctor in charge. I never have found a left-handed man in a penitentiary. The dictionary says the word implies uselessness, weakness and lack of skill. But I notice Paderewski has his left hand insured for $50,000 and that Kubelik has each and every finger of that hand insured for $5,000. The left thumb of the man who grinds most of the great lenses for the telescopes is valued at $250,000. Does that sound weak or useless?"

Again the boy pointed the way and Mr. Rockefeller made a clean drive to the green, whereupon the boy turned to Mr. Rockefeller and said: "Say, mister, if you had my brains and I had your strength, what a great foursome we would make!"

WORKER ON MONITOR DIES

Denver Ironworker Helped Construct First Ironclad Warship During Civil War.

Denver.—Frank Haas, seventy-one years old, an ironworker on the battleship Monitor when it was built in 1861, died at his home here of paralysis. He was a Mason and an Odd Fellow. Haas was hired when construction on the first iron-clad was started at Green Point, L. I., in 1861. He was then only nineteen years old. The ship was constructed by a private company, headed by John F. Winslow and John A. Griswold, and was launched in three years after laying of the keel. Haas is survived by his widow and two sons.

There was silence in the streets also. The few who were abroad, crept quietly along. An electric storm was in the air and the surcharged clouds hung heavy and low, biding the moment of outbreak. A man who had left a place of many shadows for the more open road, paused and looked up at those clouds; then went calmly on.

Suddenly the shriek of an approaching train tears through the valley. Has it a call for this man? No. Yet he pauses in the midst of the street he is crossing and watches, as a child might watch, for the flash of its lights at the end of the darkened vista. It comes—filling the empty space at which he stares with moving life—engine, baggage car and a long string of Pullmans. Then all is dark again and only the noise of its slackening wheels comes to him through the night. It has stopped at the station. A minute longer and it has started again, and the quickly lessening rumble of its departure is all that remains of this vision of man's activity and ceaseless expectancy. When it is quite gone and all is quiet, a sigh falls from the man's lips and he moves on, but this time, for some unexplainable reason, in the direction of the station. With lowered head he passes along, noting little till he arrives within sight of the depot where some freight is being handled, and a trunk or two wheeled down the platform. No sight could be more ordinary or unsuggestive, but it has its attraction for him, for he looks up as he goes by and follows the passage of that truck down the platform till it has reached the corner and disappeared. Then he sighs again and again and moves on.

A cluster of houses, one of them open and lighted, was all which lay between him now and the country road. He was hurrying past, for his step had unconsciously quickened as he turned his back upon the station, when he was seized again by that mood of curiosity and stepped up to the door from which a light issued and looked in. A common eating-room lay before him, with rudely spread tables and one very sleepy waiter taking orders from a new arrival who sat with his back to the door. Why did the lonely man on the sidewalk start as his eye fell on the latter's commonplace figure, a hungry man demanding breakfast in a cheap country restaurant? His own physique was powerful while that of the other looked slim and frail. But fear was in the air, and the brooding of a tempest affects some temperaments in a totally unexpected manner. As the man inside turns slightly and looks up, the master figure on the sidewalk vanishes, and his step, if any one had been interested enough to listen, rings with a new note as it turns into the country road it has at last reached.

But no one heeded. The new arrival munches his roll and waits impatiently for his coffee, while without, the clouds pile soundlessly in the sky, one of them taking the form of a huge hand with clutching fingers reaching down into the hollow void beneath.

CHAPTER XLII.

At Six.

Mr. Challoner had been honest in his statement regarding the departure of Sweetwater. He had not only paid and dismissed our young detective, but he had seen him take the train for New York. And Sweetwater had gone away in good faith, too, possibly with his convictions undisturbed, but acknowledging at last that he had reached the end of his resources. But the brain does not loose its hold upon its work as readily as the hand does. He was halfway to New York and had consciously bidden farewell to the whole subject, when he suddenly startled those about him by rising impetuously to his feet. He sat again immediately, but with a light in his small grey eye which Mr. Gryce would have understood and revelled in. The idea for which he had searched industriously for months had come at last, unbidden; thrown up from some remote recess of the mind which had seemingly closed upon the subject forever.

The Airship Was Not There.

"I have it. I have it," he murmured in ceaseless reiteration to himself. "I will go back to Mr. Challoner and let him decide if the idea is worth pursuing. Perhaps an experiment may be necessary. It was bitter cold that night; I wish it were icy weather now. But a chemist can help us out. Good God! if this should be the explanation of the mystery, alas for Orlando and alas for Oswald!"

But his sympathies did not deter him. He returned to Derby at once, and as soon as he dared, presented himself at the hotel and asked for Mr. Challoner.

He was amazed to find that gentleman already up and in a state of agitation that was very disquieting. But he brightened wonderfully at sight of his visitor, and drawing him inside the room, observed with trembling eagerness:

"I do not know why you have come back, but never was man more welcome. Mr. Brotherson has confessed—"

"Confessed!"

"Yes, he killed both women; my daughter and his neighbor, the washerwoman, with a—"

"Wait," broke in Sweetwater, eagerly, "let me tell you." And stooping, he whispered something in the other's ear.

Mr. Challoner stared at him amazed, then slowly nodded his head.

"How came you to think—" he began; but Sweetwater in his great anxiety interrupted him with a quick:

"Explanations will keep, Mr. Challoner. What of the man himself? Where is he? That's the important thing now."

"He was in his room till early this morning writing letters, but he is not there now. The door is unlocked and I went in. From appearances I fear the worst. That is why your presence relieves me so. Where do you think he is?"

"In his hangar in the woods. Where else would he go to—"

"I have thought of that. Shall we start out alone or take witnesses with us?"

"We will go alone. Does Oswald anticipate—"

"He is sure. But he lacks strength to move. He lies on my bed in there. Doris and her father are with him."

"We will not wait a minute. How the storm holds off. I hope it will hold off for another hour."

Mr. Challoner made no reply. He had spoken because he felt compelled to speak, but it had not been easy for him, nor could any trifles move him now.

The town was up by this time and, though they chose the least frequented streets, they had to suffer from some encounters. It was a good half hour before they found themselves in the forest and in sight of the hangar. One look that way, and Sweetwater turned to see what the effect was upon Mr. Challoner.

A murmur of dismay greeted him. The oval of the great lid stood up against the forest background.

"He has escaped," cried Mr. Challoner.

But Sweetwater, laying a finger on his lip, advanced and laid his ear against the door. Then he cast a quick look aloft. Nothing was to be seen there. The darkness of storm in the heavens but nothing more.—Yes! now, a flash of vivid and destructive lightning!

The two men drew back and their glances crossed.

"Let us return to the highroad," whispered Sweetwater; "we can see nothing here."

Mr. Challoner, trembling very much, wheeled slowly about.

"Wait," enjoined Sweetwater. "First let me take a look inside."

Running to the nearest tree, he quickly climbed it, worked himself along a protruding branch and looked down into the open hangar. It was now so dark that details escaped him, but one thing was certain. The airship was not there.

Descending, he drew Mr. Challoner hastily along. "He's gone," said he. "Let us reach the high ground as quickly as we can. I'm glad that Mr. Oswald Brotherson is not with us or —or Miss Doris."

But this expression of satisfaction died on his lips. At the point where the forest road debouches into the highway, he had already caught a glimpse of their two figures. They were waiting for news, and the brother spoke at the instant he saw Sweetwater:

"Where is he? You've not found him or you wouldn't be coming alone. He cannot have gone up. He cannot manage it without an assistant. We must seek him somewhere else; in the forest or in our house at home. Ah!" The lightning had forked again.

"He's not in the forest and he's not in your home," returned Sweetwater. "He's aloft; the airship is not in the shed. And he can go up alone now." Then more slowly: "But he cannot come down."

They strained their eyes in a maddening search of the heavens. But the darkness had so increased that they could be sure of nothing.

Doris sank upon her knees.

Suddenly the lightning flashed again, this time so vividly and so near that the whole heaven burst into fiery illumination above them and the thunder, crashing almost simultaneously, seemed for a moment to rock the world and bow the heavens towards them. Then a silence; then Sweetwater's whisper in Mr. Challoner's ear:

"Take them away! I saw him; he was falling like a shot."

Mr. Challoner threw out his arms, then steadied himself. Oswald was reeling; Oswald had seen too. But Doris was there. When the lightning flashed again, she was standing and Oswald was weeping on her bosom.

(THE END.)

LIBERTY A NATURAL GROWTH

Truth of Macaulay's Words Has Become Apparent With the Passing of the Years.

There is only one cure for the evils which newly acquired freedom produces—and that cure is freedom! When a prisoner leaves his cell, he cannot bear the light of day; he is unable to discriminate colors or recognize faces; but the remedy is not to remand him into his dungeon, but to accustom him to the rays of the sun. The blaze of truth and liberty may at first dazzle and bewilder nations which have become blind in the house of bondage; but let them gaze on and they will soon be able to bear it. In a few years men learn to reason; the extreme violence of opinion subsides; hostile theories correct each other; the scattered elements of truth cease to conflict and begin to coalesce; and, at length, a system of justice and order is deducted out of the chaos. Many politicians at our time are in the habit of laying it down as a self-evident proposition that no people ought to be free till they are fit to use their freedom. The maxim is worthy of the fool in the old story who resolved not to go into the water till he had learned to swim! If men are to wait for liberty till they become wise and good in slavery, they may, indeed, wait forever.—Macaulay.

Geography of Blushing.

The hunter, seated under a denuded tree upon a mound of red and yellow leaves, ate a luncheon of sandwiches in the mild sunshine of an October day.

"Dogs blush," he said. "Look at Carlo. I'll frighten him, and you'll see him blush plainly. Dogs blush in the tail."

He pretended that he was going to whip his hunting dog, and the animal showed the whites of its eyes in fright, while the skin of its white tail was, sure enough, suffused with blood. The tail blushed vividly.

"Horses," continued the huntsman, "blush in the ears, especially in the left ear. Cows and sheep blush just above the fetlock. Watch that spot on a cow. When she blushes there it's a sign she's nervous. Move the milk pail then, for she is likely to kick it over.

"Cats and mice and lions and tigers blush at the roots of their antennae, or whiskers.'

Escaped the Worst of It.

The worst things are the afflictions that have never happened. Bobby had just been soundly spanked for falling into the creek. "Gee!" he exclaimed, rubbing the seat of punishment, "what wouldn't I have got if I had drowned?"

Hoping for the Best.

"Jukes is a great optimist."

"Yes?"

"When I told him you had decided to postpone the publication of your book he said, 'Forever?'"

Called Music Nerve Poison.

Frederick Nietzsche agreed with those who found no inspiration in music. Indeed, he regarded music as a nerve poison, and declared that some music—particularly that of Wagner and Tschaikowsy—deranged the minds of many who heard it. Tschaikowsky killed himself after completing his famous 'Sixth Symphony," which, as several other have died by their own hands after playing it, has come to be known as the "suicide Symphony."

Take Four Points from Picked Team in Bowling Match

Haley's bowlers continued their triumphant march last evening, winning four points from a picked team captained by McNally. The pin splitters on both teams hail from Winchester, and the rivalry between them is quite keen. At the first of the season the Haley team could not get going and lost a couple of games, but in the last two games they have been slamming the maples in great shape.

Dolan captured the individual honors with a single string of 9 and a total for the evening of 276. The score:

NEVER SWEATS WIN THREE

Juniors and Colts break Even in K. of C. Bowling Games

The Never Sweats hung it on to the Colts last evening in the K. of C. bowling league, winning three out of four, while the Juniors and High Rollers broke even.

The latter game was a beaut for excitement and the scores on each string were close. In the first string the teams were tied with 408 apiece, and the High Rollers won the second by 6 pins giving them the points for first and second strings. The Juniors won the third by 11 and their bowling in this string gave them the point for total by five pins. Kenney was high, 99 and 284.

The Never Sweats were neatly trimmed in the first string of the match with the Colts the score standing 442 to 440. They went after the second string with a vengeance and landed it by a comfortable margin, and they also took the third string and total.

Snyder had high single 105, and Aylward led all the bowlers in total with 294. The scores:

HOOPER AND GOLDEN COUNTED OUT

Beaten in Montvale Pool Tournament by Haley and Cogan after Corking Exhibition

The last game in the first round in the Montvale pool tournament was played at the rooms of Div. 18 A.O.H. last evening, and proved by long odds the most exciting to date. From the moment the balls were broken in the first frame until Haley gracefully dropped the last ball in the corner pocket winning the game, it was a red hot, hair raising battle, the teams alternating in the lead, by margins so scant that there seemed nothing to choose between them.

For six frames Cogan and Haley led, but Hooper and Golden were always dangerous, and in the seventh got twelve, taking the lead by one ball, the score standing 53 to 52. Cogan and Haley tallied ten on the next frame and were again in front. They held their advantage to the finish and won 100 balls to 97, but they were forced to shoot every ounce of pool that was in them in order to land the victory. There was no individual star during the evenings sport, each player putting up a splendid game, and in every frame somebody would electrify the large audience with a combination or cut shot that invariably brought down the house.

Hooper and Golden showed excellent form in the seventh and twelfth frames when they scored 12 and 11. Haley and Cogan each pocketed 50 balls, showing that they were a well balanced combination and a team that will bear watching when the semi-final round which commences tonight gets under way.

Last night's contest was a fight from start to finish, and in the last few frames the score was so close and the playing so even that excitement ran high and when the score was announced at the end of the twelfth frame, Haley-Cogan 91, Hooper-Golden 89, the contestants were accorded a hearty round of applause. The next frame ended with Haley and Cogan 99, within one ball of victory, while Hooper and Golden had 96, and still a chance of getting away with the game. When Golden chalked up to break in the 14th and last frame the breathless crowd was on tiptoe, and you could hear a pin drop. He played the balls safe and Haley followed with a good try to end the game, missing a difficult shot for the right hand corner pocket. Hooper came up and picked off the only loose ball on the table making 97 for his team, and then tied Cogan up, playing the balls safe. Cogan also played safe, leaving Golden a difficult shot for the corner. Golden took plenty of time and made a good bid for the shot but fell down. Haley was Johnny on the spot and pocketed the ball which qualified Cogan and himself for the second round, and put Hooper and Golden out of the running. Tonight the semi-finals will commence when Thomas McGarry and Thomas Cogan will tackle Thomas O'Donnell and Pete Rogers. Last nights' summary:

GODFREY SPECIALS GIVEN SETBACK

Beaten Three out of Four points by Team Captained by Garvey

Godfrey's Specials were forced to take back water at Flanders' alleys last evening, losing three out of four points to the Garvey Specials after winning the first string by 37 pins. The Godfrey team has been hitting the maples in championship form recently, and the defeat came as a surprise not only to the bowlers themselves but to the wise ones who thought the Godfrey lineup almost unbeatable. It was an interesting match, each team using six men. Fox, of the losers was high 117, and 309. The score:

WILL REMOVE FIRE DEBRIS

N. Gorin, Owner of Central House will Begin Work Tomorrow

N. Gorin, owner of the old Central house property intends to begin tomorrow the work of clearing away the debris resulting from the recent fire. Mr. Gorin has not made up his mind definitely on the question of rebuilding the second story, but he is inclined to erect a ten room tenement for himself and familu, and sell his present home on Franklin street. Insurance adjustments are not settled but it is only a question of a few days when the amount of damages will be agreed upon and settlements made.

A story which has been in circulation, even before the fire, that Mr. Gorin would convert part of the property into a moving picture theatre lacks confirmation, and Mr. Gorin said today that just now he has no such intention, although if reliable parties with proper backing would consent to operate a picture house, he would consider the idea of making necessary alterations.

RAILROAD ASSAULT CASE NOT TRIED

Bay State Employe Recorded as not Guilty for Lack of Prosecution

Owen Murphy, a conductor employed by the Bay state street railway company, was in court this morning charged with assault and battery on Harry A. Breen of Burlington. The trouble occurred about two weeks ago on the 5.22 Lowell bound car from Woburn, when Murphy and Breen had a dispute about car fare. On Winn street the car was stopped and the conductor aided by motorman Patrick McGurn forcibly put Breen off the car. Daniel Smith of Stoneham was attorney for Breen and Judge Maguire appeared for the Bay state employe. There was considerable interest manifested in the trial because attorney Smith had filed a civil suit at East Cambridge asking $5,000 damages for his client because of the alleged assault.

The defence, if the case had gone to trial, would have been that Breen first attacked Murphy and prior to the attack had used vile and indecent language on the car. Attorneys on both sides consulted and a settlement was brought about without the case being heard. The court record shows that the defendant (Murphy) was found not guilty because of lack of prosecution.

RUBBER GLOVES

It is surprising how many are astonished at how cheaply they can buy rubber gloves.

Frequently we hear the remark, "If I had known that I could get rubber gloves at that price I would have had them long ago."

Spring season is the time when rubber gloves are most needed. House-cleaning with the use of strong chemicals like ammonia, furniture polishes, etc., quickly makes the hands unsightly unless protected by rubber gloves.

The transplanting of flowers or other light work about the garden during springtime becomes a pleasure if the hands are protected by rubber gloves.

These gloves are guaranteed perfect.

WHY NOT A FARM TRUST

Consolidation is the watch cry of the age. Conservation of energy is the aim of business men everywhere. The lopping off of expenses and by concentration the increase of output is the slogan of progress.

The latest call is for a farm trust. Well, why not? Who has suffered more in this country in the years that have passed than the tiller of the soil. No class of men has been more sorely buffeted by the changes and fluctuations in the business world than he.

There are many who believe that the farmer will in the not distand future follow the example of other manufacturers, and join with his neighbors in the capitalization of their joint resources in some form of corporation, in which the stockholders and the laborers will be the same persons.

In such an organization it is pointed out, work could be systematized, and economies practiced in the purchase of tools and supplies, and in marketing the farm products that are now almost impossible. Adequate scope under such an arrangement could be afforded for specializing. Community life would be strengthened, say the advocates of this movement, by the community of effort, and isolated farm houses would be transformed into a farm village with sanitary and other conveniences making the individual farm home nearer in attraction to that of the city.

It is urged that the farmer's independence would be increased because he would no longer be at the mercy of hired help. Such an ideal if it could be worked out practically has many advantages, one of which, is that with the added attractiveness of the farm and its life would naturally come a decrease in the number of boys and girls who are daily being lured to the city.

Whatever the ultimate aim of the Patrons of Husbandry may be, it is certain that the grange as an institution is showing what farmers may do when they pool their issues. Possibly the grange movement may have as its logical sequence the establishment of the farm trust or some form of consolidated farm effort. It is a movement that need cause no apprehension, for whatever benefits the farmer benefits the country.

The establishment of a local branch of Boy Scouts of America will be considered at a meeting to be held in Concert hall, Thursday evening, March 20. Attention is called to the announcement in another column, and to the comprehensive analysis by Librarian Evans under the Library department.

Mrs. Arthur E. Gage, regent of Bunker Hill Chapter D.A.R. has been appointed delegate and Mrs. George H. Newcomb alternate to the Continental Congress in Washington of the D.A.R. to be held April 14 to 19 inclusive.

MONTVALE

The Boys' Gym class of the Montvale Congregational church gave its first exhibition of their work last evening in Ashford hall, Montvale. It must have come as a surprise to all those who were not in the secret that these boys who who have been training for so short a time could do such splendid work. It must have been extremely gratifying to their instructor, Mr. Wm. R. Kissner, of Boston, as it was to all who have been interested in the boys' gym class since it began, only a few months ago. But in watching, Mr. Kissner one felt that one reason at least, was not far to seek. He is not only a man of splendid physique and unusually fine athletic training but his personality radiates kindliness and encouragement. Throughout he has shown the keenest interest and his strength of purpose and cheerful optimism have never failed. The other reason lies in the boys themselves. They have worked hard and faithfully and gladly to make the work a success, and the result of their effort was certainly apparent last evening.

The exhibition opened with a piano overture by Miss Helen Stockholm. Then came the Free exercises by the boys of the M.C. A. A. This was our first surprise for they were done in very good form and with no apparent effort, although to the spectators some of the drills looked rather sustained. Mr. George Benzie, of Boston, followed with a most interesting exhibition of club swinging. On the end of one club was a red light, on the other, a white one. The effect, in the darkened hall of the colored lights flashing and swinging so easily in varied and graceful figures and in perfect rhythm was beautiful. Mr. Benzies seemed perfectly tireless, althose who have tried to swing clubs know that it is strenuous work. Then followed a dumb bell drill by the boys, and it was splendidly carried out. It was surprising how long they could sustain the different exercises for the weight of the dumb bells make them much more difficult than the somewhat similar figures of the free exercises.

The pyramids were one of the surprises of the evening and one of the prettiest and most interesting parts of the exhibition. The boys, in different poses, built themselves up into figures that rose to the height of three tiers, held them for a moment and then jumped down. One of the prettiest figures was formed by the class letters M.C.A.A. The little mascot, Arthur Turgiss figured in this as the top of the C, and he will be glad to know that they couldn't have done it without him. The last pryamid was called the "squash," and a squash it certainly must have been for the lowest tier of boys, for at the signal the whole pyramid suddenly collapsed on top of them, till it looked very much like a foot ball "down."

Messrs. George Benzie, William R. Kissner and Walter Buzzell, of Boston then gave an interesting exhibition of advanced tumbling. This would have been impossible for us had not the Methodist church of Woburn kindly lent us some of its gym mats. With the aid of these, however, they were enabled to show us some remarkable feats of tumbling, handsprings, the lightest of somersaults and difficult balancing. At one moment it would seem that these men had no bones at all, so light and lithe were they. Then perhaps Mr. Benzie would lie down on the mat with Mr. Buzzell, his muscle would tighten and he would slowly raise him over his head on one hand and Mr. Buzzell would straighten out as stiff as if he could never bend. Then we would realize that all the lightness and suppleness was the result of the strength and control that made these other exercises possible.

The senior team of the boys' gym then gave an exhibition of various kinds of vaulting and other exercises with the Swedish horse, playing a sort of follow the leader with Mr. Kissner. Their work showed remarkable finish and ease and lightness.

Herr. Undorf, of Boston, and late of Germany gave a series of wonderful athletic poses, to show the use of the different muscles of the body. As he brought first one set of muscles and then another into play one wondered that there were so many, some almost hidden by others. One wondered too, at the marvellous power, and the patient difficult work that made such power possible. Herr Undorf is saidto stand next to Sandow in the wonderful physical development of his body.

There followed a wrestling match by two members of the senior team Mr. Madsen and Mr. Thorn, Wrestling has only been possible for the boys for a very short time, as we had no mats until, through Mr. Spencer Adams, the first Baptist church of Cambridge kindly lent us some which they were no longer using. The work of these two boys was therefore very remarkable and the match was watched with great interest. It was followed by a wrestling bout by Mr. George Benzie and Mr. William R. Kissner, which was very interesting, and showed the boys what could be accomplished in that line.

The last number on the program was games by the boys of the M.C.A.A., the first by the Juniors, the second by the Seniors. The Junior game was played by forming a ring, with one boy inside another outside. The exact proceedings of the game was a little hard to recognize, but there was a great deal of fun, tagging, chasing with a knotted towel. In the Senior game five indian clubs were set up, a ring of boys formed around it, and pushing back and forth, each tried to avoid knocking down the clubs and to make someone else do so. The games were much enjoyed both by the boys and spectators.

After the exhibition the members of the Girls' gym class served refreshments to the boys in the church vestry. Mr. Kissner and his friends stayed with them for refreshments before taking the late train to Boston. Everybody was delighted with the entertainment and it closed with cheers for the visiting team of athletes, who returned the compliment and a final cheer for the Girls' gym.

Following are the members of M. C. A. A. senior team, William Andreasen, Royce Hill, Forest Madsen, Norman Proctor, Franklin Scott, William Thorn, Christian Sorensen, Eimar Stockholm.

Junior team, William Andreasen, Robert Fuller, Herbert Fuller, Rufus Lovering, Ernest Madsen, Chester Madsen, John Mason, Donald Scott, George Tingink, Walter Zurgin, Carl Hyldberg.

Rev. Father Higgins has postponed the St. Patricks day ceremonies which were to be held at St. Josephs church on March 17, because next week is Holy week. The date for the formal observation of the day will be announced later.

Brazil's Valuable Water Power.

Fortunately for Brazil, without any coal of much value, there is water power to be found in almost every state in the republic, and the large power plants already installed for some years have been obliged to increase their voltage to meet the growing demands for light and power.

Many Have Wondered.

The Professor—"You say you are engaged in some original research. Upon what subject?" The Sophomore—"I'm trying to discover why the ink won't flow from my fountain pen unless I place it in an upright position in the pocket of a light fancy vest."

WELL AND HAPPY AT EIGHTY

Mrs. Abbie L. Whitney of Stoneham, Prominent in W.R.C. Work, holds reception

In the room where she was born March 11, 1833, and where she was married, September 15, 1850, Mrs. Abbie Louise Whitney of 247 Main street, Stoneham, widow of Capt. Samuel C. Whitney, received her friends yesterday afternoon. Scores of guests gathered from near and far to assist in the observance of the hostess' 80th birthday anniversary, and pay their tribute of love and friendship.

Mrs. Whitney, whose face is free from the wrinkles incident to age, and whose crown of snow white hair only serves to accentuate her fair and beaming face, was deluged with substantial presents, in which gold coin predominated, a wealth of beautiful blossoms, many spoken words of congratulation, and over a hundred letters and post cards laden with good wishes. Original poems came from B. A. Fowler of Phoenix, Arizona, president of the National Irrigation congress, Mrs. J. F. Donnell of Pasadena, Cal., and Mrs. M. A. Emmart of Jamaica Plain. The letters of congratulations came from all over the globe.

Mrs. Whitney was assisted in receiving by two charming young misses, Helen and Betty Emmart of Jamaica Plain. Matrons of the function were, Mrs. Fannie M. Thompson and Mrs. M. A. Emmart. Refreshments were served, Mrs. Fred T. Emmart pouring. Miss M. E. Bagnall was in charge of the guest book, which registered visitors from Manchester and Derry, N. H. Stoneham, Woburn, Attleboro, Melrose, Charlestown, Medford, Jamaica Plain, Plymouth, Lynn, Somerville, and Chelsea. In the evening Mrs. Whitney, who bore the strain of the reception hours in a remarkable manner, entertained the Sterling club, a social organization of close friends, at dinner. The club added a feature of interest to the evening's program by presenting the hostess a purse of $20 in gold.

Mrs. Whitney is widely known in W. R. C. circles. She is a member and past president of Abraham Lincoln W.R.C. 39 of Charlestown and is a past national aid, and past department aid of the organization. Corps 39 of Charlestown and Corps 65 of Stoneham were represented by delegations yesterday, and gave presents of gold coin. Another organization that was represented was the Whitney club, named for her late husband, and which had its birth among a party of excursionists to the National W.R.C. convention in Indianapolis and the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893.

Mrs. Whitney is the daughter of Daniel and Abigail (Green) Bryant. Her father was a 49er. Her husband, who died 19 years ago served in G. Co. 13th Mass. Mrs. Whitney has travelled all over the country, and has gathered mementoes of her wanderings. These, together with many relics and heirlooms, all of which have been treasured and carefully preserved, form a remarkable collection, in fact, the modest house at 247 Main street is packed with interesting material.

Mrs. Whitney is a woman who by her lovable character has won friends wherever life's journey has called her, and yesterday's observance was a notable social event.

As It Is Talked in Boyville.

Two Fort Scott boys were quarreling. "I'll knock your block off if you bother me," one of them said. "No you won't," replied the other, "you can't do it. You ain't man enough." "Well, maybe not," answered the first belligerent, "but I'm just tellin' you that I'm dern fool enough to try it if you give me any more of that talk."

WHAT OUR HOUSEHOLDS COST

Ten Billion Dollars a Year Is Figure Arrived at by Professor Muensterberg.

New York.—The women of the United States spend nearly $10,000,000,000 a year for maintaining the households of the country, according to Prof. Hugo Muensterberg of Harvard in a statement which is causing much discussion among New York women just now. In woman's hands, therefore, is the greatest single business of the United States, for the vast expenditures of the government itself are insignificant beside such a tremendous budget.

The only rival of housekeeping as an industry is agriculture. The total value of the products of agriculture in the United States is also about $10,000,000,000 a year. But it should be remembered that that figure is for the output, the finished product of the farms, while the expenditure of the housewives is only for the raw materials from which by their own labor and management they create the real values of the home—a finished product which can hardly be estimated in financial terms.

The Harvard professor points out that, with such a tremendous business undertaking on their hands, the women of the country do not fit themselves for their highly technical and professional duties with "that deeper knowledge of the material, its sources, its effects, its characteristics, which would be demanded of any other large economic transactions." He laments the bargain craze, and urges more care, not for the dress of the housekeeper, but for the dress of the home, which, he says, is even more important.

For all which remarks the women of New York are expressing their thanks to the learned professor and quietly wondering among themselves what kind of home he is used to seeing in the neighborhood of Harvard square.

NEGRO FIRES A FREIGHT CAR

Starving Captive Starts Flames to Obtain His Freedom—Firemen Rescue Him.

Roanoke, Va.—Apparently none the worse for his trying experience, James Sparks, a negro, told the police how he had spent three days and nights in a locked freight car without food or water and then set fire to his prison in desperation in the hope that the blaze would attract attention and that he would be rescued.

Sparks entered the car at Montvale and almost immediately the car, loaded with lumber, was locked and sealed. Starving and almost frozen, Sparks set his traveling prison in flames here and the fire department was called. When the car door was broken down the captive fell out. He was too weak to stand unaided.

Rat Gives Man Stiff Fight.

Winchester, Va.—Charles L. Robinson, an ice manufacturer, was cornered the other day by a large and ferocious rat in the bathroom at his home. The rodent, which was as big as an ordinary cat, appeared in the room unexpectedly and sprang at Robinson, who found it necessary to put up a stiff battle, which lasted fully five minutes. The rat finally darted through a hole, leaving the ice man practically exhausted.

THE BOY SCOUT MOVEMENT

Not long ago a list of Boy Scout books was published in this column. Since a project is now known to be definitely under way to establish a Boy Scout organization, many of our readers will doubtless want to know just what the movement means. For the details we refer inquirers to the Handbook of the Boy Scouts of America, which may be found in the library. In the space at our disposal we can give but the merest outline.

In the first place there are certain misconceptions to be avoided. The organization is absolutely non-partisan. It is not secret. It does not identify itself with social problems or classes. It has no political, military, nor religious affiliations whatever. While it emphasizes the simple, fundamental virtues, it does not concern itself with religious training. It believes that the latter is best handled by the various religious bodies, and consistently with this belief, every member, whether Catholic, Protestant, Jewish, or Scientist, is expected to be loyal to his own faith.

Its real purpose, then, is educational. It does not aim to displace, or to duplicate the work of the schools, but rather to supplement and reinforce it. It purposes to bring out the ability and resourcefulness of the boy, to instil honorable ideals of conduct, and to lay the foundations of good citizenship, by giving to his sports and play wholesome and manly expression.

The scout organization, with its trappings, honors, and historic background of heroic men who have dared much and wrought greatly, is well calculated to fire the youthful imagination. This appeal is enhanced by the outdoor life, and given concrete form by fascinating sports and crafts.

Scoutcraft includes instruction in first aid to the injured, life saving, nature study, tracking, signaling, cycling, seamanship, campcraft, woodcraft, chivalry, and patriotism.

Local troops are chartered from National Headquarters, and no charter is issued until it is satisfactorily shown that the organization is projected in good faith, and has the backing of responsible and representative men of the community in the form of a regularly constituted Local Council. This council acts in a supervisory capacity.

The spirit of the movement is clearly revealed by the scout law, and the scout oath, which follow.

THE SCOUT LAW

1. A scout is trustworthy. A scout's honor is to be trusted. If he were to violate his honor by telling a lie, or by cheating, or by not doing exactly a given task, he may be directed to hand over his scout badge.

2. A scout is loyal. He is loyal to all to whom loyalty is due; his scout leader, his home, and parents and country.

3. A scout is helpful. He must be prepared at any time to save life, help injured persons, and share the home duties. He must do at least one good turn to somebody every day.

4. A scout is friendly. He is a freind to all, and a brother to every other scout.

5. A scout is courteous. He is polite to all, especially to women, children, old people, and the weak and helpless. He must not take pay for being helpful or courteous.

6. A scout is kind. He is a friend to animals. He will not kill nor hurt any living creature needlessly, but will strive to save and protect all harmless life.

7. A scout is obedient. He obeys his parents, scout master, patrol leader, and all other duly constituted authorities.

8. A scout is cheerful. He smiles whenever he can. His obedience to orders is prompt and cheery. He never shirks nor grumbles at hardships.

9. A scout is thrifty. He does not wantonly destroy property. He works faithfully, wastes nothing, and makes the best use of his opportunities. He saves his money so that he may pay his own way, be generous to those in need, and helpful to worthy subjects. He may work for pay, but must not receive tips for courtesies or good turns.

10. A scout is brave. He has the courage to face danger in spite of fear, and has to stand up for the right against the coaxings of friends or the jeers or threats of enemies, and defeat does not down him.

1. A scout is clean. He keeps clean in body and thought, stands for clean speech, clean sport, clean habits, and travels in a clean crowd.

12. A scout is reverent. He is reverent towards God. He is faithful in his religious duties and respects the convictions of others in matters of custom and religion.

THE SCOUT OATH

On my honor I will do my best:

1. To do my duty to God and my country, and to obey the scout law.
2. To help other people at all times.
3. To keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight.

The scout motto is, "Be Prepared."

WINCHESTER

A DAINTY DANCY PARTY

To round out, what has been a most successful season, Miss Alice B. Sanborn conducted the final assembly for the children's class in Lyceum hall yesterday afternoon

About sixty children attended, and participated in the dances such as the society glide and the waltz dream, in which their capable instructor had drilled them this season. A large number of their parents and friends, as the guests of Miss Sanborn, witnessed the attractive scene after which an informal reception was held. Favors in the German were distributed and a collation served.

The matrons were Mrs. John Abbott, Mrs. Q. S. Higgins, Mrs. Charles Mossman, Mrs. E. J. Johnson, and Mrs. Roldad H. Sherman. Ushers: Masters John Higgins, Robert Hight, Wellington Caldwell, Robert Coit, and Eli Smith. Miss Sarah Felber presided at the piano for the dancing.

Miss Sanborn is to be congratulated upon the successful affair. She was the recipient of many flowers as tokens of the esteem in which she and her work are held.

The last assemblies for her more advanced classes will be held Wednesday and Thursday March 26, and 27.

Lloyd Goddu, brother of Warren Goddu who was captain of this year's successful high school hockey team, has been elected captain of next season's team.

The Winchester council K. of C. held an important meeting last evening to complete arrangements for the annual communion service of the council, to be held at the 8 a. m. mass next Sunday.

The Woman's guild of the Church of the Epiphany met yesterday with Mrs. Herbert S. Underwood, at her home on Central street.

The Peoples' League entertainment was given in the Assembly hall of the High school last evening at 8 o'clock. It consisted of vocal and instrumental solos, readings and exhibitions of Indian club swinging by a pupil from Dr. Sargent's gym in Cambridge. It was attended by a large audience of the young people of the town, who were of a mature age and not a member of any school in town. The idea was to furnish free amusement to keep the young people off the streets, and will be repeated at an early date. This entertainment was very successful and encouraged its supporters.

Alexander MacDonald is ill with an attack of grippe at his home at 141 Washington street.

The funeral services of Gertrude Shaw Lawrence, daughter of the late Henry S. and Harriet M. Lawrence of Roxbury were held yesterday afternoon at 2.30 in the Church of the Epiphany. Interment was at Portland, Me. Miss Lawrence died at her late home on Rangeley road last Sunday after a short illness

This evening Miss Mary Flinn will hold an informal dinner party at her home on Dix street, to four girl friends from Evanston, Ill. A number of invitations have been issued to her intimate friends.

At the Lenten service in St. Mary's church tomorrow evening, Rev. Francis Kenzel, C.S.S.R. of the Mission church, Roxbury, will preach the last of his series of sermons.

Much interest is being developed over the location for the new Post office which will be soon erected with the $75,000 set aside for that purpose by the last Congress. Many people are in favor of its location being on the present site of the old Whitney machine shop. The reason for this is, that it is claimed that the majority of the business is done by people on the eastern side of the town. No site has been decided upon as yet.

J. Z. White of Chicago will speak on the "Single Tax," under the auspices of the Arlington Business Mens' association in the Town hall, Arlington, on Friday, March 14. A large number of Winchester people are interested and are planning to attend.

Miss Frances Foster has been elected captain of next year's girls' basket ball team of the local high school. Her excellent work as left forward this year has been of sensational character, and she is well fitted to be leader for the next year's team.

President Charles A. Gleason of the Winchester Boat club has selected a nominating committee to prepare a list from which the officers of the club for the ensuing year are to be chosen. The nominating committee consists of Arthur W. Dean, Edgar M. Young, Charles S. Tenney, George B. Smith and T. Price Wilson, Jr.

WARNS ALL EUROPE

Italian Paper Declares Linking of Americas Is Menace.

Foreign Nations Are Urged to Consider the Growing Power of United States Over Peoples of the Hemisphere.

Rome.—That American "Dollar Diplomacy," working hand in hand with the great private financial interests of the United States in the commercial development of South and Central America, is creating the most serious problem facing the entire world today, is the declaration of Il Popolo Romano, the official organ of the Italian government.

In a leading article, in which a genuine note of alarm is sounded, the paper declares that the continuation of this American policy means the inevitable formation of a gigantic commercial federation of the three Americas in which the United States would naturally play the predominating part.

"While Europe is laboring with all its power to resolve the problem of the Balkan adjustment, on which depends in a large measure the entire continental peace, and while to insure for ourselves the benefits of internal tranquillity we are compelled to spend our best forces in military preparations, the younger United States, on which the grave problems that harass Europe do not fall, gives itself to works of growth, of expansion and of development of the means of communication and transportation between the republics of the continent, and to create that union, which in time will be obliged to constitute itself as the Great American Federation, under the auspices of the United States of North America.

"Toward the carrying out of this conception, in both its political and economical aspects, the gigantic undertaking of the Panama canal, which will shortly be opened to the commerce of the world, and the project of a railroad to connect the continents—a project which is already on its way to completion—will play a most important part.

"In addition, there has recently been created, under the initiative of a powerful banking syndicate, a company for putting into direct and rapid communication the republics of Brazil, Uruguay, Argentina and Bolivia.

"Coupled then with the navigation of the Panama canal, it will be an easy matter for the United States to come into close commercial as well as political contact with the republics of the south by means of the great railways, already under construction, which will link up the two continents.

"What is the end toward which this tenacious work on the part of the United States is leading? It is an end that can be seen with the naked eye. While the United States binds more closely together with its ties of steel the two parts of the continent, and at the same time asserts more strongly than ever its predominating economical and commercial influence in the two Americas, it is to be easily seen that the United States wishes only to exclude from the Americas the governments of Europe, and to exercise on the entire American continent a monopoly for its own profit.

"This in fact today creates the most serious problem that is now facing Europe, which has in Central and South America not only a glorious tradition and record of European civilization, but also gigantic interests commercially and economically.

"At the present moment this is not an immediate danger, but it would nevertheless be well for European diplomacy to begin to occupy itself with the problem—a problem that, at least according to our point of view, is vastly more important than that of the present one of the Balkans."

GOING SOME

CHAPTER I.

FOUR cowboys inclined their bodies over the barbed-wire fence which marked the dividing line between the Centipede Ranch and their own, staring mournfully into a summer night such as only the far southwestern country knows. And as the four inclined their bodies, they inclined also their ears, after the strained manner of listeners who feel anguish at what they hear. A voice, shrill and human, pierced the night like a needle, then, with a wail of a tortured soul, died away amid discordant raspings: the voice of a phonograph. It was their own, or had been until one over-confident day, when the Flying Heart Ranch had staked it as a wager in a foot-race with the neighboring Centipede, and their own man had been too slow. As it had been their pride, it remained their disgrace. Dearly had they loved, and dearly lost it. It meant something that looked like honor, and though there were ten thousand thousand phonographs, in all the world there was not one that could take its place.

The sound ceased, there was an approving distant murmur of men's voices, and then the song began:

"Jerusalem, Jerusalem,
Lift up your voice and sing—"

Higher and higher the voice mounted until it reached again its first thin, ear-splitting pitch.

"Still Bill" Stover stirred uneasily in the darkness.

"Why'n'ell don't they keep her wound up?" he complained. "Gallagher's got the soul of a wart-hog. It's criminal the way he massacres that hymn."

From a rod farther down the wire fence Willie answered him, in a boy's falsetto:

"I wonder if he does it to spite me?"

"He don't know you're here," said Stover.

The other came out of the gloom, a little stoop-shouldered man with spectacles.

"I ain't noways sure," he piped, peering up at his lanky foreman. "Why do you reckon he allus lets Mrs. Melby peter out on my favorite record? He done the same thing last night. It looks like an insult."

"It's nothing but his ignorance," Stover replied. "He don't want no trouble with you. None of 'em do."

"I'd like to know for certain." The small man seemed torn by doubt. "If I only knew he done it a-purpose, I'd git him. I bet I could do it from here."

Stover's voice was gruff as he commanded:

"Forget it! Ain't it bad enough for us fellers to hang around like this every night without advertising our idiocy by a gun-play?"

"They ain't got no right to that phonograph," Willie averred darkly.

"Oh yes, they have; they won it fair and square."

"Fair and square! Do you mean to say Hump Joe run that foot-race on the square?"

"I never said nothin' like that whatever. I mean we bet it, and we lost it. Listen! There goes Carara's piece!"

Out past the corral floated the announcement in a man's metallic syllables:

"'The Baggage Coach Ahead,' as sung by Helena Mora for the Echo Phonograph, of New York and Pa-a-a-ris!"

From the dusk to the right of the two listeners now issued soft Spanish phrases.

"Madre de Dios! 'The Baggage Car in Front!' T'adora Mora! God bless 'er!"

During the rendition of this affecting ballad the two cow-men remained draped uncomfortably over the barbed-wire barrier, lost in rapturous enjoyment. When the last note had died away, Stover roused himself reluctantly.

"It's time we was turnin' in." He called softly, "Hey, Mex!"

"Si, Senor!"

"Come on, you and Cloudy. Vamos! It's ten o'clock."

He turned his back on the Centipede Ranch that housed the treasure, and in company with Willie, made his way to the ponies. Two other figures joined them, one humming in a musical baritone the strains of the song just ended.

"Cut that out, Mex! They'll hear us," Stover cautioned.

"Caramba! This t'ing is brek my 'eart," said the Mexican, sadly. "It seem like the Senorita Mora is sing that song to me. Mebbe she knows I'm set out 'ere on cactus an' listen to her. Ah, I love that Senorita ver' much."

The little man with the glasses began to swear in his high falsetto. His ear had caught the phonograph operator in another musical mistake.

"That horn-toad let Mrs. Melby die again to-night," said he. "It's sure comin' to a hunnacaboo between him and me. If somebody don't kill him pretty soon, he'll wear out that machine before we git it back."

"Humph! It don't look like we'd ever get it back," said Stover.

One of the four sighed audibly, then vaulting into his saddle, went loping away without waiting for his companions.

"Cloudy's sore because they didn't play 'Navajo,'" said Willie. "Well, I don't blame 'em none for omittin' that war-dance. It ain't got the class of them other pieces. While it's devised to suit the intellect of an Injun, perhaps it ain't in the runnin' with 'The Holy City,' which tune is the sweetest and sacredest ever sung."

Carara paused with a hand upon the neck of his cayuse.

"Eet is not so fine as 'The Baggage Car in Front,'" he declared.

"It's got it beat a mile!" Willie flashed back, harshly.

"Here, you!" exclaimed Stover, "no arguments. We all have our favorites, and it ain't up to no individual to force his likes and dislikes down no other feller's throat." The other two men he addressed mounted their broncos stiffly.

"I repeat," said Willie: "'The Holy City,' as sung by Mrs. Melby, is the swellest tune that ever hit these parts."

Carara muttered something in Spanish which the others could not understand.

"They're all fine pieces," Stover observed, placatingly, when fairly out of hearing of the ranch-houses. "You boys have each got your preference. Cloudy, bein' an Injun, has got his, and I rise to state that I like that monologue, 'Silas on Fifth Avenoo,' better than all of 'em, which ain't nothin' ag'inst my judgment nor yours. When Silas says, 'The girl opened her valise, took out her purse, closed her valise, opened her purse, took out a dime, closed her purse, opened her valise, put in her purse, closed her valise, give the dime to the conductor, got a nickel in change, then opened her valise, took out her purse, closed her valise—" Stover began to rock in his saddle, then burst into a loud guffaw, followed by his companions. "Gosh! That's awful funny!"

"Si! si!" acknowledged Carara, his white teeth showing through the gloom.

"An' it's just like a fool woman," tittered Willie. "That's sure one ridic'lous line of talk."

"Still Bill" wiped his eyes with the back of a bony hand. "I know that hull monologue by heart, but I can't never get past that spot to save my soul. Right there I bog down, complete." Again he burst into wild laughter, followed by his companions. "I don't see how folks can be so dam' funny!" he gasped.

"It's natural to 'em, like warts," said Willie; "they're born with it, the same as I was born to shoot straight with either hand, and the same as Mex was born to throw a rope. He don't know how he does it, and neither do I. Some folks can say funny things, some can sing, like Missus Melby; some can run foot-races, like that Centipede cook—"

Carara breathed an eloquent Mexican oath.

"Do you reckon he fixed that race with Humpy Joe?" inquired Stover.

"If I Knew He Done It A-purpose I'd Git Him."

"Name's Skinner," Willie observed. "It sounds bad."

"I'm sorry Humpy left us so sudden," said Still Bill. "We'd ought to have questioned him. If we only had proof that the race was crooked—"

"You can so gamble it was crooked," the little man averred. "Them Centipede fellers never done nothin' on the square. They got Hump Joe, and fixed it for him to lose so they could get that talkin'-machine. That's why he pulled out."

"I'd hate to think it," said the foreman, gloomily; then after a moment, during which the only sound was that of the muffled hoof-beats: "Well, what we goin' to do about it?"

"Humph! I've laid awake nights figurin' that out. I reckon we'll just have to git another foot-racer and beat Skinner. He ain't the fastest in the world."

"That takes coin. We're broke."

"Mebbe Mr. Chapin would lend a helpin' hand."

"No chance!" said Stover, grimly. "He's sore on foot-racin'. Says it disturbs us and upsets our equalubrium."

Carara fetched a deep sigh.

"It's ver' bad t'ing, Senor. I don' feel no worse w'en my gran'mother die."

The three men loped onward through the darkness, weighted heavily with disappointment.

* * * * * *

Affairs at the Flying Heart Ranch were not all to Jack Chapin's liking. Ever since that memorable foot-race, more than a month before, a gloom had brooded over the place which even the presence of two Smith College girls, not to mention that of Mr. Fresno, was unable to dissipate. The cowboys moped about like melancholy shades, and neglected their work to discuss the disgrace that had fallen upon them. It was a task to get any of them out in the morning, several had quit, the rest were quarreling among themselves, and the bunk-house had already been the scene of more than one encounter, altogether too sanguinary to have originated from such a trivial cause as a foot-race.

The master of the ranch sought his sister Jean, to tell her frankly what was on his mind.

"See here, Sis," he began, "I don't want to cast a cloud over your little house-party, but I think you'd better keep your friends away from my men."

"Why, what is the matter?" she demanded.

"Things are at a pretty high tension just now, and the boys have had two or three rows among themselves. Yesterday Fresno tried to 'kid' Willie about 'The Holy City;' said it was written as a coon song, and wasn't sung in good society. If he hadn't been a guest, I guess Willie would have murdered him."

"You Can So Gamble It Was Crooked."

"Oh, Jack! You won't let Willie murder anybody, not even Berkeley, while the people are here, will you?" coaxed Miss Chapin, anxiously.

"What made you invite Berkeley Fresno, anyhow?" was the rejoinder. "This is no gilded novelty to him. He is a Western man."

Miss Chapin numbered her reasons sagely. "In the first place—Helen. Then there had to be enough men to go around. Last and best, he is the most adorable man I ever saw at a house-party. He's an angel at breakfast, sings perfectly beautifully—you know he was on the Stanford Glee Club—"

"Humph!" Jack was unimpressed. "If you roped him for Helen Blake to brand, why have you sent for Wally Speed?"

"Well, you see, Berkeley and Helen didn't quite hit it off, and Mr. Speed is—a friend of Culver's." Miss Chapin blushed prettily.

"Oh, I see! I thought myself that this affair had something to do with you and Culver Covington, but I didn't know it had lapsed into a sort of matrimonial round-up. Suppose Miss Blake shouldn't care for Speed after he gets here?"

"Oh, but she will! That's where Berkeley Fresno comes in. When two men begin to fight for her, she'll have to begin to form a preference, and I'm sure it will be for Wally Speed. Don't you see?"

The brother looked at his sister shrewdly. "It seems to me you learned a lot at Smith."

Jean tossed her head. "How absurd! That sort of knowledge is perfectly natural for a girl to have." Then she teased: "But you admit that my selection of a chaperon was excellent, don't you, Jack?"

"Mrs. Keap and I are the best of friends," Jack averred, with supreme dignity. "I'm not in the market, and a man doesn't marry a widow, anyhow. It's too old and experienced a beginning."

Kept His Old Love Letters.

Two thousand three hundred love letters written by six different girls, were found in the room of a bachelor who died recently in Melbourne, Australia, at the age of eighty-two. The letters, which were preserved in an ivory casket, were tied with jeweled silver chains in bundles of 50.

TWO MEN GAME AT FLANDERS' ALLEYS

Hogan-Sanborn Combination Take all Four Points in Close Game

In a pretty game of the "nip and tuck" variety, "Pete" Hogan and "Doc" Sanborn defeated "Pat" Goode and Roger Flaherty in the two-men league at Flanders' alleys last night.

Goode and Flaherty had the best of the argument in the first string until "Doc" Sanborn came across with a nineteen spare in the last box and tied the string total. They won the roll-off in the next string, and by close margins took the rest and the total. "Doc" was high man with 106, and 295. The summary:

O'DONNELL AND ROGERS WIN SEMI-FINAL

Play Clever Pool and Trim McGarry and Cogan 100 Balls to 70

O'Donnell and Rogers won first heat in the semi finals of the Montvale pool tournament last evening, beating Thomas McGarry and Thomas Cogan 100 balls to 70 Both teams played hard for victory, and the losers did some nice shooting at times, but O'Donnell and Rogers were a trifle too strong, repeatedly displaying rare form. In the fifth frame O'Donnell got going in good shape and made a run of 12 for his team, and his partner, Rogers duplicated the feat in the seventh, picking off twelve by a series of neat shots. Cogan and McGarry gave nice exhibitions of pool in the third and ninth frames, both players making hard shots and playing perfect position. As a matter of fact the playing of the losing team on the whole was a dissappointment to its admirers, neither player putting up the game of which he is capable although every now and then one of them would by a clever shot or a long run cause considerable uneasiness in the opposing camp. Cogan was the whole show in the sixth frame, and McGarry was the works in the eleventh, both players shooting swell pool, and pocketing balls from a number of difficult and complicated positions.

O'Donnell wound up the game with a hard shot for the corner pocket.

Tonight William McDonough and Dennis McDonald play Fred Carpenter and Bernard Hanley. The score of last night's game by frames:—

The popular idea of the astronomer, says a writer in the World's Work, as one who spends his time in sleeping by day and peering through the small end of a telescope by night, must be dismissed. "The greater part of the modern astronomer's time," says the article, "is spent in studying photographs," often with a microscope. "Paradoxical as it may seem, an astronomer today gazes more often through a telescope."

Selection of Food Important.

The surest way to keep and restore health is to supply the normal conditions of life, which implies a natural diet containing all the elements of nutrition in true proportion, and based on the proper selection of food for each meal. For it will not do to mix all kinds of otherwise proper food in one meal, but we must made a meal of such foods as are compatible. Otherwise we will turn our stomachs into an acid and gas factory.—The Naturopath.

Hot Water a Curative Agent.

The action of hot water on the body is the simplest and most effective curative agent we have Pain due to neuritis, sciatica, rheumatism or injury are relieved and the first stages of a cold are so greatly relieved that the cold will not progress further. Such a bath is in no way similar to the Turkish bath. A cold bath need not be taken after a hot bath and people living in the temperate zone will be greatly benefited by a really hot bath every other day.

BAD FIRE AVERTED

Patrick Flaherty, driver of the hook and ladder truck, extinguished an incipient fire yesterday afternoon which might have proved serious had it not been for his timely action. About 5 o'clock he noticed smoke rising from the rear of the building on Montvale avenue in which J. H. Bates & Son company stores automobiles. Seizing two fire extinguishers from the truck he hurried to the scene and found that a pile of rubbish was blazing very near the building. He had little difficulty in putting it out. It is a wooden building and a few years ago was used as a garage by J. H. Bates & Son. Had the fire reached the building it would probably have gained a good headway as there was nobody in the building at the time.

PLAYED IN WOBURN, FIRST TIME IN AMERICA

Mendelsshon's Fourth Sonata which will be played by Mr. F. Percyval Lewis, as offertory prelude and as postlude, at the service on Palm Sunday evening is considered by many musicians to be the composer's greatest work for the organ.

It is an interesting fact that this sonata was played, it is believed for the first time in America, by Prof. William H. Clark at a concert given on March 17, 1863, in the Woburn church.

Professor Clark who has won a national reputation by his musical writings and books now lives here as our neighbor, (Woburn and Reading line) and is much interested in the Symphony Cantata which is to be given at the First church next Sunday evening. Especially in the fact that the Fourth sonata will be played in the same church and on the same organ as when it was first introduced to America by him just fifty years ago to a day.

WATER MAIN TO BE REPLACED

Public Works Board to Relay Large Pipe from Pumping Plant to Common

RUSSELL STREET PROTEST

At a special meeting of the board of public works held last evening, all members present, it was decided to replace the water mains from the pumping station up Cove street to Lake avenue, from that point up Lake avenue to Main street, and thence up Main to the northerly end of the common.

The board voted to ask for bids on 450 tons of 16 inch pipe, and 450 tons of 18 inch.

If the bids show that the difference in cost of purchase, and cost of replacement between 16 and 18 inch is not great it is quite likely that the board may vote to use the larger size, otherwise the 16 inch will be purchased. The time expires for filing bids on Wednesday March 26 at 5 o'clock p. m.

Superintendent Spencer of the water department and City Engineer Jones attended the meeting and Mr. Spencer advised relaying with 18 inch pipe. Mr. Jones also favored the 18 inch if it were not too expensive. The estimated cost submitted for purchasing and relaying with 18 inch, including the cost of hydrants and water gates is as follows.

From pumping station up Cove street to junction with Lake avenue total cost $2,521; on Lake avenue from Cove street to Main street total cost, $7,218; on Main street, from Lake avenue to northerly end of Common, total cost. $18,930.

The total cost of relaying with 18 inch pipe the entire distance from the pumping station to the northerly end of the Common using 18 inch pipe is $28,669. The total amount available for main replacement this year is $30,000. Mr. Spencer had figures showing what the proposed work would cost if 16 inch pipe was used on Cove street and Lake avenue but he had not estimated the cost of the work in Main street with 16 inch. He will furnish the board with a complete estimate at its meeting next Monday night.

Commissioner Jones submitted the cost of laying a water main in Lowell street from the hydrant to the house of J. McCoy, a distance of 2,484 feet. The estimates were for 2 inch pipe $1,614.60; for 6 inch pipe $2,930.90. The estimates were ordered sent to the city council, with the recommendation that if the funds are available the appropriation be passed.

Abatements to North Woburn property owners for street oiling, amounting to $193.11, ordered by the city council of last year, were sent to the board of assessors with a recommendation that the abatements be made.

A delegation of taxpayers living on Russell street were at the meeting and asked that something be done to improve the condition of the street, as it is now almost impassable.

They told the board that traffic is almost out of question, and were it not for the aid rendered by a pair of oxen owned by one of the residents that vehicles could not get through. Commissioner Kennedy stated that it would require at least $2,000 to put the street in shape, and that $5,000 would be necessary to do a first class job. He promised the property owners that he would procure an estimate of the probable cost of the work from the city engineer and if the city council will grant an appropriation he will have the highway repaired this season.

City Engineer Jones outlined a plan for an examination of the street lighting system, and with a view to reducing the cost of maintenance and at the same time equalizing the distribution of the service in all parts of the city, and he was authorized to begin the examination at once. Upon suggestion of Commissioner Kennedy Mr. Jones will report his findings at intervals and without waiting until the whole city has been covered. Mr. Jones informed the board that the work would require time and caution in order to get proper results, and that shade trees and dangerous angles in the streets would be factors in his recommendations. His plan is to use one of the maps of Woburn in his possession and show the location of each street light. He further stated that he will make two examinations, one in the day time and the other at night when the lights are burning.

Mayor Henchey mentioned the need of street crossings on Main street, particularly at the churches, and he suggested that when the proper time arrives the street department construct walks where required. Commissioner Kennedy agreed with the mayor, and said that he had in mind a wider crossing than was used heretofore, that would inconvenience automobilists very little and at the same time be of great value to the public. It was decided that the crossings are a necessity and they will be built later.

OPENED FOR BUSINESS IN NEW QUARTERS

Five Cents Savings Bank has Model Equipment

The Woburn Five Cents Savings bank opened for business in its elegant new banking rooms on the street floor of the Savings Bank block at the corner of Pleasant and Federal streets, yesterday morning. The rooms were open for public inspection Tuesday, and those in charge were kept busy showing visitors about. The great fire and burglar proof vaults and the safety deposit vaults with their compartments for the safe keeping of valuables, which are to be rented by the year, attracted a great deal of attention and interest. These are among the best in this section of the state and are the last word in modern vault construction, provided with electrical devices for operation and safety. Already a large number of these have been rented and applications are coming in every day, making it evident that the facilities now offered for local safe deposit conveniences is not only appreciated but really "fills a long felt want."

CHARTER REVISION

The latest thought in municipal government reform is centering upon the idea of centralizing responsibility, and bringing the public official close to the people whose servant he is. The Indiana plan outlined below accentuates the adoption of private and corporate business methods in the transaction of public business. The earnest perusal of the plan is commended to the officials of Woburn.

Indiana bids fair, after years of reactionary politics in matters municipal, to take a long step forward and possibly make a contribution of very considerable value and importance to the development of an adequate municipal charter. Beginning with the Ft. Wayne Commercial club and extending to the Federal Commercial clubs of the state, the Ft. Wayne or business system of government for Indiana cities is making rapid progress in public esteem.

This "business charter" divides the powers of the city government into two general branches—the supervisory and the legislative-administrative. The people elect a board of councilors—the membership of which varies according to the class of the city—and this board of councilors then selects a mayor and a prescribed number of commissioners, including the board of administration, a body in which is vested the power to pass ordinances and the authority to execute the laws and administer all the business of the city. The mayor and each commissioner are to be the head and chief executive officer of a department of the city government.

The duties of the board of councilors are of a nature that will not hinder any man from serving, be he mechanic, business or professional man, an active or retired man. Their work requires only judgment, honesty, impartiality, and a desire to serve the city. Its main duties are:

1—The appointment of a mayor and heads of four departments, to compose the board of administration.

2—The appointment of three civil service commissioners.

3—The appointmentof two election commissioners.

4—The appointment of three school trustees.

5—To force the commissioners to make the tax levy acceptable to two-thirds of its members.

6—By a two-thirds vote to pass upon all franchises and grants, but if such an ordinance is not acceptable to the people, they can apply the referendum vote.

7—To recall the mayor or any or all of the commissioners, for cause, by a two-thirds vote.

8—To receive the statements of the auditor and hear regular reports and proceedings and accomplishments of the board of administration.

In brief, the board of councilors becomes the appointing power of the city, on the basis that for policy one must elect, and for efficiency one must appoint. This plan is very close to the board of directors' plan which so widely prevails in private corporations. The entire control and management of the city government under this "Business Plan" rests with the mayor and four commissioners, who appoint all officials and employees under the civil service rules. The board of councilors cannot appoint a commissioner from its own ranks.

In this board of councilors resides the authority to review and to approve or veto all legislative acts of the board of administration. It also has authority to remove any or all of the board of administration for cause. The board is directly accountable to the people for not only its own official conduct, but for the official conduct of the entire government. By the initiative it may be compelled to carry forward legislative measures desired by the people. By the referendum its acts, or the acts of the board of administration, may be approved and confirmed, or condemned and set aside. By the recall it may be forced to expel from office the mayor or any commissioner or the entire board of administration, and it may itself be expelled, in part or in whole, from office. No ordinance conferring any public franchise or other grant upon any person, company or corporation can become valid or operative until the people shall have had an opportunity to vote upon it. The ward system of representation in councils is wiped out and the representative branch of the government is elected at large from the city. The merit system, under a board of civil service commissioners, is established and maintained.

F. E. Thieme of Ft. Wayne, the author of this plan, thus compares it with the Des Moines plan, which he recognizes as a great improvement over the plan now existing in Indiana cities.

1—Electing officials by the partisan vote remedied in both the business and the Des Moines plan.

2—Election of councilmen from wards remedied in both plans.

3—Electing officials regardless of qualifications for their respestive offices eliminated in the business form, but remains in the Des Moines plan.

4—Short tenure of office eliminated in the business form, but remains in the Des Moines plan.

5—Inability of the people to remove objectionable officials, etc., is accomplished by the recall, under the Des Moines plan, is had on the five commissioners, while in the business form the recall of the five commissioners is in the hands of the board of councilors, but the people have the recall on the board of councilors.

WINCHESTER

There will be a meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Union Friday afternoon at three o'clock. A pleasing program has been arranged and all friends are invited. The presentation of a play is one feature of the afternoon.

An excellent program is being prepared for the Easter concert at the First Baptist church. Special music, both instrumental and vocal has been arranged, and the Sunday school will have an active part as usual. The concert promises to be unusually attractive.

Tonight at 7.45 o'clock the adjourned town meeting will be held in the Town hall. The articles to be considered are of considerable interest as they pertain to the appropriations for laying out of new streets, etc.

Mrs. William G. Richardson returned yesterday from Antrim, N. H., where she has been visiting her son.

A Charitable concert and dance will be held in Lyceum hall, Tuesday evening, March 25. The affair is arranged for the relief of a needy Winchester family, which has no means of support. A talented program has been prepared and the affair is worthy of support. A reasonable admission is charged and all who attend are sure of a good time.

The Boys' Athletic association of the High school will hold a dance in the school gymnasium Saturday evening.

The High school play "Captain Letterblaire" will be presented on April 5, in the Town hall. A large advance sale of tickets is going on and there is every indication of success.

The annual Junior Prom is scheduled for March 29, in the Town hall.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

The principal has recently received from Wellesley college a statement of the records made this year by the girls who last September entered on certificate of this school. These students are Elizabeth Bixby, Rachel Blodgett, and Anna Burdett. The records made are all highly creditable and fully up to the standard of former years, if not better. The total number of separate subjects covered by the report is seventeen. Every one of these subjects has been passed successfully and the credit or honor mark has been secured in sixteen out of the total of seventeen.

Tickets are now being sold by members of the Senior class for the Senior play which will be given Wednesday, April 2, in Lyceum hall. These tickets will be exchanged on Saturday, March 22, for the reserved seat slips. There is indication of a great demand for tickets. The play will be staged under the direction of Miss Charlotte R. Lowell.

Music by the orchestra of the Arlington High school.

Last September twenty-two pupils entered colleges, Normal schools, and Scientific schools from this school. All the reports so far received indicate that these pupils are successful in their work.

The principal will be very glad to talk with the parents of pupils now in the grades who will enter High school in the fall. It is not too early for parents of such pupils to consider the very important question as to what one of the High school courses it will be best to choose. The principal will gladly explain the courses in detail and advise those who may have doubt as to what line of work should be begun. If a pupil chooses the course which proves to be the one not best adapted to his needs serious trouble often results.

Saturday evening, March 15, at 7 o'clock there will be a meeting at the school of the Board of Directors of the Athletic association. This board consists of three members of the school, the chairman of the school board, the principal and assistant principal, and three graduates of the school.

TO MARS IN ROCKET

Inventor Planned to Travel 47,000,000 Miles in 42 Hours.

German Declared He Would Use Cannon for Feat—Was to Be Shot From Big Gun in Cartridge.

Berlin.—Probably the wildest idea that ever found its way into a man's brain was a trip to Mars in a skyrocket. Herr Ganswindt, a rich German manufacturer, confident that he could perform the feat, and was so enthusiastic over the scheme that he wrote a book of his plans and dedicated it to Emperor William.

The vessel in which Herr Ganswindt contemplated making the trip was to be in the shape of a cartridge, which was to attain its first momentum by being shot from a huge cannon. This, he figured, would carry it nearly to the outer limits of the earth's atmosphere, and from then on it would be driven forward by a succession of explosions in its rear compartment.

To accomplish these explosions the thick wall of the car was to be bored through from end to end and the spaces filled with nitroglycerin cartridges, which could be slipped into place and discharged at the will of the driver. Herr Ganswindt stated that by this means the direction as well as the speed of the projectile could be controlled.

To keep himself from being crushed or shaken to pieces by the start and later explosions, he designed the shell so that its base would have double partitions.

Between these there was to be water, a known concussion breaker and powerful spiral springs. His compartment was to be heavily padded and hung with straps in such a way that he would be able to suspend himself in its interior.

The head of the car was to be fitted with a powerful telescope; and various other scientific instruments carefully stored, were to be taken along.

After the atmosphere was once passed the daring explorer believed that he could travel at almost limitless speed, and that the 47,000,000 miles could be covered in the course of forty-two hours. All the provisions necessary would be a little water and a few packages of compressed food tablets. The required oxygen was to be manufactured when needed by the use of certain chemical powders.

The scheme stirred up a great deal of interest at the time and many scientists expressed their opinion that the idea was perfectly plausible. It was even reported that the emperor himself had taken some stock in the enterprise. Ganswindt was determined to undertake the expedition, and even went so far as to get a contract on the building of the vessel, but at last the entreaties of his wife and children conquered and he reluctantly abandoned his adventurous dream.

USE FIREMEN IN BIG RAIDS

Higher Up Circles in New York Gambling Fraternity Are Upset by Ruse.

New York.—Higher up circles of the gambling fraternity were upset by raids which were made simultaneously upon eight big alleged gambling establishments in the Fifth avenue and theatrical districts. Several features of the raids were spectacular and novel. For the first time in the history of the police firemen were used to assist in the raids. As the police in eight taxicab parties, under command of Inspector John F. Dwyer, swooped down upon the suspected places firemen gained entrance by either pretending to be inspecting the buildings or by shouting "Fire!" If successful in getting in the police squads followed; if not, axes and crowbars forced entrance.

But in all of the eight places there was no one to arrest. In some mysterious manner the alleged proprietors had all been "tipped off" and suave butlers left in charge. The collection of gambling instruments and furnishings, however, was one of the finest the police ever laid hands on. The seven vanloads carted to station houses were valued at $25,000. Some of the "stuff" was from the place formerly occupied by Richard A. Canfield. Relics of his de luxe parlors, including rare paintings and tapestries and other art treasures, were found still to adorn the walls.

CABARET SHOWS ARE BARRED

Philadelphia Police Act on Theory That "Beer and Music Do Not Mix."

Philadelphia, Pa.—"Cabaret" entertainments are placed under the ban by a police order issued recently by Director of Public Safety Porter. More than a quarter of a century ago a license court judge in this city laid down the dictum that "beer and music do not mix." Of late years this injunction has been obeyed more in the breach than in the observance. The presence of music has not been objected to by the authorities until recently, when the prevalence of "cabarets" caused the director to order an investigation and the issuance of the order.

The police served notice of the order on the big hotels and cafes as well as the smaller saloons. Managers of the former, however, declare that they are not affected and their orchestras continued to play.

CARPENTER AND HANLEY WIN

Ladies' Auxiliary Witnesses Downfall of McDonough and McDonald

Carpenter and Hanley were there with the goods in the second semi-final game in the Div. 18, A.O.H. pool tournament, played last evening.

Billy McDonough and Dennie McDonald were the victims, and the score was 100 to 59. The loss of the game was a real punch to the "Macs" who were out to make good because a goodly portion of the Ladies' Auxiliary saw the contest by special invitation, and the players were on their mettle, doing their prettiest in order to win the smiles and approbation of the fair sex. It certainly was the irony of fate that the "Macs" got such a trouncing for it was at their invitation that the ladies waited to see the game.

Division 40 Ladies' Auxiliary had just adjourned its regular business meeting, and were preparing to leave the hall when Billy McDonough and Dennie McDonald invited them to remain and witness the trimming they were about to hand out to Hanley the star of the tournament and his partner Fred Carpenter. Dennie McDonald assured the fair spectators that Carpenter and Hanley were nothing but a couple of second raters and he wanted everybody to be in at the slaughter of the innocents. As a prophet Dennie has lost caste among his admirers.

Carpenter and Hanley scored 10 balls to 5 for the "Macs" in the first frame. As McDonald chalked up to shoot in the second frame he wore a serious look, and he knew that it was now or never with him. He must either make good or forever hold his peace, and with a desperation born of despair he made a run of eight balls, taking the long end of the frame, and getting a hearty round of applause, particularly from the ladies. Dennie gracefully doffed his hat several times in acknowledgment. McDonough in the third frame made a run of eight by nice shooting, and like his partner he was rewarded for his good work by the plaudits of the onlookers.

But Hanley and Carpenter were doing things all the while and Hanley never lost his self possessed smile until he pocketed the winning ball. And by the way, even though the ladies present were the guests of the two "Macs" there were many gentlemen present who entertained something stronger than a suspicion that the majority of them were rooting hard for the blonde haired shoemaker to bring home the bacon..

Carpenter proved beyond question that he is some boy with the cue, and in the seventh frame when he made a pretty run of 12 he was forced to lift his hat several times, so enthusiastic was the applause. There will not be any game this evening but tomorrow night Thomas Haley and William Cogan will be pitted against William Kerrigan and Hugh Savage. It has not been definitely announced that the Ladies' Auxiliary will again be the guests of honor but it has leaked out that Billy McDonough and Dennis McDonald are advising against it. The game by frames:—

WILLIAM REDFORD IS BURIED

Funeral Services held Yesterday at His late Home

Rev. Stephen A. Norton, D. D. of the Congregational church conducted funeral services yesterday afternoon at 9 Bennett street for William Redford, who died March 9. A quartette sang two selections that were favorites of Mr. Redford: "Rock of Ages" and "Sweet Bye and Bye." Mishawum lodge A.O. U.W. attended the service and the ritual of the order was read by Master Workman Fred L. Fountain and other officers of the lodge.

Among the floral tributes were: Pillow from wife; large standing piece A.O.U.W.; wreath, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Deering, spray from nephews and nieces and Mr. and Mrs. John Sawyer of Braintree, Bradley P. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Cameron, Reading, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Knight, Hudson, Mrs. Emma Baston, Haverhill, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Poole, Winchester, Mrs. Ella Howard, Medford, Frederic A. Flint, Mrs. M. E. McCormack, Miss Mary Sweetin, Mrs. Emma T. Dow, Miss E. Minnette Dow, Mrs. George F. Eaton and family.

Mr. Redford, who had been an invalid for years, had lived in Woburn since 1871. Prior to the injury which incapacitated him for active labor, he was for a long time engaged in the local provision business. He won many friends by his pleasant companionable manner. His greatest pleasure was in the companionship of his friends, and especially young people.

OLD DAYS RECALLED

Joseph Cisler Was One of Michigan's First Settlers.

Pioneer Was Related to Gen. Winfield Scott and Told of Incidents Not Recorded in History.

Detroit, Mich.—By the death of Joseph Cisler at his home south of Middleville, the last link connecting Barry county of the present day with the very first settlers of the early days has been severed, writes a Hastings (Mich.) correspondent.

Joseph Cisler, who resided in Monroe when the common topics of conversation were the battles in that vicinity during the war of 1812; who knew intimately the historic chiefs of the Ottawa nation; who was a companion of Albert E. Bull, a noted trader of three counties; who received an academic education, and who was at one time one of the most widely known men in Barry county, died in obscurity.

Cisler was a genuine product of the early days. He conversed about the early days and prominent personages of those times as though they were present.

Cisler was born in Lycoming county, New York, Feb. 7, 1826. His mother was Rachel Scott, cousin of Gen. Winfield Scott, noted leader in three wars. In making the journey to Buffalo Cisler's mother carried him upon her back as she traveled afoot. His parents settled at Sandy Creek, near Monroe, in 1830. Everywhere were the ruins of houses burned by the Indians and British, but new houses were being erected among the ruins.

As a boy Cisler was intensely interested in local history and spent much of his time digging for relics among the ruins.

At Knagg's tavern, about eight miles from Monroe, the Cislers were acquainted with a Frenchman who sympathized with the Americans during the war, and he related an incident of unusual interest and one which is not recorded in Michigan history. The British offered rewards for the scalps of Americans, and savages lay in ambush near all of the settlements, waiting to pick off any one who appeared. The government offered a reward for carrying the mail through the enemy's lines and the Frenchman and two other men started on horseback to deliver the mails. They had gone only a few miles when they found a fire on the trail. Apprehending at once why the fire had been placed there, the Frenchman shouted to his companions, "Follow me!" and dashed through the flames. His companions, unheeding his command, went round the fire. Two rifles were fired, and the men were never again seen.

The vicinity of Monroe was rapidly settled, and Houston Cisler, loading his goods into an ox cart, made his way along the wilderness trail leading to Gull Prairie in 1836.

They left Bronson, now Kalamazoo, and followed the old road to Yankee Springs, the famous hostelry on the Grand Rapids stage road. The Cislers located on Bull's Prairie, in Irving township.

Here young Cisler led the life of all pioneer children. He entered the employ of Albert E. Bull of Massachusetts, who conducted stores at White Pigeon, Bronson and Prairie Ronde, or Schoolcraft.

Cisler made the acquaintance of all of the pioneers of this section, and mingled with the Indians, whom he knew intimately.

During the Black Hawk war the Cislers did not join the throngs of frightened settlers who returned east. They had no fear of the Indians, whom they often doctored when they were ill.

Grand Rapids, Gulf Prairie and other places were known only by their Indian names. Chicago was one of the important trading points for the settlers in this vicinity.

Mr. Cisler prospered. He owned large tracts of land, and was one of the leading men of his community. But all of his property dwindled to nothing and he spent his last days on a small sand farm in Yankee Springs township, across which ran the trail his long vanished red brethren traversed years ago. He was married five times. Until the last few months he refused to leave his unprofitable farm, where he resided alone, until one of his sons succeeded in persuading him to reside with him. The old man, sitting under a tree in his dooryard, was a familiar figure during the last few years.

WHAT THE CONVICTS SANG

Missionary Tells of Prisoners Singing Song That Was in Marked Contrast to Their Condition.

London.—The unsuitable nature of the services in prison chapels has caused a protest by Thomas Holmes, a London police court missionary. "A few weeks ago," said Mr. Holmes, "I was conducting an afternoon service, and before me were one thousand men, locked, bolted and barred in prison, with warders to keep guard over them. They were on their knees singing a vesper:

Lord, keep us safe this night,
Secure from all our fears;
May angels guard us while we sleep,
Till morning light appears.

"I at once remonstrated with the prison authorities, and offered to provide them with more suitable words, but they failed to see my point."

WOMEN PLAN A UNIQUE BANK

Suffragettes of New York to Have Financial Institution With Only Their Sex Employed.

New York.—According to proposals and plans now under consideration here, New York in the near future is likely to have the country's first suffragette bank, a real financial institution which will operate like any other except for the fact that from president down to office boy, or rather from presidentess to office girl, only women will be concerned with its management and operation.

Many attempts and proposals have been made before by women identified with the suffrage movement both here and in England to start such an institution, but for one reason or another they have failed to be productive of any definite results.

The women behind the present plan, however, believe that this time they will be successful. Just what the plan is they refuse to disclose until the big meeting at which it is to be made public later in the month. As its backers are women of wealth, there is much curiosity as to just what they propose to do.

It is pointed out, however, that if they adhere to the plan of having no man connected with it, the bank will be unique in more ways than one, since it will have a board of directors none of whom serve on any other bank directorate—that is, unless Mrs. Hetty Green is made a director—and will thus be free from the criticism of interlocking directors.

Of course if a few of the city's more prominent bankers should be asked to serve, this claim to distinction would be lost, but even at that financial circles are expressing considerable curiosity over the plans for a real suffragette bank.

CZARINA ACTIVE IN POLITICS

details for a meeting between King George of England and Czar Nicholas in the near future. She is said to have been largely responsible for influencing the czar to befriend the Balkan states in their war against Turkey.

INDIA IS BURYING ITS GOLD

Natives Hide as Much Every Year as Is Taken From the South African Mines.

London.—There is buried in India every year a sum of gold equal to the amount taken yearly from the mines of South Africa. The African miners extract this treasure from the grip of the earth to put it in circulation; the natives of India seize it with avidity, hoard it and hide it, save it and lay it away. They guard it for the future and effectively remove it from circulation. Thus is the work of the South African miner largely nullified.

These facts are derived from statistics issued by a firm of Indian bankers, and the amount of wealth in gold, jewels and precious stones stored away and buried in India today is practically incalculable.

Gold is put also to some queer uses in India. In some parts of the country thin gold leaves are taken by the people for medicinal purposes, and thousands of dollars' worth is consumed in regilding the domes of religious buildings. A brisk demand having recently been noticed for sovereigns with a shield on the obverse side, an inquiry was made and it was found that a certain rajah had imported them to form a center to each tiny pane in the windows of his palace.

RUINED CITY IS SABATTA

Place Found by Balloonists in Tripoli Identified as Former Flourishing Roman Colony.

Rome.—The ruined city in the midst of the sand wilderness beyond Zavia, in Tripoli, discovered by two Italian engineering officers while reconnoitering in a dirigible balloon, has been identified as Sabatta, a flourishing colony in the days of imperial Rome. Photographs taken by the airmen, received at the war office, show imposing, well-preserved ruins, including numerous marble statues of exceptional beauty.

"Nonsense! Robert Keap is only twenty-three. Why, she hardly knew her husband, even! It was one of those sudden, impulsive affairs that would overwhelm any girl who hadn't seen a man for four years. And then he enlisted in the Spanish War, and was killed."

"Considerate chap!"

"Roberta, you know, is my best friend, after Helen. Do be nice to her, Jack." Miss Chapin sighed. "It is too bad the others couldn't come."

"Yes, a small house-party has its disadvantages. By-the-way, what's that gold thing on your frock?"

"It's a medal. Culver sent it to me."

"Another?"

"Yes, he won the intercollegiate championship again." Miss Chapin proudly extended the emblem on its ribbon.

"I wish to goodness Covington had been here to take Humpy Joe's place," said the young cattle-man as he turned it over. "The boys are just broken-hearted over losing that phonograph."

"I'll get him to run and win it back," Jean offered, easily.

Her brother laughed. "Take my advice, Sis, and don't let Culver mix up in this game! The stakes are too high. I think that Centipede cook is a professional runner, myself, and if our boys were beaten again—well, you and mother and I would have to move out of New Mexico, that's all. No, we'd better let the memory of that defeat die out as quickly as possible. You warn Fresno not to joke about it any more, and I'll take Mrs. Keap off your hands. She may be a widow, she may even be the chaperon, but I'll do it; I will do it," promised Jack—"for my sister's sake."

CHAPTER II.

HELEN BLAKE was undeniably bored. The sultry afternoon was very long—longer even than Berkeley Fresno's autobiography, and quite as dry. It was too hot and dusty to ride, so she took refuge in the latest "best seller," and sought out a hammock on the vine-shaded gallery, where Jean Chapin was writing letters, while the disconsolate Fresno, banished, wandered at large, vaguely injured at her lack of appreciation.

Absent-mindedly, the girls dipped into the box of bonbons between them. Jean finished her correspondence and essayed conversation, but her companion's blond head was bowed over the book in her lap, and the effort met with no response. Lulled by the somniferous droning of insects and lazy echoes from afar, Miss Chapin was on the verge of slumber, when she saw her guest rapidly turn the last pages of her novel, then, with a chocolate between her teeth, read wide-eyed to the finish. Miss Blake closed the book reluctantly, uncurled slowly, then stared out through the dancing heat-waves, her blue eyes shadowed with romance.

"Did she marry him?" queried Jean.

"No, no!" Helen Blake sighed, blissfully. "It was infinitely finer. She killed herself."

"I like to see them get married."

"Naturally. You are at that stage. But I think suicide is more glorious, in many cases."

Miss Chapin yawned openly. "Speaking of suicides, isn't this ranch the deadest place?"

"Oh, I don't think so at all."

"Oh yes, you do, and you needn't be polite just because you're a guest."

"Well, then, to be as truthful as a boarder, it is a little dull. Not for our chaperon, though. The time doesn't seem to drag on her hands. Jack certainly is making it pleasant for her."

"If you call taking her out to watch a lot of bellowing calves get branded, entertainment," Miss Chapin sighed.

Miss Blake leaned forward and read the inscription on her companion's medal. "Oh, isn't it heavy!" feeling it reverently.

"Pure gold, like himself! You should have seen him when he won it. Why, at the finish of that race all the men but Culver were making the most horrible faces. They were simply dead."

Miss Blake's hands were clasped in her lap. "They all make faces," said she. "Have you told Roberta about your engagement?"

"No, she doesn't dream of it, and I don't want her to know. I'm so afraid she'll think, now that mother has gone, that I asked her here just as a chaperon. Perhaps I'll tell her when Culver comes."

"I have heard Culver speak of him, but never as an athlete. Have you and Mr. Speed settled things between you, Helen? I mean, has he—said anything?"

Miss Blake flushed.

"Not exactly." She adjusted a cushion to cover her confusion, then leaned back complacently. "But he has stuttered dangerously several times."

A musical tinkle of silver spurs sounded in the distance, and around the corner of the cook-house opposite came Carara, the Mexican, his wide, spangled sombrero tipped rakishly over one ear, a corn-husk cigarette drooping from his lips.

"It's that romantic Spaniard!" whispered Helen. "What does he want?"

"It's his afternoon call on Mariedetta, the maid," said Jean. "They meet there twice a day, morning and afternoon."

"A lovers' tryst!" breathed Miss Blake, eagerly. "Isn't he graceful and picturesque! Can we watch them?"

"'Sh-h! There she comes!"

From the opposite direction appeared a slim, swarthy Mexican girl, an Indian water-jug balanced upon her shoulders. She was clad in the straight-hanging native garment, belted in with a sash; her feet were in sandals, and she moved as silently as a shadow.

During the four days since Miss Blake's arrival at the Flying Heart Ranch she had seen Mariedetta flitting noiselessly here and there, but had never heard her speak. The pretty, expressionless face beneath the straight black hair had ever retained its wooden stolidity, the velvety eyes had not laughed nor frowned nor sparkled. She seemed to be merely a part of this far southwestern picture; a bit of inanimate yet breathing local color. Now, however, the girl dropped her jug, and with a low cry glided to her lover, who tossed aside his cigarette and took her in his arms. From this distance their words were indistinguishable.

"How perfectly romantic," said the Eastern girl, breathlessly. "I had no idea Mariedetta could love anybody."

"She is a volcano," Jean answered.

"Why, it's like a play!"

"And it goes on all the time."

"How gentle and sweet he is! I think he is charming. He is not at all like the other cowboys, is he?"

While the two witnesses of the scene were eagerly discussing it, Joy, the Chinese cook, emerged from the kitchen bearing a bucket of water, his presence hidden from the lovers by the corner of the building. Carara languidly released his inamorata from his embrace and lounged out of sight around the building, pausing at the farther corner to waft a graceful kiss from the ends of his fingers, as with a farewell flash of his white teeth he disappeared. Mariedetta recovered her water-jug and glided onward into the court in front of the cook-house, her face masklike, her movements deliberate as usual.

Joy, spying the girl, grinned at her. She tossed her head coquettishly and her step slackened, whereupon the cook, with a sly glance around, tapped her gently on the arm, and said:

"Nice li'l gally."

"The idea!" indignantly exclaimed Miss Blake from her hammock.

But Mariedetta was not offended. Instead she smiled over her shoulder as she had smiled at her lover an instant before.

"Me like you fine. You like pie?" Joy nodded toward the door of the culinary department, as if to make free of his hospitality, at the instant that Carara, who had circled the building, came into view from the opposite side, a fresh cigarette between his lips. His languor vanished at the first glimpse of the scene, and he strode toward the white-clad celestial, who dove through the open door like a prairie dog into his hole. Carara followed at his heels.

"It serves him right!" cried Miss Blake, rising. "I hope Mr. Carara—"

A din of falling pots and pans issued from the cook-house, mingled with shrill cries and soft Spanish imprecations; then, with one long-drawn wail, the pandemonium ceased as suddenly as it had commenced, and Carara issued forth, black with anger.

"Ha!" said he, scowling at Mariedetta, who had retreated, her hand upon her bosom. He exhaled a lungful of cigarette smoke through his nostrils fiercely. "You play wit' me, eh?"

"No, no!" Mariedetta ran to him, and, seizing his arm, cooed amorously in Spanish.

"Bah! Vamos!" Carara flung her from him, and stalked away.

"Well, of all the outrageous things!" said Miss Blake. "Why, she was actually flirting with that Chinaman."

"Mariedetta flirts with every man she can find," said Jean, calmly, "but she doesn't mean any harm. She'll marry Carara some time—if he doesn't kill her."

"Kill her!" Miss Blake's eyes were round. "He wouldn't do that!"

"Indeed, yes. He is a Mexican, and he has a terrible temper."

Miss Blake sank back into the hammock. "How perfectly dreadful! And yet—it must be heavenly to love a man who would kill you."

Miss Chapin lost herself in meditation for an instant. "Culver is almost like that when he is angry. Hello, here comes our foreman!"

Stover, a tall, gangling cattle-man with drooping grizzled mustache, came shambling up to the steps. He dusted his boots with his sombrero and cleared his throat.

"'Evening, Miss Jean. Is Mr. Chapin around?"

"I think you'll find him down by the spring-house. Can I do anything for you?"

"Nope!" Stover sighed heavily, and got his frame gradually into motion again.

"It's a Medal. Culver Sent It to Me."

"You're not looking well, Stover. Are you ill?" inquired Miss Chapin.

"Not physical," said the foreman, checking the movement which had not yet comunicated itself the entire length of his frame. "I reckon my sperret's broke, that's all."

"Haven't you recovered from that foot-race?"

"I have not, and I never will, so long as that ornery Centipede outfit has got it on us."

"Nonsense, Stover!"

"What have they done?" inquired Miss Blake, curiously. "I haven't heard about any foot-race."

"You tell her," said the man, with another sigh, and a hopeless gesture that told the depth of his feelings.

"Why, Stover hired a fellow a couple of months ago as a horse-wrangler. The man said he was hungry, and made a good impression, so we put him on."

Here Stover slowly raised one booted foot and kicked his other calf.

"The boys nicknamed him Humpy Joe—"

"Why, poor thing! Was he hump-backed?" inquired Helen.

"No," answered Still Bill. "Humpback is lucky. We called him Humpy Joe because when it came to running he could sure hump himself."

"Soon after Joseph went to work," Jean continued, "the Centipede outfit hired a new cook. You know the Centipede Ranch—the one you see over yonder by the foot-hills."

"This Grubslinger Thinks He Can Run."

"It was'nt 'soon after,' it was simultaneous," said Stover, darkly. "We're beginnin' to see plain at last." He went on as if to air the injury that was gnawing him. "One day we hear that this grub-slinger over yonder thinks he can run, which same is as welcome to us as the smell of flowers on a spring breeze, for Humpy Joe had amused us in his idle hours by running jack-rabbits to earth—"

"Not really?" said Miss Blake.

"Well, no, but from what we see we judge he'd ought to limp a hundred yards in about nothing and three-fifths seconds, so we frame a race between him and the Centipede Cook. With tumulchous joy we bet our wages and all the loose gear we have, and in a burst of childish enthusiasm we put up—the talking-machine."

"A phonograph?"

"Yes. An Echo Phonograph," said Miss Chapin.

"Of New York and Paris," said Stover.

"Our boys won it from this very Centipede outfit at a bronco-busting tournament in Cheyenne."

"Wyoming." Stover made the location definite.

"The Centipede crowd took their defeat badly on Frontier Day, and swore to get even."

"And was Humpy Joe defeated?" asked Helen.

"Was he?" Still Bill shook his head sadly, and sighed for a third time. "It looked like he was running backward, miss."

"But really he was only beaten a foot. It was a wonderful race. I saw it," said Jean. "It made me think of the races at college."

Foley's "Bears" Meet McNelly's "Goats"

Latter Team take 3 of 4 Points

Two teams of picked bowlers from the Winchester Post office met on Flanders' alleys last evening to settle a dispute over the supremacy of each in bowling. Harrold bunched 3 spares in the last string and pulled out a big string and a needed help to the team, in order to win. "Cap' McNally broke the records of the alleys and rolled 24 for a string total. MADDEN HEARING THIS EVENING

Star Chamber Procedure Policy of Chief Engineer Tracy

Tonight in the committee meeting room adjoining the council chamber, Chief Engineer Frank E. Tracy will grant a hearing to Edward J. Madden who was recently removed by him from the fire department.

The hearing is the result of a petition filed with the chief engineer by Bernard J. Golden,counsel for Madden, in which the attorney asks that the removal of his client be explained

Chief Tracy said today that the hearing will be strictly private, and that representatives of the press would not be permitted to attend. City Solicitor J. Fred Maloney will be present to pass upon any legal problems that may arise, and attorney Golden will look after the interests of Madden. Madden up to the time of his removal had served 19 years in the department, and was lieutenant of hose company 3,

His removal from the service caused no end of comment throughout the city and the interest has not abated in the least. The startling feature of the removal of the lieutenant was that the peremptory discharge occurred on the day following the reading of a communication at a meeting of the city council, in which Madden requested an investigation of existing conditions at the hose three company. This investigation is said to have been held by the aldermanic committee on fire behind closed doors, and the committee finding is expected to be presented at the session of the council on next Thursday evening.

MUNICIPAL CANNERY

It is always a pleasing duty to chronicle activity in local industry, and it is with a genuine thrill that the JOURNAL announces that the municipal cannery is running full and overtime.

The first boom experienced in this department of municipal activity was when the council committee on fire started canning the hose three investigation. The machinery had not been in commission for many moons and sadly needed lubrication, but the workmen soon adjusted everything, so that the process was successful and the transactions of the committee together with the testimony elicited are up to the present time at least safely stowed away and hermetically sealed. No finer sample of high grade canned work has ever been turned out here or elsewhere.

The second batch of work from the municipal workshop will be put through this evening, when Chief Engineer Tracy will "grant a hearing" to Edward J. Madden formerly lieutenant of hose three company, who was removed by the chief engineer within twelve hours after Madden had the temerity to ask for an investigation of conditions in the Cummingsville company.

The cannery will be in full blast this evening, but the chief engineer says that the factory doors will be closed and barred while the batch is in process. There are lots of people who would like to know how the removal mixture is compounded, and the JOURNAL stands ready to publish the formula if it can get it, but access to the cannery is denied it, and the lips of the Czar of the department are sealed as close as the marketable product.

It is a close corporation, that municipal cannery. And isn't it funny how it works under cover and responsible to no one. Tonight's chapter in its history is called a hearing. What a travesty, when it is remembered that the chief engineer removes the department employe without a word of explanation beyond the trite expression "for good of the service," then grants a hearing, at which he is complainant, sole witness, judge and jury. Great is the cannery and this year's city officials are its prophets!

WINCHESTER TOWN MEETING

The chief business transacted at the adjourned meeting last night was as follows: An order for issuing $20,000 in bonds, payable at the rate of $3,000 a year for seven years, was adopted. This loan is to provide the town with granolithic sidewalks. $14,100 was voted to be appropriated for the fire department expenses. Ernest W. Hatch, the assistant postmaster, offered an order for the town to give the site of the old Whitney Machine shop, to the government for the location of the new $75,000 post office, recently provided for by Congress. The present idea in view is to make that site a part of the Parkway extension in Winchester. The building of a beautiful edifice such as is likely to be in the case of the new post office would greatly beautify and enhance the value of adjacent property.

The moderator of the meeting, Frederick M. Ives, is to appoint, a committee of seven to consider the proposition. The remainder of the meeting was used in discussing the new by-laws of the town.

Much interest was shown in the meeting, large numbers of ladies and high school pupils, filling the balconies.

HIGH SCHOOL JANITOR RETIRES

Charles A. Webber Presented With $10 in Gold this Afternoon

At the close of the school session at the high school today Principal George W. Low called Charles A. Webber, janitor of the building into the library, and in behalf of the high school teachers and Mrs. Taylor and Mrs. Andrews who are in charge of the lunch counter, presented Mr. Webber with ten dollars in gold. Mr. Webber ends his service voluntarily as janitor at the high school today, leaving Woburn next week Tuesday for Florida where he owns some land that he is anxious to develop and improve. Mr. Low assured the retiring janitor that his departure was regretted by all with whom he was associated, and in behalf of the assembled high school attaches wished him luck and prosperity in the future. Mr. Webber expressed his thanks for the gift, saying that he fully appreciated the favors he had been the recipient of while connected with the school. He said he was sorry to leave but his interests in Florida allowed no alternative. Mr. Webber has been an employee of the school since it was opened and was a model janitor. His successor has not yet been selected, but it is probable that the high school committee will name somebody for the position temporarily, until the entire school board can consider the vacancy.

SHOOK HANDS WITH LINCOLN

Mrs. Mary S. Stinson, 77 Yesterday, Recalls Meeting the Martyred President

Mrs. Mary S. Stinson, who makes her home with her nephew Frank B. Richardson, 9 Mishawum road, recalls with pleasure that she met and shook hands with Abraham Lincoln while he held the high office of president of the United States.

Mrs. Stinson, who was 77 years of age yesterday, was a telegrapher in East Boston in 1865. And it was during a trip that she attended a public reception at the White House and met the nation's executive. She says he had the saddest face she ever saw. Mrs. Stinson attended Ford's theater the night before President Lincoln was shot by Booth in that playhouse. She recalls the play, "The American Cousin," and the fact that Mrs. Lincoln was present.

Mrs. Stinson, who spent her birthday anniversary yesterday with a friend in Jamaica Plain, is in splendid health, with faculties undimmed. She is a very industrious woman, her motto being "Each day sees some task begun; each evening sees it close." Mrs. Stinson was born in Reading, near the Woburn line, daughter of Caleb and Abigail (Fowle) McIntire. After her mother's death she lived on the old Fowle homestead in Woburn, where the James Skinner residence now is. She joined the First Congregational church under the pastorate of Rev. Jonathan Edwards. She was a pupil at the Warren academy, and afterwards attended the Bridgewater Normal school. She was a member of the singing school conducted many years ago by Dr. Ephraim Cutter, father of Librarian Emeritus William R. Cutter.

She married William Stinson in East Boston in 1866, and for 26 years they lived there. Since her husband's death 15 years ago, she has resided in Woburn. There was no formal observance of the birthday anniversary, but she was remembered by many tried and true friends.

Freezing Not Harmful to Fishes.

Fishes do not need to maintain a uniform or nearly even bodily temperature, and they can be frozen solid and thawed out months afterwards without injury to their health, if the process is not too sudden. Such changes happen to millions of them every year in the rivers of the colder parts of Siberia.

LIGHT GLOBE FOR DEFENSE

Electrical Weapon Invented by Philadelphian Will Subdue the Disorderly.

Philadelphia.—Policemen, obdurate criminals, women who have to be abroad at night, reformers, working girls and Johnny pestered members of the chorus—there's a combination!—ought to rise up and call blessed Jeremiah Creedon, the Philadelphia North American says.

Mr. Creedon, one of the oldest and most respected engineers of the Baltimore and Ohio, has evolved by profound thought on his days off an invention, which, he says, will revolutionize methods of "making arrests, subduing unruly persons and resisting attacks." And Uncle Sam has just signed, sealed and delivered to him a patent for his device.

"Don't club 'em; shock 'em," is Mr. Creedon's advice to the police in handling the obstreperous. He proposes to arm the guardian of the law with portable lightning, easily applied, through the hands, where it will do the most good.

With the same innocent means of defense, he points out, the timid spinster may come and go at any hour, the shop girl need no longer use her hatpin as a lethal weapon. For, at the waist of each unprotected female there may be a battery, and in her gloves electrodes; and she has simply to grasp an assailant, be he footpad or masher, and he becomes helpless in her hands.

It was the sight of an unruly prisoner being clubbed into submission that stirred the compassion and the inventive genius of Mr. Creedon. He's a big, two fisted chap himself, but he couldn't stand the spectacle of even a criminal suffering such needless punishment. From this his idea grew until he saw how it could be adapted for the protection of night workers and unescorted women.

Creedon's device is simple yet effective. It consists essentially of a pair of gloves provided with electrodes, which may be brought in contact with an assailant by the hand of the wearer. An electric circuit is formed as soon as the electrodes are touched and the current is sufficient to administer such a shock that the victim will be helpless as long as the current is kept on.

AVERS LINCOLN SAVED HIM

Witness in Eckert Will Contest Repeats Anecdote Concerning Former Head of Western Union.

New York.—How Gen. Thomas T. Eckert, former head of the Western Union Telegraph company, nearly lost his commission during the Civil war was related on the witness stand here during the trial of the contest over the general's will, which his son, James Clendennin Eckert, is pressing.

The anecdote was repeated as the witness said General Eckert had related it to him by Rev. James Veit, assistant pastor of the Church of Our Lady of Lourdes here, testifying for the defense.

"In 1862," he quoted General Eckert as saying, "when I was an officer in charge of the telegraph bureau with the rank of captain, Secretary of War Stanton called me to his office. He told me he had received advice that I was not attending to my duties, and that my dismissal had been written out. While I was standing speechless before him, I felt a hand on my shoulder, and some one said:

"'I vouch for Captain Eckert. I have had occasion to go to his office several times and I always found him there, attending to his duties.' It was Abraham Lincoln. Stanton broke the silence. 'I apologize to Major Eckert,' he said."

GERMAN DANCE IS CENSORED

Press Ball at Munich, Attended by Society, Considerably Enlivened by Police Activity.

Berlin.—According to a telegram from Munich, the Press ball, which is the chief event of the carnival season in the Bavarian capital, and is attended by many members of the best society, was this year watched over by a force of five police officials, whose duty it was to prevent certain degenerations of the two-step.

One of these guardians of decorum stood in the center of the hall and shouted exhortations and menaces to couples of dancers who, he thought, showed a tendency to drop into the prohibited modes. Quite a number of persons, some, it is said, widely known women of irreproachable character, were actually marched off blushing crimson, to be cross-examined as to the propriety of their movements.

In Germany, it is true, there are very few limits to the interference of the police, but as a rule they are much more to the fore in political meetings than in ballrooms.

Gold Very Scarce in France.

Paris.—A prominent subject of conversation has recently been the phenomenal scarcity of gold coin throughout France, during the past few months. Even at the banks and money changers Americans have complained of the inconvenience in getting change for checks, letters of credit and drafts solely in notes and silver, the latter being mainly the heavy and cumbersome five-franc pieces. Fianace minister, Klotz states that the chief reason for the shortage is the large reserves which are being laid up on all sides through fear of a political crisis or even of war. The second cause is the large exportation of gold to other countries.

GRAVE POST FOUND

Marker at Burial Place of Illinois Pioneer Uncovered.

One Present at Ceremony Tells of Weird Rites of Fox Indians in Placing Memorial Over Grave of Col. George Davenport.

Rock Island, Ill.—An old cedar post placed at the head of the grave of a murdered Illinois pioneer by friendly Fox Indians, who mourned the settler's death, has been uncovered in a heap of musty legal papers in the office of an attorney here. Though worm-eaten and partially-decayed at the ends, the unique grave marker still shows weird traces that once were crude sketches symbolical of grief and battlefield achievements.

A band of prairie brigands swooped down upon the home of Col. George Davenport, a wealthy settler who owned the island in the Mississippi on which the government arsenal is now built, and murdered him. The crime committed July 4, 1845, is recalled by old residents in Rock Island and Davenport, Iowa, which town, by the way, is named after the victim. About the same time that one of the murderers was hanged for the bloody deed some Fox Indians who, through their dealings with Davenport, had come to have a deep friendship for him, fashioned this old cedar grave post and erected it at the head of his grave.

For some years the post marked the grave of Colonel Davenport. Then his body was removed to a family lot in Chippianock cemetery, south of Rock Island, and for years the old grave post of the Indians was thought to be lost. Recently it was discovered when the musty contents of an old law office were moved into modern quarters. The founder of the firm had been Davenport's attorney.

The weird rites with which the Indians planted the grave plot are narrated by one who was present at the ceremony and to whom, according to his statement, the facts stand out in his memory as clearly as ever.

"It was on a Friday afternoon, about the middle of the year 1845 that I went to the island where the Davenport homestead was and where Col. George had been buried. Arrived there, I beheld a band of Fox Indians, with whom he had always been very friendly, lying in a circle about his grave. In the center of the ring of prostrate Indians, the head of the grave, rose a new white cedar post.

"The ceremony began when two of the braves arose and drew weird figures upon the post. Others did the same in pairs and in turn. A third Indian, carrying a war club, advanced and drank to the health of the decedent, then walked three times around the grave, delivering himself of most earnest exhortations. This was repeated until each Indian had taken part in the ceremony. The pictures that were drawn upon the post were to represent the crowning achievements of him who drew them and at the same time were meant to display the grief of the Indians at the loss of their friend.

"Following the ceremony of planting the post a huge feast was set upon the grass. A health was drunk invoking the Great Spirit to open the doors to admit their friend Colonel Davenport. Then meat of various kinds was brought upon the table. After the dinner several Indian dances were indulged in. I left the braves as nightfall came, gathered about a camp fire, preparing further to do honor to their murdered friend."

BACK NUMBER KING PASSES

"Jake" Finds New Yorkers Don't Care for Newspapers of Past Age and Retires From Business.

New York.—"Jake, the Back Number King," has gone out of business, according to notice posted at his Park row stand. His collection of more than 85,000 back numbers of newspapers—in the accumulation of which he has spent the past twelve years, with occasional lucky sales at high prices—he has sold to a paper mill for the paltry sum of $37.50.

At back number rates Jake would have got a million dollars for the papers, he estimates, but this isn't a "back number age," he has learned. "People don't care any more for the past because they are too busy thinking of the future. I could name any sum I wanted for a copy of a newspaper three years hence, but nobody cares a rap for a paper three years old."

The highest price "Jake" ever got for a single old paper was $70 from a banker, he says, and for a set of thirty papers once he received $125, but as a going business the back number trade is a slow one for Park row.

WILL PROVIDE NOON NAPS

"Siesta, Inc.," to Offer All Employes Place for Lunch-Hour Rest Each Day.

Berlin.—"Siesta, Incorporated," is the name of a company just organized in Berlin, which has for its purpose the providing of a place where store clerks and office employes may take a "noon siesta," or "noon nap." Clerks in Berlin get one and one-half hours for luncheon. As many live too far out to go home, they spend the time in cafes, which, however, afford no place to lie down. The new company is preparing to open a place with soft cots, where clerks may sleep at noon.

QUEEN FOR DRESS ECONOMY

Mary Frowns Upon Costume Balls and Says Women Should Keep Within Bank Roll.

London.—To the relief of those whose pocket-books are not so large as their ambitions, the word has gone around in the select circle of society which regulates such functions that this season's balls are to be of a simple character and without the slightest suggestion of "freakiness." The reason is that no hostess who encourages anything "daring" in the way of costumes is likely to receive Queen Mary's patronage.

The queen has not issued any official instructions, but her comments on several recent extravagant costume balls and other functions of an unusual character have been duly passed on by the royal ladies in waiting. Herself a simple dresser, Queen Mary has the strongest possible objection to extravagance and extreme fashions. For this reason the hobble, directoire and panier skirts are never seen in her entourage.

She has no real objection to fancy dress balls, but the queen's caustic comments on what she termed the immodesty of the costumes worn by dancers at the recent Arabian Nights, Post-Impressionist and Four Arts balls gave little pleasure to the culprits, but great joy to the retailers of court gossip.

"No woman should dress beyond the limits of her bank role," is Queen Mary's motto and, although the dressmakers are by no means pleased, there has been a distinct slump in costly entertainments lately.

GIVES UP ATTEMPT TO DROWN

New Yorker Gets Home While Spouse With Baby Looks for Him on River Front.

New York.—Mourned as a suicide, John McGowan, who leaped from an East river ferry boat, turned up at his tenement here while his young wife, with her baby, was searching the river front for his body. A vision of his little family left to starve or accept charity had turned McGowan's intended self-destruction to eagerness to live.

A photograph of McGowan's wife and baby was found on the ferry boat after he had leaped overboard in the dark, leading to his identification. Reporters were waiting at his home to learn further of the suicide, when, during Mrs. McGowan's absence in search of the body, McGowan, a tall, muscular chap, walked in.

"I simply couldn't stand being without work any longer," he said. "I went on the ferry boat and waited until it was in the middle of the river. Then I took off my coat and dived into the water. I must have been pretty close to the bottom of the river when I realized what a coward I was. I was almost all in before I got back to the surface. Then I got on my back and took deep breaths until my strength came back and struck out for shore. Men at the electric light station put me into their boiler room and gave me hot drinks and when I left them yesterday they fitted me out in a coat and hat."

ONION SCORES BIG VICTORY

County Attorney Refuses Warrant for Man on Woman's Complaint Against Vegetable.

Iola, Kan.—The onion won a legal skirmish here when County Attorney Forrest refused to issue a warrant for Willis Thompson, charged by Miss Lucretia Campbell, a neighbor, with permitting the cooking of onions in his home, the odors from which filled her rooms, causing her great discomfort. Miss Campbell declared that the odor of onions was poisonous to her, and upon that contention she based her demand that Thompson be arrested.

"The state of Kansas will not lend its aid to banish the onion from the home," said the county attorney. "Miss Campbell's remedy is an injunction issued in the district court, if she can obtain one."

Mr. Forrest paid a high tribute to the healthful properties of the onion, quoting Hetty Green as saying she attributed her health and wealth to eating the vegetable daily.

Burns Barns to Hear Cows.

Evansville, Ind.—Walter Bruner, aged forty-six, has a strange ear for music. He has confessed to the burning of big dairy barns owned by four milk companies, and when asked why he did so, said he wanted to hear the animals bellow.

Miss Blake puckered her brows trying to think.

"Joseph," she said. "No, I don't think I have seen him."

Stover's lips met grimly. "I don't reckon you have, miss. Since that race he has been hard to descry. He passed from view hurriedly, so to speak, headed toward the foot-hills and leaping from crag to crag like the hardy shamrock of the Swiss Alps."

Miss Blake giggled. "What made him hurry so?"

"Us!" Stover gazed at her solemnly. "We ain't none of us been the same since that foot-race. You see it ain't the financial value of that Echo Phonograph, nor the 'double cross' that hurts: it's the fact that the mangiest outfit in the Territory has trimmed us out of the one thing that stands for honor and excellence and 'scientific attainment,' as the judge said when we won it. That talking-machine meant more to us than you Eastern folks can understand, I reckon."

"If I were you I would cheer up," said Miss Blake, kindly, and with some importance. "Miss Chapin has a college friend coming this week, and he can win back your trophy."

Stover glanced up at Jean quickly. "Is that right, Miss Chapin?"

"He can if he will," Jean asserted. "Can he run?"

"He is the intercollegiate champion," declared that young lady, with proud dignity.

"And do you reckon he'd run for us and the Echo Phonograph of New York and Paris, if we framed a race? It's an honor!"

But Miss Chapin recalled her brother's caution of the day before, and hesitated.

"I—I don't think he would. You see, he is an amateur—he might be out of training—"

"The idea!" exclaimed Miss Blake, indignantly. "If Culver won't run, I know who will!" She closed her lips firmly, and turned to the foreman. "You tell your friends that we'll see you get your trophy back."

"Helen, I—"

"I mean it!" declared Miss Blake, with spirit.

Stover bowed loosely. "Thank you, miss. The very thought of it will cheer up the gang. Life 'round here is blacker 'n a spade flush. I think I'll tell Willie." He shambled rapidly off around the house.

"Helen dear, I don't want Culver to get mixed up in this affair," explained Miss Chapin, as soon as they were alone. "It's all utterly foolish. Jack doesn't want him to, either."

"Very well. If Culver doesn't feel that he can beat that cook running, I know who will try. Mr. Speed will do anything I ask. It's a shame the way those men have been treated."

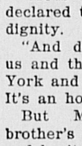

"But Mr. Speed isn't a sprinter."

"Indeed!" Miss Blake bridled. "Perhaps Culver Covington isn't the only athlete in Yale College. I happen to know what I'm talking about."

"I don't think he will consent when he learns the truth."

"I assure you," said Miss Blake, sweetly, "he will be delighted."

CHAPTER III.

It was still early in the afternoon when Jack Chapin and the youthful chaperon found the other young people together on the gallery.

"Here's a telegram from Speed," began Jack.

"It's terribly funny," said Mrs. Keap. "That Mexican brought it to us down at the spring-house."

Miss Blake lost her bored expression, and sat up in the hammock.

"'Mr. Jack Chapin,'" read the owner of the Flying Heart Ranch. "'Dear Jack: I couldn't wait for Covington, so meet with brass-band and fireworks this afternoon. Have flowers in bloom in the little park beside the depot, and see that the daisies nod to me.—J. Wallingford Speed.'"

"Park, eh?" said Fresno, dryly. "Telegraph office, water-tank, and a cattle-chute. Where does this fellow think he is?"

"Here's a postcript," added Chapin.

"'I have a valet who does not seem to enjoy the trip. Divide a kiss among the girls.'"

"Well, well! He's stingy with his kisses," observed Berkeley. "Who is this humorous party?"

"He was a Freshman at Yale the year I graduated," explained Jack.

"Too bad he never got out of that class." It was evident that Mr. Speed's levity made no impression upon the Glee Club tenor. "He hates to talk about himself, doesn't he?"

"I think he is very clever," said Miss Blake, warmly.

"How well do you know him?"

"Not as well as I'd like to."

Fresno puffed at his little pipe without remarking at this.

"Well, who wants to go and meet him?" queried Jack.

"Won't you?" asked his sister.

"I can't. I've just got word from the Eleven X that I'm wanted. The foreman is hurt. I may not be back for some time."

"Nigger Mike met me," observed Fresno, darkly.

"Then Nigger Mike for Speed," laughed the cattle-man. "I've told Carara to hitch up the pintos for me. I must be going."

"I'll see that you are safely started," said the young widow; and leaving the trio on the gallery, they entered the house.

When they had gone Jean smiled wisely at Helen. "Roberta's such a thoughtful chaperon," she observed, whereupon Miss Blake giggled.

As for Mrs. Keap, she was inquiring of Jack with genuine solicitude:

"Do you really mean that you may be gone for some time?"

"I do. It may be a week; it may be longer; I can't tell until I get over there."

"I'm sorry." Mrs. Keap's face showed some disappointment.

"So am I."

"I shall have to look out for these young people all by myself."

"What a queer little way you have of talking, as if you were years and years old."

"I do feel as if I were. I—I—well I have had an unhappy experience. You know unhappiness builds months into years."

"When Jean got up this house

"We've Got Another Foot-Runner."

party," young Chapin began, absently. "I thought I should be bored to death. But—I haven't been. You know, I don't want to go over there?" He nodded vaguely toward the south.

"I thought perhaps it suited your convenience." His companion watched him gravely. "Are you quite sure that your sister's guests have not—had something to do with this sudden determination?"

"I am quite sure. I never liked the old Flying Heart so much as I do today. I never regretted leaving it so much as I do at this moment."

"We may be gone before you return."

Young Chapin started. "You don't mean that, really?"

Mrs. Keap nodded her dark head. "It was all very well for me to chaperon Helen on the way out from the east, but—it isn't exactly regular for me to play that part here with other young people to look after."

"But you understand, of course—Jean must have explained to you. Mother was called away suddenly, and she can't get back now. You surely won't leave—you can't." Chapin added, hopefully: "Why, you would break up Jean's party. You see, there's nobody around here to take your place."

"But—"

"Nonsense! This is an unconventional country. What's wrong with you as a chaperon, anyway? Nobody out here even knows what a chaperon is. And I'll be back as soon as I can."

"Do you really think that would help?" Roberta's eyes laughed humorously.

"I'm not thinking of the others, I'm thinking of myself," declared the young man, boldly. "I don't want you to go before I return. You must not! If you go, I—I shall follow you." He grasped her hand impulsively.

"Oh!" exclaimed the chaperon. "This makes it even more impossible. Go! Go!" She pushed him away, her color surging. "Go to your old Eleven X Ranch right away."

"But I mean it," he declared, earnestly. Then, as she retreated farther: "It's no use, I shan't go now until—"

"You have known me less than a week!"

"That is long enough. Roberta—"

Mrs. Keap spoke with honest embarrassment. "Listen! Don't you see what a situation this is? If Jean and Helen should ever discover—"

"Jean planned it all; even this."

Mrs. Keap stared at him in horrified silence.

"You do love me, Roberta?" Chapin undertook to remove the girl's hands from her face, when a slight cough in the hall behind caused him to turn suddenly in time to see Berkeley Fresno passing the open door.

"There! You see!" Mrs. Keap's face was tragic. "You see!" She turned and fled, leaving the master of the ranch in the middle of the floor, bewildered, but a bit inclined to be happy. A moment later the plump face of Berkeley Fresno appeared cautiously around the door-jamb. He coughed again gravely.

"I happened to be passing," said he. "You'll pardon me?"

"This is the most thickly settled spot in New Mexico!" Chapin declared with an artificial laugh, choking his indignation.

Fresno slowly brought his round body out from concealment.

"I came in to get a match."

"Why don't you carry matches?"

Fresno puffed complacently upon his pipe. "This," he mused, as his host departed, "eliminates the chaperon, and that helps some."

* * * * *

Still Bill Stover lost no time in breaking the news to the boys.

"There's something comin' off," he advised Willie. "We've got another foot-runner!"

If he had hoped for an outburst of rapture on the part of the little gun man he was disappointed, for Willie shifted his holster, smiled evilly through his glasses, and inquired, with ominous restraint:

"Where is he?"

Being the one man on the Flying Heart who had occasion to wear a gun, Willie seldom smiled from a sense of humor. Here it may be said that, deceived at first by his scholarly appearance, his fellow-laborers had jibed at Willie's affectation of a swinging holster, but the custom had languished abruptly. When it became known who he was, the other ranch-hands had volubly declared that this was a free country, where a man might exercise a wide discretion in the choice of personal adornment; and as for them, they avowed unanimously that the practice of packing a Colts was one which met with their most cordial approbation. In time Willie's six-shooter had become accepted as a part of the local scenery, and, like the scenery, no one thought of remarking upon it, least of all those who best knew his lack of humor. He had come to them out of the Nowhere, some four years previously, and while he never spoke of himself, and discouraged reminiscence in others, it became known through those vague uncharted channels by which news travels on the frontier, that back in the Texas Panhandle there was a limping marshal who felt regrets at mention of his name, and that farther north were other men who had a superstitious dread of undersized cowmen with spectacles.

"This here is a real foot-runner," said Stover.

"Exactly," agreed the other. "Where is he?"

"He'll be here this afternoon. Nigger Mike's bringin' him over from the railroad. He's a guest."

"Oh!"

"Yep! He's intercollegit champeen of Yale."

"Yale?" repeated the near-sighted man. "Don't know's I ever been there. Much of a town?"

"I ain't never traveled east myself, but Miss Jean and the little yaller-haired girl say he's the fastest man in the world. I figgered we might rib up something with the Contipede." Still Bill winked sagely.

"See here, do you reckon he'd run?"

"Sure! He's a friend of the boss. And he'll run on the level too. He can't be nothin' like Humpy."

"If he is, I'll git him," said the cowboy. "Oh, I'll git him sure, guest or no guest. But how about the phonograph?"

"The Centinede will put it up quick enough; there ain't no sentiment in that outfit."

"Then it sounds good."

"An' it 'll work. Gallagher's anxious to trim us again. Some folks can't stand prosperity."

Willie spat unerringly at a grasshopper. "Lord!" said he, "it's too good! It don't sound possible."

"Well, it is, and our man will be here this evenin'. Watch out for Nigger Mike, and when he drives up let's give this party a welcome that 'll warm his heart on the jump. There's nothin' like a good impression."

"I'll be on the job," assured Willie. "But I state right here and now, if we do get a race there ain't a-goin' to be no chance of our losin' for a second time."

And Stover went on his way to spread the tidings.

* * * * *

It was growing dark when the rattle of wheels outside the ranch-house brought the occupants to the porch in time to see Nigger Mike halt his buckboard and two figures prepare to descend.

"It's Mr. Speed!" cried Miss Blake. Then she uttered a scream as the velvet darkness was rent by a dozen tongues of flame, while a shrill yelping arose, as of an Apache war-party.

"It's the boys," said Jean. "What on earth has possessed them?"

But Stover had planned no ordinary reception, and the pandemonium did not cease until the men had emptied their weapons.

Then Mr. J. Wallingford Speed came stumbling up the steps and into the arms of his friends, the tails of his dust-coat streaming.

"Really? This is more than I expected," he gasped; then turning, doffed his straw hat to the half-revealed figures beyond the light, and cried, gayly: "Thank you, gentlemen! Thank you for missing me!"

"Yow—ee!" responded the cowboys.

MACHINISTS ARE SOME BOWLERS

Woburn Machine Team meets B. & M. R. R. team and take 3 out of 4 Points

The Woburn machine team faced as their opponents on Flanders' alleys last evening a fast aggregation of bowlers from the B. & M. railroad and after a close fight, came out the winners of the match, taking 3 of 4 points. They cleaned up the first, third and the total. Peterson of the B. & M. railroad had high single with 102, and was tied with McPartlin of the machine shop crew for the total with 277. The rolling was clean and fast, proving an interesting match to the spectators and players. The summary:

BYRNE'S BRAVES DEFEAT WALNUT HILLS

Hang it on to Latter Team 3 out of 4 Points

Some sensational bowling and team work by the "Braves" on Flanders' alleys last night gave them a big lead and enabled them to administer a severe trouncing to the "Walnut Hill" come backs. It sure was some match, and not lacking in excitement. Each pin was needed and each man determined to get all he could, but in some manner, "Cap" Byrne's team had the necessary "pep" to win and they did a good job while at it. This was due largely to "Doc" Sanborn, who proved to be the bravest of the Braves," and he pulled out with high single, 118, and the total, 335. He certainly did bowl some. The summary:

TIGERS DEFEAT PIRATE BOWLERS

Take Three out of Four Points in Exciting Game

The Tigers proved a trifle too strong for the Pirates last evening, and won three out of four points in a bowling match at the Knight alleys. They took the first and third strings and total, the Pirates winning the second string by three pins. The third point was won by 4 pins, and the game was one of the most interesting rolled in the K. of C. league to date. The big lead secured by the Tigers in the first string almost assured them of the total and two points, and the Pirates realizing that the best they could possibly get was an even break, went after the second string in great shape winning by three pins, and continued their good work in the third, but were just a little shy on pinfall, losing by four after putting up a splendid fight. T. Dorrington was high for single 104, and H. Harkins hit the maples for the highest three strings. The summary:—

BOWLING NOTES

This evening, a team from the Woburn post office and one from the Winchester office clash in a friendly bowling match to decide the supremacy. Various wagers are being laid on its outcome as the Winchester team took all four points last week, but the locals are determined on coming back.

Lyon's Colts and Cotter's Giants also meet tonight at Flanders' for their regular weekly struggle. 'Nuff ced.

Monday evening two teams from Fox's shop meet in battle royal on Flanders' alleys.

A team from Cummings shop and one from Fox's meet the following evening at the same alleys.

And at the same time, the Winchester police claim they would like to get a whack at the Woburn strong arms of the law, on the alleys. Looks bad for the Woburn brass buttons.

Harold McDonald got 114 for high single at Flanders' yesterday.

Thad Foster still leads at Flanders' this week for the box of cigars with a five string total of 539.

TOWANDA AGAIN THE WINNER

Defeats Melrose Club in 10-man Match on the Alleys

There was fun galore on the Towanda club alleys last evening and the home players again proved their supremacy as bowlers. It was a friendly match with the Melrose club with 10 men on each team, a sort of aftermath of the recent Mystic Valley league series in which Towanda was the winner and Melrose the runner-up.

The visitors came in royal style, on a special car, some 50 of them, armed with megaphones, and enthusiasm. They also brought a colored entertainer, who prior to the game and at its concludion did a series of musical stunts comprising singing and dancing that entitled him to a place on the Keith circuit, and won hearty applause from the crowd of onlookers.

Melrose came here to win, and started in to show Towanda how 'twas done but the home boys took an extra hitch in their belts and nosed out on the first string by 8 pins, "Speed" Parker putting on the finishing touch with two spares and a strike in quick succession.

This result nerved the visitors to greater effort, and they went at the second game with a grim determination. The game ran along fairly even, with the odds in favor of Melrose until the last box when the visitors had a lead of 16. Parker,who had again rolled two spares and a strike was called upon to lead his team out of the wilderness of defeat into the promised land of victory, but "Speed" was not equal to the demand, and the second game belonged to Melrose by a lead of 30. Melrose's lead for the two games was now 22.

The excitement now ran high, and both teams girded themselves for the struggle. Towanda began for the first time to strike its old-time stride, and spares began to show on its score board. All the team strengthened under the strain and a Garrison finish was the result, the game score being Towanda 989, Melrose 903. This left Towanda winner of two games out of the three, and the grand total 2816 to 2752, a lead of 64.

Chute of Towanda had high single with 125, and Parker high total with 317. For Melrose, Hewes was high single with 117, and high total with 304. Luncheon was served at the conclusion of the match. The scores:—

26TH ANNIVERSARY DULY OBSERVED

By Burbank W. R. C. 84 Last Evening with Supper, Speeches and Song

LOVING TRIBUTE PAID

Burbank Women's Relief Corps 84, the loyal and devoted auxiliary of Post 33 G.A.R., was instituted 26 years ago, and of the 33 charter members 9 were present last evening in Post 33 hall when the organization observed its anniversary. It is interesting to note that its membership at its inception tallied with the number of the post with which it was allied. The post was a special guest of honor last evening, 9 of the 15 surviving members being present.

The corps met in the afternoon for a business session but devoted the entire evening to the anniversary exercises. Supper was served at 6.30 p. m. 150 guests gathering about the well laden tables, whose furnishing was the work of the corps members who also waited upon the guests. When appetites had been appeased, the tables were quickly removed, and the program for the evening was introduced by the president, Mrs. Annabelle Brown, who in gracious words welcomed the party in the name of the corps.

The first number on the program was a clarinet solo by Miss Hazel Connors, with Miss Lucy A. Woodside at the piano.

Mayor William H. Henchey was the first speaker and was given a most cordial greeting. His Honor paid a fitting tribute to the organization, and said that among the many local societies that were a credit to the city none occupied a higher place in the hearts of the people than the W.R.C. and the body of army veterans to whom they ministered.

Mrs. Henry B. Williams rendered a vocal solo, and was obliged to respond with a sesond selection. Miss Cora Gordon was the accompanist.

Commander Joseph E. Carr of Post 33 waxed eloquent in his estimate of the assistance rendered by the corps, and believed that when the last veteran of the civil war had been laid away, the loyal women of the corps, and their sister workers everywhere would be found working for the veterans of the Spanish-American war.

John Halliday sang "That's How I Need You," and won a recall, Mrs. Gordon accompanist.

Rev. Stephen A. Norton D. D. of the First Congregational church described his earliest recollections of a company of volunteers marching away to fight the battles for the Union, and of the industry of the women in the village of his childhood who began at once their work of caring for the absent soldier. He was eloquent as he described the untiring work of woman throughout the war period, and of their devotion to the cause of healing the ravages of that far off time. His tribute to woman and her philanthropic and helpful work included Florence Nightingale the Angel of the Crimean war, Clara Barton the Inspiration of the Red Cross movement, now world-wide in its adoption, and of Louisa Alcott the volunteer nurse.

Representative J. H. Parker Jr., followed briefly with a reference to the noble work of these loyal women and the assurance of his support for any and all measures calculated to advance the interests of the order and army veteran.

After a piano solo by Mrs. Gordon, Rev. Henry B. Williams D. D. of the Baptist church spoke upon woman's contribution to the comfort and care of the nation's defenders, and paid a tribute to the veterans whose rapidly thinning ranks awoke in his heart a throb of sadness.

Miss Connors gave another clarinet solo and won hearty applause for her work.

Rev. George H. Tilton of the North Congregational church found in the devotion of the women of the relief corps an example worthy of emulation. In his opinion the women who when they had said adieu to husbands, sons, brothers or sweethearts and then gave ungrudgingly of their time and strength to minister to the comfort of the absent ones, were as loyal as the man who carried a musket and stood upon the firing line.

Mrs. Williams again favored the gathering with an excellently rendered vocal number, and again was recalled. Mrs. Williams' vocal work was much enjoyed and formed a distinctive feature of the evening.

Captain Fred C. Kean of G Co. 5th regiment M.V.M. thought the W.R.C. president understood military tactics fairly well, for she had massed her heavy guns for the opening of the battle and was now bringing up the secondary field pieces. Still, as a soldier, he must obey, and he was glad to express his own appreciation, and that of his command, of the many courtesies extended repeatedly in the past by the W.R.C. In closing he emphasized the help af-

UNION Y. P. S. C. E. SOCIAL

The first union work to be done by the new Woburn Local Christian Endeavor Union was the successful social in the beautifully decorated vestry of the First Congregational church last evening. There were about 100 present from the different churches of this city. The Middlesex Central C. E. Union was represented by Clifford E. Ross of Arlington, vice-president, Leroy S. Tucker of Medford, chairman of the social committee, and Earl S. Bacon of Medford, chairman of the press committee. Mr. Tucker announced a union social at the Pleasant street Congregational church at Arlington on Tuesday, March 18. Arthur Moore, the president of the new union, explained the purpose and aim of the union. Some very interesting and novel games were played and were much enjoyed by all. Light refreshments were served. The committee in charge of the social was Miss Mabel P. Williams, Everett Thompson, Roy Howatt, and Arthur Moore. The social committee of the Y.P.S.C.E. of the First Congregational church had charge of the refreshments.

During the month of March we have decided to give FREE with every pair of taps and heels, a 10c box of 2 in 1 or Shinola shoe polish. We can afford to do this to acquaint the public with the kind of work we do. WE GUARANTEE that you do not pay a cent for the polish, and once you try us you will be a satisfied customer.

As to the shoe machinery that one of our competitors threw out 8 years ago, we wish to state that we have not got it here, but that it has been installed in another store in this city. Our machinery is new, having been installed on Jan. 1, 1913, and it has all the latest improvements.

REMEMBER, our 25 years experience goes with every pair of shoes.

Honesty is OUR best policy.

DECLAMATION IN SCHOOLS

The prize speaking contest at Arlington High school last evening under the auspices of the Mystic Valley Harvard club was an exceedingly interesting exhibition. It may be easily imagined that a picked representative from each of the high schools of Arlington, Everett, Lexington, Malden, Medford, Melrose, Somerville, Winchester and Woburn, all high schools of excellence and large attendance, would make a fine presentation, and the audience showed their appreciation by their genuine and emphatic applause of each speaker. The exhibition was an unusually high standard throughout and leads to the hope that more contests of this kind will be held.

Rivalries between suburban high schools have of late years been almost wholly confined to athletic contests.

To develop rivalries in scholarship contests would certainly be evening up things and we see no reason why the interest should not be as keen. It might in former years have been said that public speaking and debating was more for the limited class of boys who intended to enter the professions, but ability to speak on one's feet is an accomplishment that every school boy and girl should develop, as almost every adult now-a-day is a member of some organization or club, where motions are made and orderly debates carried on. The person who is not afraid of appearing before others as a speaker and can logically and forcefully debate the motion, always commands attention and influence. Let the good work go on.

DRUGGISTS' CASES PLACED ON FILE

Sentences Pronounced this Morning by Judge Littlefield

This morning in the local court Judge Littlefield made final disposition of the liquor law violation cases against Woburn druggists. Samuel Highley, Daniel W. Kelley, Cecil T. Duncan and Edward H. Callahan were present to hear the verdict, William J. Young the fifth defendant not appearing. The cases were tried in January 1912.

Samuel Highley after a prolonged hearing was found guilty and John P. Feeney who represented all the accused men entered a plea of guilty in the other cases, after the decision in the Highley trial was announced, with the understanding that sentence would be deferred for one year, assumed to be a probationary period. The cases were called for sentence last January at the expiration of the one year limit, but through absence of counsel the judgment of the court was not made until this morning.

After Judge Johnson had passed on a non-support case he gave way to Judge Littlefield who without any preliminary statement by himself, or discussion by counsel handed the papers in all the druggist cases to Clerk Gage. Edward J. Brady of Boston was in court in behalf of the druggists and Samuel W. Mendum was prepared to speak for the Woburn Law Enforcement league, but as both had been heard before, neither was asked to offer any further argument.

Clerk Gage called the defendants in turn and read the decision of Judge Littlefield placing all the complaints on file. William J. Young failed to respond when his name was called and attorney Brady said that he could not account for his absence as he had been notified to be on hand. After waiting a little while for the appearance of the defendant Judge Littlefield ordered the cases continued until two weeks from today, Saturday, March 29.

The judge said in commenting on the request of Mr. Mendum that a fine of $50 be imposed on Mr. Young because of a seizure made at the Hotel Innitou, and this particular case having no connection with the druggists cases against the defendant, that inasmuch as the case had been permitted to be continued with the druggists cases he would place it on file with the others. He said that he would place all the cases against Young on file but ordered that the defendant pay as expenses of prosecution the sum of $10, made necessary by his absence from court this morning.

An entertainment followed the speeches, consisting of vocal solos by Rosalie Doherty, P. J. Fallon, James Byron and Harry Doherty of Stoneham; piano solo, T. Frank King of Cambridge. D. Cullen of Stoneham gave a fine exhibition of buck and wing dancing, and Albert Hooper rendered a cornet solo accompanied by Hugh McCall on the piano. The two latter are from Montvale. Discretion and Valor.

They were discussing at the club the difference between discretion and valor, and it was exemplified by one who said it would be valor to have eaten a Christmas dinner at a fashionable restaurant, and departed without tipping the waiter. And discretion? "Well," he proceeded, "to go to a different restaurant for New Year's dinner would be discretion."

forded the post by its auxiliary.

Master William Rooney, cornetist, caught the audience with two selections, one a patriotic medley being especially attractive. His sister Miss May Rooney was the accompanist.

Commander Philip Shea of Chas. H. Moloy camp S.W.V. returned thanks for being included in the list of guests, and acknowledged the loyal words concerning the Spanish war veteran spoken by Commander Carr of Post 33.

Representative Henry L. Andrews also referred to Commander Carr's prophecy, and commended it. As a member of the legislative committee on Military affairs he regretted to say he had found a disposition in some quarters to ignore the services of the Spanish war veteran. He related something of his trip to Washington for the inaugural exercises, and his loyal "rooting" for the Mass. troops in the parade.

Mrs. Gordon and her daughter, Miss Gladys Gordon played a piano duet, and the last speaker was Frank E. Wetherell, who after a brief prelude recited Arthur Macy's "Tribute to the Flag," which closes with:

"Cheers for the sailors that fought on the wave for it
Cheers for the soldiers that always were brave for it,
Tears for the men that went down to the grave for it,
Here comes The Flag!"

Although not planned this seemingly paved the way for the closing number which was the Flag Salute led by Mrs. Lizzie Tripp. She was assisted by eight young misses dressed in white and carrying flags. The assistants were: Mildred and Gertrude Shannon, Blanche and Doris Fountain, Elva and Beatrice Roup, Thelma Neville and Gladys Gordon.

The impressive salute was followed by the audience standing and singing "The Star Spangled Banner," and then at 10.20 the curtain was rung down on W. R. C. 84's twenty-sixth anniversary.

Miss Evelyn Buckman and Miss Gladys Richardson played piano solos during the afternoon. The club decided to present the play for which they are now preparing either the second week of April or the third week of May. Announcement will be made later. The next meeting will be held at the home of Miss Ruth Sanborn, Pleasant street, on Friday afternoon, March 28.

A certain man purchased a setting of eggs for $15, from which he hatched five cockerels and four pullets. He selected the best cockerel, put him with the four pullets into a Poultry Show, got first prize, and was offered $750 for the five birds.

You have the same chance. To be "at the top" is old fashioned now. The struggle of modern times is to "aviate," soar above the fellow at the top, knock him off his perch, and make a new high record.

To aviate in the poultry business you must have the goods. Get the best eggs you can buy—if only a few, three or four or more—and get them early so they will be fully matured for the Fall Shows.

S. C. White Orpingtons have captured the public heart all over the world. They have a record, point for point, that can't be beaten. Get your eggs from the best pen of the best breed that ever scratched for their living, and they will scratch for yours.

My pen of S. C. White Orpingtons took first at Boston, January 7, 1913. I can furnish eggs from this pen at 60 cents each, one or more as you may want, and baby chicks at 90 cents each. Others at 30 cents each for eggs and 45 cents each for chicks. Get them early and try your luck.

BOSTON THEATRES

MAJESTIC THEATRE, BOSTON

Boston has added its loudest appreciation to the already acquired fame won in New York, during a long season at Weber & Fields' Music hall, at Vienna, Berlin and in Paris to Franz Lehar's newest writing "The Man with Three Wives," now playing to capacity audiences at every performance at the Majestic theatre. The second big week begins next Monday evening.

The American book of this operetta is by Paul N. Potter and Agnes Morgan, founded on the German original of the same title by Julius Bauer. The lyrics are by Harold Atteridge.

The story found in this, the latest work of the composer of "The Merry Widow" in skeleton, reads a mad whirl of matrimonial mix-up, which begins in a Viennese tourist agency. Hans, who has recently married a Viennese, is to conduct a party to Paris, the home of Colette, to whom Hans was once engaged. Baron Huneberg, head of the tourist agency, is in love with Hans' wife and she has promised to marry the Baron if Hans jumps over the matrimonial traces. They all go to Paris, where the plot grows complicated and it takes them all on a trip to London before the tangle is finally straightened out.

The company includes many well-known people in Sophye Barnard, Alice Yorke, Charlotte Greenwood, Dorothy Webb, Cecil Lean, Sydney Grant, Laura Hamilton, Thomas Graves, Stewart Baird, Robert G. Pitkin and many others. In addition, also is seen a large and well drilled singing chorus, young and pretty women and a largely augmented orchestra.

READY MONEY, SHUBERT THEATRE

The playgoers of New England now have an opportunity to see "Ready Money," the international comedy by James Montgomery, which is playing at the Shubert theatre, Boston. This play is described as the success of four world cities. It has not only pleased audiences in Boston, but, previously, those of Chicago, New York and London. Although its author, James Montgomery, was born in Boston and there got his idea for the subject matter of the play, Boston is the last of the four cities to have an opportunity to see "Ready Money." Perversely enough, this play is now having a year's run in London before New England play-goers have set their stamp of approval upon it.

"Ready Money" is described as a play with a punch. It is a smart comedy, containing strong dramatic scenes and many original ideas, new to present plays. Its story deals with the amusing efforts of a young man to get money so that he can get the girl he loves. The theme of the play is based on the truth that "if you've got money, you don't have to spend it. All you have to do is to show it."

The comedy will enter upon its third big week at the Shubert next Monday evening, March 17. At the Wednesday Matinee a special scale of prices will prevail, the seats ranging from 25 cents in the second balcony to $1.00 for the best orchestra seat.

THE GARDEN OF ALLAH

"The Garden of Allah" will be seen for the last times in Boston at the Boston theatre beginning Monday. No other New England city will be visited by this monster organization with the one exception of Springfield, Mass., where a stay of one week will be had at the Court Square theatre to accommodate theatregoers of Western Massachusetts.

There are ten scenes that are picturesque and effective. Real inhabitants of the desert, Arabs, camels, horses, goats etc., are all introduced and are thoroughly in keeping in the picture. Special attention will be given to mail orders which will be filled promptly. The engagement positively terminates Saturday, March 22.

THE SONG BIRDS B. F. KEITH'S THEATER

One of the biggest and most unique novelties of the season is promised for B. F. Keith's theater next week in William Burress' musical production, "The Song Birds." This is a splendid organization of brilliant soloists, most of whom have been identified with the Metropolitan opera company of New York, in a series of impersonations of the famous operatic stars of the present day. All of the oddities and characteristics of the great singers are burlesqued in the most amusing fashion. This feature will be but one of a great bill. The Thomas A. Edison Kinetophone will exhibit a brand new series of talking motion pictures, and another brilliant feature will be the Royal Kitamura Japanese Troupe of Oriental acrobats and wonder workers. The Bison City Four, the policeman, the dago, the bartender, and the tramp, will blend a series of melodious musical numbers with a picture of daily life on the streets of New York, while Carl Henry and Nellie Francis, late stars at the head of their own company in the musical comedy field, will appear in their latest medley of foolishness and chatter. Mr. Henry will be remembered as the former star of Billie Burke's "Models of the Jardin de Paris" company, and his expression, "Now, I'll tell you," is a classic. Jack Hazzard, the former legitimate comedian, will bring a new monologue; Frances Stevens and company have a farce comedy entitled, "A Coventry Bride," and several other features yet to be announced are to be included on the bill.

THE GOVERNORS LADY, HOLLIS THEATER

Whatever David Balasco sets out to do, he does, and whenever his name, either individually or in association with some one else, is affixed to a play, an organization or a production, it is an absolute assurance of the merit and excellence of the offering presented; thus the playgoer becomes en rapport with the master producer and as a result his offering is accepted as the best that brain, energy or capital can supply.

William Elliott and David Balasco's marvellous presentation of "The Governor's Lady" now at the Hollis street theater on its final week, as previously made engagements elsewhere necessitates its removal to "Green Fields and Pastures new"—is an example of what a producer can do with a play that has the elements of dramatic possibility in addition to its literary value.

"The Governor's Lady" has been the dramatic sensation of the season, disclosing the superior bravery of womanhood at the crucial moment of great trial and privation, as well as illustrating the extent of self-sacrifice a woman will endure fighting for what she contends is right.

Boston will be the only city in New England visited by "The Governor's Lady" this season. There will be matinees on Wednesday and Saturday with the engagement ending on Saturday night, the 22nd.

THE PINK LADY, COLONIAL THEATER

Never has a musical comedy received a warmer reception on a return visit to Boston than did "The Pink Lady" at the Colonial theater last week. All of the old favorites of the original cast were remembered with enthusiasm. Of course the four particular favorites are Frank Lalor, Hazel Dawn, Alice Dovey and Alice Hegemen, but all of the old cast were warmly welcomed.

Seats are now selling two weeks in advance.

FAMILY CAT THWARTS ROBBER

Mr. O'Meara Gives His Pet Credit for Saving $4,000 by Acting as Burglar Alarm.

New Rochelle, N. Y.—A useless sort sort of a white cat curled up in a chair at the home of William O'Meara, a manufacturer. None of the family, at 30 Elk avenue, Forest Heights, could see much good in her. Today Mr. O'Meara knows her value is $4,000.

No one else would say she was worth $4,000 because her cries early the other morning saved that amount only for Mr. O'Meara. She played the successive roles of detective, guardian of the family valuables and alarm clock; she lifted her voice in one foreboding yowl and a strong man saw visions of prison walls.

The burglar left by the window through which he had entered and Mr. O'Meara reached the sill to find the cat upon it, singing a requiem, but only for his departed coat and trousers. The rest, $150 in bills upon a bureau, a gold watch and several thousand dollars' worth of silver and jewelry, remained at home.

Mr. O'Meara found a trail of burnt matches from room to room until it reached the butler's pantry, where the light fell on a partly consumed cold chicken, tongue, cake and an empty wine bottle. On the floor was another piece of chicken, untouched, to show that the cat had scorned bribery. Following the trail with the disconsolate cat, Mr. O'Meara returned to his dressing room to look upon a shabby coat and pair of trousers, together with soleless shoes, where his own attire had been placed the night before.

"How do you do, Miss Chapin!" Speed shook hands with his hostess, and in the radiance from the open doorway she saw that his face was round and boyish, and his smile peculiarly engaging.

She welcomed him appropriately; then said: "This reception is quite as startling to us as to you. You know, Mr. Speed, that we have with us a friend of yours." She slightly drew Helen forward. "And this is Mrs.

Had Planned No Ordinary Reception.

Keap, who is looking after us a bit while mother is away. Roberta, may I present Mr. Covington's friend, and ask you to be good to him?"

"Don't forget me," said Fresno, pushing into the light.

"Mr. Berkeley Fresno, of Leland Stanford University."

"Hello, Frez!" Speed thrust out his hand warmly. Not so the Californian. He replied, with hauteur:

"Fresno! F-r-e-s-n-o;" and allowed the new-comer to grasp a limp, moist hand.

"Ah! Go to the head of the class! I'm sorry you broke your wrist, however." The eastern lad spoke lightly, and gave the palm a hearty sqeeze, then turned to Jean.

"I dare say you are all disappointed, Miss Chapin, that Culver didn't come with me, but he'll be along in a day or so. I simply couldn't wait." He avoided glancing at Helen Blake, whose answering blush was lost in the darkness.

"I did think when you drove up that might be Mr. Covington with you," Miss Chapin remarked, wistfully.

"Oh no, that's my man." Speed glanced around him. "And, by-the way, where is he?"

The sound of angry voices came through the gloom, then out into the light came Still Bill Stover, Willie, and Carara, dragging between them a globular person who was rebelling loudly.

"Stover, what is this?" questioned Miss Chapin, stepping to the edge of the veranda.

"This gent stampedes in the midst of our welcome," explained the foreman, "so we have to rope him before he gets away." It was seen now that Carara's lariat was tightly drawn about the new arrival's waist.

Then the valet broke into coherent speech, but he spoke a tongue not common to his profession.

"Nix on that welcome stuff," he burst forth, in husky, alcoholic accents; "that goes on the door-mat!" It was plain that he was very angry. "If that racket means welcome, I don't want it. Take that clothes-line off of me." Carara loosened the noose, and his captive rolled up the steps mopping his face with his handkerchief.

"What made you run away?" demanded Speed.

"Any time a bunch of bandits unhitch their gats, I'm on my way," sputtered the fat man. "I'm gun-shy, see? And when this hold-up comes off I beat it till that Cuban rummy with the medals on his dicer rides a live horse up my back."

"You don't appreciate the honor," explained his employer; then turning to the others, he announced: "Will you allow me to introduce Mr. Lawrence Glass? He isn't really a valet, you know, Miss Chapin, and he doesn't care for the west yet. It is his first trip."

"I have heard my brother speak of Larry Glass," said Jean, graciously.

Mr. Glass courtesied awkwardly, and swinging his right foot back of his left, tapped the floor with his toe.

"You were a trainer at Yale when Jack was there?"

"That's me," Mr. Glass wheezed. "I'm there with the big rub, too. Wally said he was going to train during vacation, so he staked me to a trip out here, and I came along to look after him."

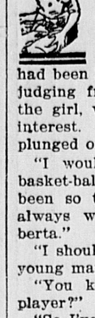

"Come into the house," said Jean. "Stover will see to your baggage."

As they entered, Mr. Berkeley Fresno saw the late arrival bend over Helen Blake, and heard him murmur:

"The same unforgettable eyes of Italiar

And Mr. Fresno decided to dislike Wally Speed, even if it required an effort.

CHAPTER IV.

IT was on the following morning that Miss Blake made bold to request her favor from J. Wallingford Speed. They had succeeded in isolating themselves upon the vine-shaded gallery at the rear of the house, and the conversation had been largely of athletics, but this, judging from the rapt expression of the girl, was a subject of surpassing interest. Speed, quick to take a cue, plunged on.

"I would have made the Varsity basket-ball team myself if I hadn't been so tiny," said Helen. "I have always wanted to be tall, like Roberta."

"I shouldn't care for that," said the young man.

"You know she was a wonderful player?"

"So I've heard."

"Do you know," mused Helen, "I have never forgotten what you told me that first day we met. About your friendship for Mr. Covington. I think it is very unselfish of you."

"Oh, I wouldn't say that," ventured the young man, vainly racking his brain. "Nobody could help liking Culver."

"Yes; but how many men would step aside and let their best friend win prize after prize and never undertake to compete against him?"

Speed blushed faintly, as any modest man might have done.

"Did I tell you that?" he inquired.

"Indeed you did."

"Then please don't speak of it to a mortal soul. I must have said a great deal that first day, but—"

"But I have spoken of it, and I said I thought it was fine of you."

"You have spoken of it?"

"Yes; I told Jean."

The Yale man undertook to change the conversation abruptly, but Miss Blake was a determined young lady. She continued:

"Of course, it was very magnanimous of you to always step aside in favor of your best friend; but it isn't fair to yourself—it really isn't. And so I have arranged a little plan whereby you can do something to prove your prowess, and still not interfere with Mr. Covington in the least."

Speed cleared his throat nervously.

"Tell me," he said, "what it is."

And Miss Blake told him the story of the shocking treachery of Humpy Joe, together with the miserable undoing of the Flying Heart. "Why, those poor fellows are broken-hearted," she concluded. "Their despair over losing that talking-machine would be if it were not so tragic. I told them you would win it back for them. And you will, won't you? Please!" She turned her blue eyes upon him appealingly, and the young man was lost.

"I'll take ten chances," he said. "Where does the raffle come off?"

"Oh, it isn't a raffle, it's a foot-race. You must run with that Centipede cook."

"I! Run a race!" exclaimed the young college man, aghast.

"Yes, I've promised that you would. You see, this isn't like a college event, and Culver isn't here yet."

"But he'll be here in a day or so." Speed felt as if a very large man were choking him; he decided his collar was too tight.

"Oh, I've talked it all over with Jean. She doesn't want Culver to run, anyhow."

"Why not?" inquired he, suspiciously.

"I don't know, I'm sure."

"If Miss Chapin doesn't want Culver to run, you surely wouldn't want me to."

"Not at all. If Mr. Covington knew the facts of the case, he would be only too happy to do it. And, you see, you know the facts."

Speed was about to shape a gracious but firm refusal of the proffered honor when Still Bill Stover appeared at the steps, doffed his faded Stetson, and bowed limply.

"Mornin', Miss Blake." To the rear Speed saw three other men—an Indian, tall, swart, and saturnine, who walked with a limp; a picturesque Mexican with a spangled hat and silver spurs, evidently the captor of Lawrence Glass on the evening previous; and an undersized little man with thick-rimmed spectacles and a heavy-hanging holster from which peeped a gun-butt. All were smiling pleasantly, and seemed a bit abashed.

"Good morning, Mr. Stover," said Helen, pleasantly. "This is Mr. Speed, of whom I spoke to you yesterday." Stover bowed again and mumbled something about the honor of this meeting, and Miss Blake cast her eyes over the other members of the group, saying, graciously: "I'm afraid I can't introduce your friends; I haven't met them."

The loquacious foreman came promptly to the rescue, rejoicing in an opportunity of displaying his oratorical gifts.

"Then I'll make you acquainted with the best brandin' outfit in these parts." He waved a long, bony arm at the Mexican, who flashed his white teeth. "This Greaser is Aurelio Maria Carara. Need I say he's Mex, and a preemeer roper?" Carara bowed, and swept the ground with his high-peaked head-piece. "The Maduro gent yonder is Mr. Cloudy. His mother being a Navajo squaw, named him accordin' to the rights and customs of her tribe, selecting the title of Cloudy-but-the-Sun-Shines, which same has proved a misnomer, him bein' a pessimist for fair."

Miss Blake and her companion smiled and nodded, at which Stover, encouraged beyond measure, elaborated.

"He's had a hist'ry, too. When he reaches man's real-estate the Injun agent ropes, throws, and hog-ties him, then sends him east to be cultivated. He spends four years kickin' a football—" Speed interrupted, with an exclamation of genuine interest.

"Oh, it's true as gospel," the foreman averred. "When he goes lame in his off leg they ship him back, and in spite of them handicaps he has become one rustlin' savage at a round-up."

"What college did you attend?" inquired Speed, politely. The question fell upon unresponsive ears. Cloudy did not stir nor alter the direction of his sombre glance.

"He don' talk none," Stover explained. "Conversation, which I esteem as a gift devine, is a lost art with him. I reckon he don't average a word a week. What language he did know he has forgot, and what he ain't forgot he distrusts."

Turning to the near-sighted man who had been staring at the college youth meanwhile, the spokesman took a deep breath, and said, simply yet proudly, as if describing the piece de resistance of this exhibition:

"The four-eyed gent is Willie, plain Willie, a born range rider, and the best hip shot this side of the Santa Fe trail!"

Speed beheld an undersized man of indeterminate age, hollow-chested, thin-faced, gravely benignant. It was not alone his glasses that lent him a scholarly appearance; he had the stooped shoulders, the thoughtful intensity of gaze, the gentle, hesitating backwardness of a book-raised man. Speed acknowledged the introduction pleasantly, while the benevolent little man blinked back of his lenses.

Stover addressed himself to Miss Blake.

"I told the boys what you said, miss, and we four has come as a delegation to find out if it goes."

"Mr. Speed and I were just talking about it when you came," said Helen. "I'm sure he will consent if you add your entreaties to mine."

"It would sure be a favor," said the cow-man, at which the others drew nearer, as if hanging on Speed's answer. Even Cloudy turned his black eyes upon the young man.

The object of their co-operate gaze shifted his feet uncomfortably and felt minded to flee, but the situation would not permit of it. Besides, the affair interested him. His mind was working rapidly, albeit his words were hesitating.

"But I'm not in condition," objected the youth.

"Mr. Glass said you was never better than you are right now. Anyhow, you don't have to bust no records to beat this cook. He ain't so fast."

"It would sure be a kind-hearted act if you'd do it for us," said the little man in his high, boyish voice. It was a shock to discover that he spoke in a dialect. "There's a heap of sentiment connected with this affair. You see, outside of being a prize that we won at considerable risk, there goes with this phonograph a set of reecords, among which we all have our special favorites. Have you ever heard Madam-o-sella Melby sing The Holy City?"

"I didn't know she sang it," said Speed.

"Take it from me, she did, and you've missed a heap."

"You bet," Stover agreed, in a hushed, awed tone.

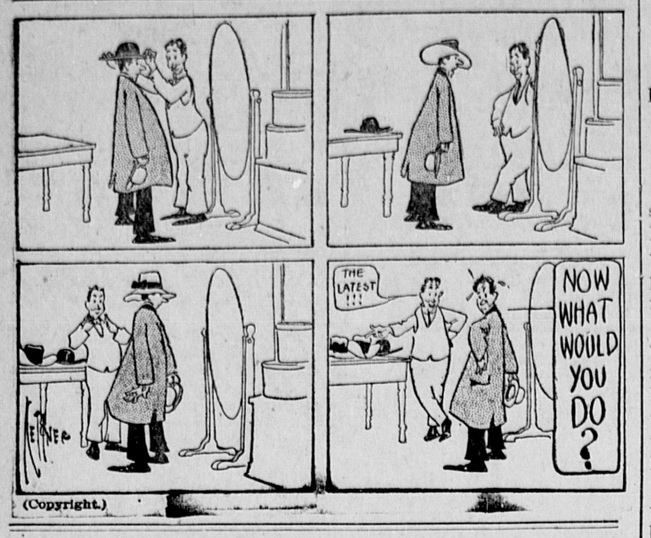

"Well, you must have heard Missus Heleney Moray in The Baggage Coach Ahead?" queried the scholarly little man. At mention of his beloved classic, Carara, the Mexican, murmured, softly:

FACTS AND FOLKS

J. Fred Maloney, city solicitor, returned yesterday from a business trip to the western part of the state.

To passers-by, the rehearsal of the St. Charles minstrel show in the club room hall last night, sounded excellent. Many complimentary remarks were heard concerning it, and from present indications this year's show will excel all previous presentations.

Rehearsals are being faithfully carried on by members of the S. of V. club for their annual dramatic which they will present on March 18, in their club hall. "That Rascal Pat" and "Rubber Boots" are two comedies full of humor, interest, and exciting incidents and should prove well worth the admission fee to those attending.

Anderson, the florist, has a large display of Easter flowers, and is prepared to fill all orders promptly.

Miss Florence Thompson, formerly of this city, but now of Boston, and Masters Arthur and Harry Lester of Boston are the week-end guests of J. Selwyn Fowle, Auburn street, this city.

Miss Anna Shea, formerly of Lake street, is visiting friends in this city.

A number of Woburn people attended the celebration of St. Patrick's anniversary by Div. 41 A.O.H. at Stoneham last evening.

MADDEN HEARING LAST EVENING

Chief Tracy Reserves Decision McMorrow Resigns from Hose Three

Behind closed doors in the aldermanic committee room last evening Chief Engineer Frank E. Tracy of the fire department gave Edward J. Madden, recently removed from the lieutenancy of hose company three, a hearing in accordance with civil service rules on the cause for removal. Because of the secrecy of the proceedings it was next to impossible to get any information as to what transpired, but the JOURNAL representative from good authority was informed that Chief Tracy, Captain James McGovern of hose three, and Edward J. Madden testified. City Solicitor Maloney was present and Bernard J. Golden appeared for Madden.

Chief Tracy told counsel why he removed Madden, and Captain McGovern and the deposed lieutenant told of conditions that have existed at hose three, which are supposed to have brought about the present investigations. Attorney Golden was permitted to cross examine all witnesses and at the conclusion of testimony argued for the reinstatement of Madden to his former standing in the fire department. Chief Tracy declared the hearing closed and announced that he would reserve his judgment. This morning he stated that he would probably make public his decision some time next week.

To the JOURNAL representative Chief Tracy today confirmed the report that James McMorrow, driver of hose three resigned last Thursday night. Edward Aylward has been appointed permanent driver to fill the vacancy.

It is not known that the resignation of McMorrow has any connection with the Madden proceedings but it has served to intensify interest in the outcome, and since already two investigations, or hearings, have been held in executive session the demand for a full and complete statement of the facts in the controversy has become widespread.

COTTER'S GIANTS APPLY WHITEWASH BRUSH

Take 3 of 4 Points in Fast and Close Game with Lyon's Colts

Cotter's Giants and Lyon's Colts met last night at Flanders' for their regular weekly scrap. Their fighting proclivities are fast becoming the talk of the town and when the event is "pulled off" large crowds are attracted. Last night was no exception to the rule, for both sides were determined to win and each brought their special friends to root for them. Not a man on the Colts seemed able to roll up to the century mark, tho' "Cap" Lyons only fell one short. This may have taken the heart out of them, for they sure tried hard. Three men on the Giants rolled 100 or over, "Matty" Fox piling up 112 for high single of the game, and incidentally for the day's alley record, while he and "Charlie" Flanders were tied for total with 289. The summary:—

Cotter's Giants
Cotter	100	82	86	268
Garvey	79	81	88	248
Shea	79	76	73	228
Fox	94	83	112	289
Flanders	92	93	104	289

Woburn Clerks Wallop Winchester Clerks

Took all Four Points by Close Margins Last Eve(ing

To make up for the drubbing which they received at the hands of their "sworn and ancient enemies," from Winchester a week ago last night, the Woburn post office clerks hung a dark crepe over their neighboring clerks and left them not the least semblance of victory to nourish themselves with, after the performance last evening on Flanders' alleys. Not being satisfied with splitting even, the local clerks grabbed everything in sight and took all three strings and the total. After the game was over, all the Winchester clerks did was to grit their teeth and say, "Just see what we do next Friday night." From the look of things, in the words of the ancient prophets, "Something will be didding." Roche for Woburn had high single with 102, and Martin of the same team had grand total of 277. Charlie Harrold had high total for the visitors with 245. The summary:—

WALTER E. BURKE DIED YESTERDAY

Popular Young Man Victim of Pneumonia After Short Illness

FUNERAL WEDNESDAY MORNING

Walter Edward Burke, son of Michael H. and Jennie F. (Quinn) Burke, died yesterday as a result of pneumonia. He was born here 21 years ago and was a graduate of Woburn High school class '12. Funeral services will be held Wednesday morning. A high mass of requiem will be sung at St. Charles church at nine o'clock. He is survived by his parents, three sisters, Agnes, Gertrude and Edna, and one brother, John. He was a member of Div. 3 A.O.H., Royal Arcanum of Boston, and since last June held a responsible position as bookkeeper with the Whittier Wooden Ware company of Boston.

Perhaps no death among the younger people of this city in recent years has occasioned so much regret, and caused such a universal feeling of sympathy with the bereaved parents and family.

Walter E. Burke was popular with all his companions and acquaintances, and as he attained an age when the serious problems of life must be confronted he displayed in an unmistakable manner the requisite characteristics and ability that go to make a good citizen and a worthy son. While attending the high school he played football, tackle and guard, for four years, and was recognized as one of the best and most gentlemanly players of his time.

When the high school city of Woburnia was instituted last year, he was elected city clerk by his classmates and at the inaugural exercises acquitted himself with great credit, his intimate knowledge of civic affairs acquired by hard, persistent effort making him one of the most conspicuous figures of the evening.

He was prominent as a member of the Knights of the Sacred Heart, and held the rank of captain.

At the presentation of "My New Curate" last season by the Knights of the Sacred Heart, he impersonated a leading part and won great praise for his very careful and intelligent rendition of the character of senior priest. He will be missed by all who knew him, and his death is a loss not only to his intimate family and relatives but to the community as well, for had he been spared he would undoubtedly have made his mark as an able and useful member of society.

MISSING SINCE LAST THURSDAY

MOTHER CRAZED WITH GRIEF

Miss Mary Pattelena aged 21, and daughter of Mrs. Mary Pattelena of 1085 Main street North Woburn, has been missing from the parental home since Thursday last, and the widowed mother is almost heartbroken. Miss Pattelena gave no intimation of her intention to leave home, and the blow came without warning like a flash of lightning out of a clear sky.

Mrs. Pattelena, who since the death of her husband, has been the caretaker and provider for the family, is busy from mornin guntil night with indoor and outdoor duties. Last Thursday late in the afternoon, Mrs. Pattelena repaired to the barn to milk and look after the cow. When she returned to the house a younger daughter informed her that Mary had dressed and gone out. This in inself, while unexpected, caused no alarm but as the hours passed,and lengthened into days, the mother's anxiety grew apace and she set about instituting inquiries for the missing girl.

The first person to whom she naturally turned for information was the young man whom she was to marry within a few days, Alfred Demio of 27 Cedar street, Winchester. Intentions of marriage were filed with city clerk McHugh, March 13 by Alfred Demio, 26, a native of Italy, and a resident of Winchester, and Mary Pattelena, 21, a native and resident of Woburn. Under the law requiring five days interim they could have been married any time after tomorrow.

Demio was found at his home but knew nothing of Miss Mary's leaving home. He was shocked to hear the news, and with her brothers spent all of Saturday and yesterday in a search for her at the homes of friends and relatives. No trace of the girl had been found up to noon today. Miss Pattelena was employed at a shop in Winchester. Her shopmates, who were warmly attached to her, can throw no light upon this strange step. By no word or act did she hint of her intention.

The course of true love in the life of this pair has had its usual tempestuous experiences. Demio was not acceptable to the mother, and she and her daughter had had many disagreements over the match. Both of the young people were persistent, however. Demio had all the ardor of the people of his native land, and was a strenuous wooer. Miss Pattelena professed and exhibited the strongest affection for him, and stoutly defended him against the protests of her family. The mother finally accepted conditions, and had made provisions to have them live with her at 1085 Main street and had provided two rooms for them. Everything was moving along smoothly, until the prospective bride slipped her moorings and glided out into the unknown.

Miss Pattelena, and other members of the family are in mourning for the husband and father, and when she went away she was dressed entirely in black. She took no luggage. It is known that she had $10 in her purse. The mother, who is distracted, can assign no reason for the step taken by her daughter, and she fears that Mary has been the victim of foul play or accident, or that she in a moment of mental unbalance has made waywith herself.

SENIOR HISTORY DEBATE

The High school senior history class, division A, held a debate in Room 4, the last period today the subject being, "Resolved that the election of United States Senators should be by popular vote."

The affirmative was defended by Miss Gladys M. Anderson and James O Connolly. The negative side was handled by Miss Olive S. Barnum and Elwyn P. Cotton. Walter E. Hooper presided over the meeting. George W. Low, principal of the school was judge. After careful consideration, he awarded the victory to the negative.

Both sides had worked hard and showed study of the subject in hand, and much excellent material on both sides of the question was offered.

WILL BOWL ON PATRIOT'S DAY

Alderman Hogan Names Date for Aldermanic—Patrolman Match

Who said the police force is afraid? The idea, Ferdinand! They are not afraid of anything. S-sh, is that Chris Zeltin who just passed by? No! Well as we were saying, they fear nothing. Not even the aldermen, more popularly known as "city fathers."

An erroneous impression was recently created, affecting the gallantry of our police department when Alderman Dennis P. Hogan issued a challenge through the columns of the JOURNAL, defying the guardians of the peace to meet a team of bowlers selected by him from the city council of 1913. Anybody with an idea that this challenge inspired fear among the wearers of blue serge and brass buttons should disabuse his mind at once.

And so the public officials who patrol our 'ard 'ard 'ighways have flung the gauntlet right back at the city fathers, and are willing to bowl on 24 hours notice.

Our special foreign correspondent got in touch with "Dinnie" the other day while travelling the wilds of Bennet street, and buttonholed him for a reply to the police officers' ultimatum.

Here it is:—"So they think they can trim us? Let them try it. So far the only ones to put anything across on us has been the board of public works and the "Cannery." Tell them for me that we'll be easy on them and only half try. And besides we'll give them between now and April 19 to learn the game. Then let them appear forthwith at Flanders' alleys and get theirs. And in the words of that immortal Roman fighter,Dingbat or Mutt, I forget which, our honorable board will report at a public hearing, "Veni! Vidi! Vici!" which, in order that the police may understand it, we will translate, "I came! I saw! I conquered." Sic 'em Tige!

What's In a Name?

A name without a reputation for doing good work is worthless.

Twelve years ago, I came to Woburn, and in a few months, made the name of "Gorin" stand for everything that a good name can stand for—honest dealing, honest workmanship, and good citizenship. Time has never changed the first impression I made on the public of Woburn. After being in Woburn for nine years, I sent for my brother and brought him across the ocean. I put him at work learning the trade and paid him good living wages, as he had to support his family in Europe.

After working in my shop for about a year, the scene changed. He decided to start in business and took the name of "Gorin" as he thought he would get my trade. Time has shown that some of my patrons were led to believe that he was the original "Gorin" as at that time I had changed my firm name to Woburn Shoe Repairing Company. They have all come back as my patrons. I am the original N. Gorin and I have used the name Woburn Shoe Repairing company since my brother started in business. Why is it that the original N. Gorin was not afraid to do business under a new name?

The Reason Why

Nearly all shoe repairers in Woburn are claiming to do work by modern machinery today.

I offer $50 to any one of them who can trim an edge and do it right on machinery. This is the simplest part of shoe repairing and most important for a good finish to a completed job.

This is a chance for the much-advertised "cobblers" of Woburn to make $50 easy money. This offer stands good for two days only.

AGAIN, THE POSTMASTER GENERAL

Postmaster General Burleson again plays havoc with the aspirations of some of our local statesmen, who are hungry for Postmaster Wyer's job. The postmaster general says he will not hurry in dealing out the plums. He also says that the order of President Taft putting thousands of postmasterships on the classified civil service list should not be revoked, but that those who retain positions under the order without examination should be required to submit to the merit test.

In case such a test was required it would be a safe guess that nearly all aspirants in Woburn would be eliminated, and Postmaster Wyer retain his position without effort. In fact it is doubtful if many of the hungry-eyed patriots, would have the courage to enter the efficiedcy try-out.

The past week has demonstrated the need of something being done by the highway department to improve the streets and cross walks, about the center of the city. Their condition has been anything but creditable and in many places an absolute disgrace.

o-o-o

Mayor Henchey's recommendation that better cross walks be provided, at least near the center of the city, commends itself favorably to the public mind. The city has been very generous in the matter of concrete sidewalks, few localities surpassing it in this regard. It is equally necessary that pedestians be able to cross from one walk to another, without sinking in a quagmire. Push it along Mr. Mayor. Its a good idea.

LIVE TROLLY WIRE CAUSES EXCITEMENT

There was quite a little excitement in Woburn centre at 7.30 o'clock last evening. The Malden and Melrose trolley car due in Woburn at 7.30 o'clock had reached Salem street, the end of the run, and the conductor while shifting the trolley got tangled up with the trolley wire, and pulled a section of about 50 feet to the ground narrowly escaped electrocution. The wire fell and grounded on the rail, doing no damage.

The accident did not affect the cars coasting the distance beneath the broken section without trouble until the wire was repaired.

MONTVALE YOUTH BREAKS LEFT ARM

Companion Playfully Pushed Him from Curbing with Serious Results

James McGarry, the seven year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank McGarry of Grape street, Montvale, broke his left arm in two places yesterday afternoon while walking with some companions in Stoneham. The boys were out for a Sunday stroll with no particular destination in mind, and during the walk were doing more or less fooling. One of the youngsters playfully pushed young McGarry off the curbing with much more force than was intended, and a broken arm was the result.

Dr. Joseph Kerrigan of Stoneham treated the boy and found the left arm broken in two places. The breaks are in the middle of the forearm. Today young McGarry is resting comfortably.

PALM SUNDAY OBSERVANCE

At First Congregational church Last Evening was a Notable One

It must have been an inspiration to every participant in the musical service at the First Congregational church last evening to look out upon the audience which filled every seat in the large auditorium while scores stood at the rear of the back gallery. There were fully 1500 people present.

And the musical offering was of a quality that repaid attendance. It was a joyous musical festival, a glad outburst of song, that grand composition of the master Mendelsshon's "Hymn of Praise." To interpret the composition there had been secured the following soloists: Blanche H. Kilduff and Mary G. Ogilvie sopranos, and Harold S. Tripp tenor. Supporting them was a grand chorus of 60 voices, further supplemented by a symphony orchestra of 32 musicians. Walter H. Lewis was the conductor, and Percyval Lewis presided at the organ.

It was a fitting close to the splendid series of Peoples' services that has marked the Lenten season of the current year. In no other local auditorium could it have been presented in a form even approaching that of last evening. The great audience was delighted with the presentation of the cantata.

VALUABLE LIFE IS ENDED

Mrs. Elizabeth Timson's Death at Montvale Home Today Will be Widely Mourned

Mrs. Elizabeth Timson, for 41 years a resident of Woburn, and a widely respected woman, died at her home, 32 Nashua street this morning after an illness covering two months. It has been felt for sometime that Mrs. Timson could not recover, but still her immediate death was not anticipated.

Mrs. Timson was born in Danvers, July 22, 1843 daughter of Abiel and Susan Margaret (Prentiss) Lerned. Her youth was spent in Cambridge. She married Mr. E. R. Timson 52 years ago. They observed their golden anniversary in November 1911. She is survived by her husband, a daughter Mrs. Herbert A. Warren, two grandsons Edwin H. and Ernest C. Warren, and a grand daughter Gertrude Warren.

Funeral services will be held at the Timson home Thursday at 2 p. m. Rev. Wolcott Calkins, pastor emeritus and Rev. Arthur Simmons pastor of the Montvale Congregational church will officiate. Burial will be at Woodbrook.

Mrs. Timson was a member of the Montvale Congregational church for many years. With others of that loyal band she has been prominent in its activities, and had borne the burden of the fight when it was at its lowest ebb, and rejoiced in its later growth and development. She was an earnest worker, never sparing time, or strength or effort.

Mrs. Timson never wearied in trying to help others. She was vice president of the Social workers, a member of the Woburn Womans' club, one of the managers for 10 years of the Home for Aged Women, and chairman of its religious committee. Mrs. Timson will be missed in her home where love was the tie, in the church where she was a tower of strength, in the organizations with which she was affiliated, and in the community in which she was respected for nearly half a century, and where she will be sincerely mourned.

Just the use of common sense, the following of personal choice, so far as that choice is moral and measured by the best instead of the worst of one's self, and the expenditure of a few pennies will place at the disposal of any worker such means of self-education as were not to be had by the rich of a generation ago.

MAN DRESSED AS A WOMAN

Wears Feminine Apparel and, to Prevent Wife Discovering Disguise, Washes Own Clothes.

Paris.—A middle-aged plumber, father of a family, was the cause of a kind of opera-bouffe siege of an empty villa at Samois-sur-Seine, near Paris. A neighbor saw a light in the empty house and informed the police. Fifty people, armed with guns and pitchforks, surrounded the villa, while the mayor telegraphed for gendarmes from Fontainebleau.

After a prolonged search a plumber named Xavier Martignon was discovered hiding in the garden. He is married, with three children. He explained that he had only come there to wash his clothes. Inquiries showed that the plumber was in the habit of dressing up in woman's clothes, and that his wife might not pillage his wardrobe he concealed it in the empty villa. He was washing it when interrupted by the villagers.

A bundle of clothes found on the second floor contained sixteen chemises, other lingerie, two white blouses, a pink dressing gown, six pairs of stockings, eleven white petticoats and two chest improvers. They were all seized by the gendarmes and the plumber was taken into custody.

Edmonton Secretary Outlines Ideas for Tete-a-tete in the New $200,000 Building.

Edmonton, Alta.—Miss Lukes, general secretary of the Young Women's Christian association of Edmonton, said that "beau parlors" will be features in the $200,000 building to be erected here this spring.

They will be on the main floor, set off from the social hall in such a way that seven or eight of these rooms will be available for a tete-a-tete interview, with a certain amount of privacy, yet without closed doors. Miss Lukes has provided a club room in the present building where the girls are free to invite their boy or man friends.

Another feature of the new home will be individual sleeping chambers, while the public washroom will be partitioned and provided with slatted doors, where the girls may take sponge baths following exercising in the physical department.

Portland, Me.—Leading a donkey and intending to walk from Portland, Me., to Portland, Ore., B. H. Anderson, former general secretary of the Butler (Pa.) chamber of commerce, left on a long walk across the country in fulfilment of the terms of a bet he lost on the presidential election. Anderson, who was a page in the national house of representatives in 1901, was a follower of Colonel Roosevelt and laid a wager on his election as the Progressive candidate for president.

The distance Anderson will lead the donkey is estimated at 4,500 miles and he expects to complete the journey in eight months. Under the provisions of the wager he must call at the White House and greet the new president and also call on the governor of every state through which he passes.

STUDENTS WILL KEEP TAB

Undergraduates at Harvard Asked to Keep Close Record of Every Minute of the Day.

Cambridge, Mass.—Copying modern efficiency methods, Harvard students are keeping tally on the way they spend their time. The committee on scholarship desires to determine the relative periods devoted to college activities and to other interests.

There is said to be no present intention of "speeding up" the students' work, but recommendations may be made as to how the might more profitably employ themselves.

In cards which have been issued undergraduates are asked to tell how much time is spent in eating, in sleeping, in studying, in athletics, at theaters, and in all other ways. A careful record is to be kept for one week, and the cards are then to be returned to the committee. The result of the canvass is to be published.

COPE LIBRARY IS ON SALE

Prominent Dealers and Collectors From Both Sides of Atlantic Seek Rare Books.

London.—The library of Sir Anthony Cope, comprising an unusually large and interesting collection of Americana, was put up at public sale at Sotheby's. Prominent dealers and collectors from both sides of the Atlantic were on hand, with a view to securing some of the rare books embraced in the collection. These included a fine copy of Bossus' "Travels Through Louisiana," dated 1771; J. Carver's "Travels Through North America in 1766, 1767 and 1768," with maps and plates; H. Ellis' "Voyage to Hudson Bay," and "California, 1746-1747."

Dog Uncovers Swindle.

Winsted, Conn.—A dachshund belonging to Eugene McCaskey, who was playing poker with several sharps, saw one of his master's opponents slip an ace behind his knees, and bit him on the leg. The card which would have lost McCaskey the pot dropped to the floor and disclosed the swindle.

GETS "DEATH SIGN"

Woman in Court Faints When She Sees Fatal Gesture.

Is Code of the Camorrists—Members of Criminal Society Have Ghastly Ways of Telling Victim of Impending Doom.

New York.—Annie Grecco was getting along beautifully in her testimony the other day. Her statements were lucid, her memory perfect, her sense of the dramatic keen. Then some one in the packed mob toward the rear of the court room caught Annie's eye—and bit the knuckle of his bent forefinger. His features wrinkled up in a snarl, as do those of a dog when he worries a bone. Annie pitched sidewise out of her chair in a faint.

"That," said an old secret service man, "was only one of perhaps a dozen 'death signs.' Any one of them would be recognized by any Italian, because they all have their origin in that instinct of dramatization common to the race. The knuckle biting meant death, of course. More nearly it meant 'I'll tear you to bits.' If you ever see an enraged Camorrist biting at his knuckle bone and growling like a bulldog, you'll admit that sign is easily read. Another is the handkerchief sign. Tears sometimes stream down their faces as they twist a handkerchief between their hands. Sometimes it is clinched in their teeth. Their code is primitive enough to go back to the men who lived in trees.

"Sometimes the threat is expressed by wringing the two hands together. It is over in a second—but it has sent a promise to the threatened person that he will be torn into pieces. Sometimes a hasty motion of the two hands over the knees means, 'I'll break your back.' One of the most common signs is made by uniting the tips of the thumb and forefinger, forming a ring, while the other fingers are extended. A circular motion of the hands means 'I'll tear you up.' One finger is hurriedly passed across the throat—and that threat needs no interpretation. Sometimes the man making the threat slashes upward with one finger on his breast or stomach. That is 'I'll rip your heart out.' The first and second fingers may be extended, pitchfork like, and a sudden jab made toward the eyes, 'I'll blind you.'

"But there are too many signs to be listed. Every little secret association of Italian criminals may have its own code. Many of the signs have their origin in the village from which the actors come and might not be recognized by outsiders. Remember, there are eighty-nine distinct dialects spoken in Italy. But the meaning of all is contained in a most expressive gesture of the Calabrians, which means:

"'If I get hold of you I'll cut you up—and if you run I'll shoot you.'"

RAM CAUSES SCHOOL PANIC

Knocks Woman Principal Unconscious and Puts Children to Rout—Was Pet of Scholar.

Pittsburgh.—A ram with on more respect for the public school regulation than was manifested by "Mary's Little Lamb," recently wandered into the Crescent school, in the Franks-town district. It followed Nick Galdona.

Miss Flora Denniston, principal, encountered the ram in the hall. She tried to "shoo" it away. Mr. Ram butted Miss Denniston at the knees and knocked her down.

Then some of the pupils who knew nothing of the disposition of a bull sheep tried to reason with the Galdona pet. Well—the students who escaped violent collision with the hard skull of the ram fled from the building.

During the scrimmage Miss Denniston remained insensible on the floor. Fright and shock caused her to swoon. The janitor was about to resort to cautious strategy when Nick Galdona said something in Italian and the ram followed him back home, but school was dismissed for the day.

Wearing of Shoes a Crime.

Boston.—Prof. K. Jefferson Richards champions going barefooted at all seasons as a remedy for the ailments of the human race. "It was never intended," says the learned professor, "that a well-developed foot should be pinched, distorted and punished by being shut up in pieces of sewed leather."

TO STUDY SPOOKS

Chair of Spiritualism to Be Established in Harvard.

Investigation of "Psychic Phenomena" in New England, Where Witches Were Burned—Bequest of $10,000 for Research.

Cambridge.—Harvard university has seriously contracted to enter upon an investigation of what is technically described as "psychic phenomena," but which our parents (ever since the days of the Fox sisters) called "spiritualism," writes Julian Chambers. This, to my way of thinking is one of the most startling innovations in pedagogy that several centuries have furnished. Indeed, it is an event that could only have followed the coming of the wonderful era of telephone, airships, radium, wireless messages and phonographs. It will not do to treat this incident lightly or to cover it with ridicule.

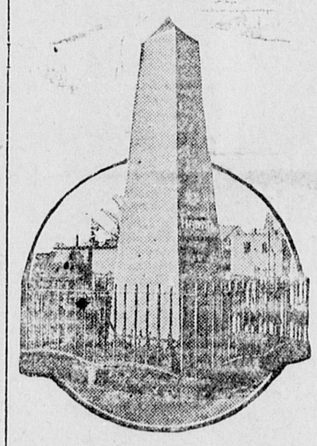

Such is far from my thought when I frankly declare that the acceptance of a $10,000 endowment fund for psychic research by that time-honored university at Cambridge encourages the hope that Francis L. Wellman's fond wish to found a school of draw poker at Harvard may be ultimately realized.

Seriously, however, comparatively few as are believers in spiritualism, the acceptance of this bequest by so conservative a body as the trustees of Harvard brings the study of psychic phenomena to a stage never previously attained in this country.

The language employed by the benefactor is quite explicit. He gives the money—which can only be regarded as the nucleus of a much larger fund—for "investigation and study of mental or psychological phenomena, the origin or expression of which appears to be independent of the ordinary sensory channels."

While this leaves the range as wide open as spookland, it also confines it within scientific scope.

Plenty of persons have seen ghosts—or believe they have, which, for practical purposes of "research," is the same thing. For example, although a complete disbeliever in so-called spirit phenomena, I have seen with my own eyes ghostly shapes—not resultant from Welsh rabbits and disordered liver, but the fabric of an apparently sound mentality.

There are houses known to me that have supernatural occupants, as well as human beings! Again, there are houses that harbor quaint, queer, inexplicable noises, by night and by day.

Personally, I doubt not, rational and natural explanations can be found for all such noises. I am not sufficiently interested—curious were a better word—to seek the solution of such problems of the natural world.

There are phases of mental science that are accepted. There is probably something in telepathy—as every one must concede if he or she have sufficient mental power to compel another person seated in church or theater to turn and bow.

No more interesting mental test can be made than to sit at distance from two persons well known and to attempt to learn, by telepathy, what they are talking about. You will be amazed how often it can be done. Try.

You may fail utterly; but some people are able to do this very thing!

Some kind of intangible, inexplicable intercommunication is at times established between intimate friends far distant.

Most men of the world—especially active mental workers or travelers—believe in premonitions. When one reaches that stage, why not have confidence in dreams?

An intimate friend always has a serious illness whenever he dreams of snakes—I am not joking, the man always has been a total abstainer. The dream may be responsible for the sickness, you will say. Possibly so. But the same person never dreams of seeing washing hung upon a line without finding therein a premonition that he is to move his habitation.

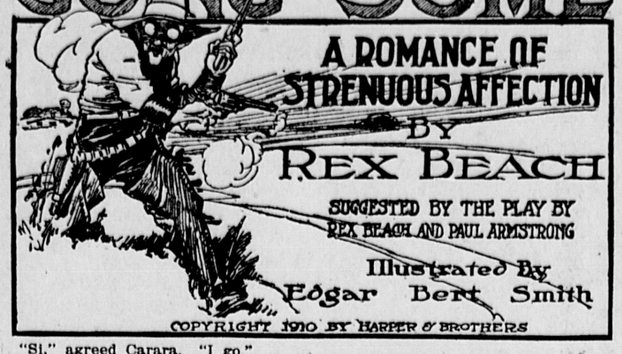

Young Lion Claws Boy.

Rome. — The young lion which Princess Radziwill, nee Miss Deacon, of Boston, recently took to a fancy ball in a chariot, was being exercised in the zoological gardens when he broke loose and sprang on the infant son of Count Macca, formerly Italian minister at Buenos Ayres, inflicting serious wounds on the boy's forehead with his claws.

"Si," agreed Carara. "I go."

"And don't waste no time neither," directed Willie. "You tear like a jackrabbit ahead of a hot wind."

Carara tossed his cigarette aside, and the sound of his spurs was lost around the corner of the house.

"This makes a boy of me," the last speaker continued. "I can hear the plaintiff notes of Madam-o-sella Melby once again."

CHAPTER V.

LARRY GLASS discovered his protege on the rear porch engrossed with Miss Blake, and signaled him from afar; but the young man ignored the signal, and the trainer strolled up to the steps.

"Hello, Larry! What's on your mind?" inquired Speed.

"I'd like to see you." Glass, clad in his sportiest garments, seemed utterly lacking in the proper appreciation of a valet's position. He treated his employer with a tolerant good-nature.

Miss Blake excused herself and went into the house, whereupon her companion showed his irritation. "See here, Larry, don't you know better than to interrupt me in the midst of a hammock talk?"

"Oh, that's all right," wheezed the trainer. "As long as you didn't spill her out, she'll be back."

"Well, what is it?"

"I had a stomach-laugh slipped to me just now." He began to shake.

"So you broke up my tete-a-tete to tell me a funny story?"

"Listen here. These cowboys have got you touted for a foot-runner." This time Glass laughed aloud, hoarsely. "They have framed a race with a ginny down the block."

"All right, I'll run."

Mr. Glass's face abruptly fell into solemn lines. "Quit your kiddin', Wally; you couldn't run a hundred yards in twenty minutes. These guys are on the level. They've sent General Garcia over to cook it."

"Yes. The race comes off in ten days."

Glass allowed his mouth to drop open and his little eyes to peer forth in startled amazement.

"Then it's true? I guess this climate is too much for you," he said. "When did you feel this comin' on?"

Speed laughed. "I know what I'm doing."

With an effort at restraint, the trainer inquired:

"What's the idea?"

"I'll tell you how it came up, Larry. I—I'm very fond of Miss Blake. That's why I broke the record getting out here as soon as I was invited. Well, she believes, from something I said—one of those odd moments, you know—that I'm a great athlete, and she told those cowboys that I'd gladly put on my spiked shoes and carry their colors to victory. You've heard about the phonograph?"

Glass smiled wearily. "I can't hear nothing else. The gang is daffy on grand opera."

"When I was accused of being an athlete I couldn't deny it, could I?"

"I see. You was stringin' the gal, and she called you, eh?"

"I wouldn't express it in quite those terms. I may have exaggerated my abilities slightly." Glass laughed. "She is such a great admirer of athletics, it was quite natural. Any man would have done the same. She got me committed in front of the cowboys, and I had to accept—or be a quitter."

Glass nodded appreciatively. "All the same," said he, "you've got more nerve than a burglar. How you goin' to side-step?"

"I made the match for an 'unknown.'" Speed winked. "Covington will be here in a day or two. I'll wire him to hurry up. Fortunately I brought a lot of athletic clothes with me, so I'll go into training under your direction. When Covington gets here I'll let him run."

The fat man sighed with relief. "Now I'm hep. I was afraid you'd try to go through with it. You had me wingin' for a while, but I plugged your game with the cowboys. Pawnee Bill and his Congress of Rough Riders think you're a cyclone.'"

"It's the first chance I ever had—wear that silk running-suit. Who knows, maybe I can run!"

"Nix, now! Don't kid yourself too far. This thing is funny enough as it stands."

"Oh, I dare say it looks like a joke to you, but it doesn't to me, Larry. If I don't marry that girl, I—I'll go off my balance, that's all, and I'm not going to overlook any advantage whatever. Fresno sings love songs, and he's got a mint of money. Well, I'm going to work this athletic pose to death. I'm going into training, I'm going to talk, eat, sleep, live athletics for a week, and when I'm unexpectedly crippled on the eve of the race, it is going to break my heart. Under

"You're a True Sport."

"Ah! The Baggage Car—Te'adora Mora! God bless 'er!"

"I must confess I've never had the pleasure," said Speed, whereupon the speaker regarded him pityingly, and Stover, jealous that so much of the conversation had escaped him, inquired:

"Can it be that you never heard that monologue, Silas on Fifth Avenoo?"

Again Speed shook his head.

As if the very memory were hilariously funny, Still Bill's shoulders heaved, and stifled laughter caused his Adam's apple to race up and down his leathern throat. Swallowing his merriment at length, he recited, in a choking voice, as follows: "Silas goes up Fifth Avenoo and climbs into a bus. There is a girl settin' opposite. He says, 'The girl opened her valise, took out her purse, closed her valise, opened her purse, took out a dime, closed her purse, opened her valise, put in her purse, closed her valise, handed the dime to the conductor, got a nickle in change, opened her valise, took out her purse, closed her valise, opened her purse—'"

"The Four-Eyed Gent Is Willie."

At this point the speaker fell into ungovernable hysteria and exploded, rocking back and forth, slapping his thighs and hiccoughing with enjoyment. Willie followed him, as did Carara. Even Cloudy showed his teeth, and the two young people on the porch found themselves joining in from infection. It was patent that here lay some subtle humor sufficient to convulse the Far Western nature beyond all reason; for Stover essayed repeatedly to check his laughter before gasping, finally:

"Gosh 'lmighty! I never can get past that place. He! He! He! Whoo-hoo! That's sure ridiculous, for fair." He wiped his eyes with the back of a sun-browned hand, and his frame was racked with barking coughs. "I know the whole blame thing by heart, but—I can't recite it to you. I bog down right there. Seems like some folks is the darndest fools!"

"You see what the phonograph means to these gentlemen," said Miss Blake. "I think it's a crying shame that they were cheated out of it, don't you?"

Speed began to outline a plan hastily in his mind.

"I assured them that you would win it back for them, and—"

"We sure hope you will," said Willie, earnestly.

"Amen!" breathed the lanky foreman, his cheeks still wet from his tears of laughter, but his face drawn into lines of eagerness.

"Please! For my sake!" urged Helen, placing a gentle little hand upon her companion's arm.

Speed closed his eyes, so to speak, and leaped in the dark.

"All right, I'll do it!"

"Yow-ee!" yelled Stover. "We knew you would!" Willie was beaming benignantly through his glasses, while both Carara and Cloudy showed their heart-felt gratitude. "Thank you, Miss that shave Blake. Now we'll show up tail Centipede crowd for what it is."

"Wait!" Speed checked the outburst. "I'll consent upon conditions I'll run, provided you can arrange the race for an 'unknown.'"

"What does that mean?" Helen asked.

"It means that I don't want my name known in the matter. Instead of arranging for Mr. Whatever-the-Cook's-Name-Is to run a race with J. W. Speed, he must agree to compete against a representative of the Flying Heart ranch, name unknown."

"I don't think that is fair!" cried the girl. "Think of the honor."

"Yes, but I'm an amateur. I'd lose my standing."

"That goes for us," said Stover. "We don't care what name you run under. We'll frame the race. Lordy! but this is a glorious event."

"We can't thank you enough," Willie piped. "You're a true sport, Mr. Speed, and we aim to see that you don't get the worst of it in no way. This here race is goin' to be on the square—you hear me talkin'. No double-cross this time." Unconsciously the speaker's hand strayed to the gun at his belt, while his smile was grim. Speed started.

"What day shall we set?" inquired Stover.

Wally rapidly calculated the date of Culver's arrival, and said:

"A week from Saturday." Covington would soon be en route, and was due to arrive a few days thereafter.

"One week from Saturday goes," announced Stover, "and we thank you again." Turning to Carara, he directed: "Rope your buckskin, and hike for the Centipede. Tell 'em to unlimber their coin. I'll draw a month's wages in advance for every son-of-a-gun on the Flying Heart, and we'll arrange details tonight."

Mariedetta took the message and turned silently, but as she went she flashed a look at Glass which caused that short-waisted gentleman to wink at his companion.

"Some frill! Eh? I'm for her! She's strong for me, too."

"How do you know?"

"We talked it over. I gave her a little kiss to keep for me."

"Careful, Larry! She may have a cowboy sweetheart."

Glass grunted, disparagingly.

"Them ginnys is jokes to me."

As Speed talked he clad himself in his silken uniform, donned his spiked

"Nix, Now! Don't Kid Yourself Too Far."

shoes, and pinned the medals upon his chest.

"How do I look?" he queried.

"Immense! If she likes athletes, it's a walk-away for you."

"Then give me the baby-blue bath robe with the monogram. We'll go out and trot around a little."

But his complacency received a shock as he stepped out upon the veranda. Not only Helen Blake awaited him, but the other girls as well, while out in front were a dozen or more cowboys whom Fresno had rallied.

"Goin' to take a little run, eh?" inquired Stover. "We allowed we'd lay off a few minutes and watch you."

"Thanks!"

"Yes," Fresno spoke up. "I told the boys we'd better hold a stop-watch on you and see what shape you're in."

"A stop-watch?" said Glass sharply.

"Yes. I have one."

"Not today," said Speed's trainer. "No!" he admonished, as his protege turned upon him. "Some other time, mebbe. You're just off a long trip, and I can't risk gettin' you stove up."

"Tomorrow, perhaps," urged Fresno.

"I wouldn't promise.

"Then the next day. I've timed lots of men. The watch is correct."

"Let's see it." Glass held out his hand.

"Oh, it's a good watch. It cost me one hundred and twenty-five dollars."

As Glass reached for the timepiece an unfortunate accident occurred. Speed struck his elbow, and the watch fell. Fresno dove for it, then held it to his ear and shook it.

"You've broken it!" he cried, accusingly.

"Oh, I'm sorry! My fault," Speed apologized.

"If it was your fault, maybe you'll fix it," suggested the tenor.

"Gladly!" Speed turned to his trainer. "Buy a new alarm-clock for our little friend." He stripped off his bath robe, and handed it to his trainer. "Is she looking at me?" he whispered.

"Both eyes, big as saucers."

Speed settled his spikes into the dirt as he had seen other sprinters do, set himself for an instant, then loped easily around the house and out of sight.

SOMERVILLE YOUNG MEN ARE FINED

Ordered to pay $5 each for disturbing the peace early yesterday morning, six Somerville young men ages ranging from 16 to 19 years, were found guilty in court this morning of disturbing the peace. Judge Johnson was on the bench and imposed a fine of $5 in each case.

Patrolmen Edward McDonald, Timothy E. Walsh, Edward Gorman, John Roche, and Otis Blanchard, B. and M. station agent at Central square, were the government witnesses. The defendants were Edward Long, 17 years, Patrick Sullivan 19, William Kiley 16, Patrick Regan 18, James Culligan 16 and John Kelliher 17.

Patrolman McDonald testified to seeing the defendants at about three o'clock Sunday morning at the corner of School and Main street North Woburn. They were singing boisterously, and making considerable noise, so much in fact that he followed them for quite a distance.

The other officers testified that upon arriving in the center the defendants stopped at the lunch cart, and while there Patrolmen Walsh, Roche and Gorman heard them talking about kicking a door in. The suspicious nature of the conversation was enough to justify locking the young men up and the police did so.

Mr. Blanchard said that the total damage to the station would not amount to more than $5, the panels in the door being split, and the lock broken. He found three new bushel boxes outside the door of the station, evidently the property of some nearby farmer which was picked up and thrown away.

Several of the defendants cross-examined the officers, and later testified that they left Somerville shortly before midnight Saturday on a trolley car, going to Wilmington. There was no return car and they started to walk back, but were compelled to stop from time to time and stand beneath trees to avoid the heavy Sunday morning showers.

They denied point blank any knowledge of the break at the railroad station, and one of them stated that they passed four men at Central square, who might have been guilty. Judge Johnson thought otherwise and the fines were imposed.

MUSKRAT DEFIES PATROLMAN WALSH

Refuses to Move when Officer Approached and is Killed

While patrolling his beat shortly after 12 o'clock Saturday night, Patrolman Timothy E. Walsh bunped into a large muskrat calmly sitting on the Common at the corner nearest the lunch cart, and in full view of passersby.

After considerable skirmishing he cautiously edged up to the undisturbed rodent, who treated the approach of one of "Woburn's finest" with an air of supreme contempt and indifference. The animal made the mistake of its life, however, and showed signs of fight too late, for the officer taking advantage of the situation, swung his night stick with great force and succeeded in breaking a leg. This put the musk rat on the defensive, but he still had some fight left.

But Tim was out to win and handicapped by the broken leg the rodent proved no match for the doughty officer. He was soon captured and put out of existence.

The animal was a large one weighing about nine pounds. His coat was heavy and in excellent condition, not being marred in the least by the combat, and proved quite a find for the genial Tim, as the fur of a muskrat is valuable, and adaptable to many uses.

GOLDEN ATTACKS SUPT. SPENCER

Sensational Arraignment of Water Department Official at Hearing Last Evening

MAIN QUESTION UNSOLVED

In a sensational speech at the conclusion of the board of public works meeting last evening, City Collector Bernard J. Golden defended his action in selling five and one half acres of land near the water reservoir to Henry Blake of Winchester for $100 and employing biting invective he scathingly denounced Superintendent Spencer of the water department.

It was the most vicious arraignment of a public official ever heard at city hall and came as a climax to the principal business of the evening, an investigation of the sale of the land in question. The probe was for two purposes, one to discover if the conveyance of the land had been legally consumated, and the other to learn if it was possible for the city to again obtain possession.

The board had finished the regular order of business, and City Collector Golden, Superintendent Spencer, Principal Assessor James H. Connolly, City Solicitor J. Fred Maloney, City Engineer William B. Jones, Henry E. Blake, City Messenger Frank Bellew, and Elmore A. Pierce were invited into the room.

Mayor Henchey who was presiding, opened the proceedings by asking the tax collector to tell the story of the sale. Mr. Golden said that last June Henry Blake came to see him about the land and he looked the matter up finding that the property had been sold in 1875 to Lyman Dyke of Stoneham on a tax title, and was again sold in 1877. Mr. Blake was given a quit claim on payment of $100 and Mayor Murray signed the deed. The statements attributed by the press to Superintendent Spencer that the land was part of the original Woburn water supply purchase was absolutely false Mr. Golden declared.

City Engineer Jones showed the board plans of land surrounding the reservoir, and in reply to questions from members of the board he stated that he believed the land purchased by Blake would some day prove of great value for the protection of the water supply.

He said that at the hearing in the famous land damage case in which the court assessed the city $19,000 for land taken for auxiliary water supply purposes, a number of expert hydraulic engineers testified that all the land in the vicinity of the reservoir and pumping plant was almost indispensable to the preservation of the Woburn water supply.

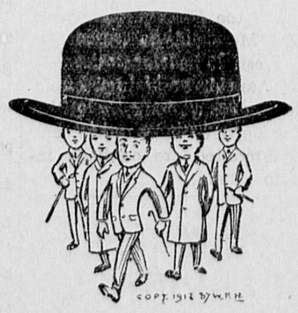

Mr. Blake who purchased the quit claim said that he did not care anything about the land, but he felt he had been placed in a wrong light before the public, and he wanted that feature of the dispute straightened out, more than he wanted to retain the land. He alluded to the report that Commissioner Jones had made to a former meeting of the board that he (Blake) was cutting wood outside his boundary lines, and admitted the fact, but said that he thought he was within his rights. Mr. Blake then made the startling statement that wood was being cut on the property indiscriminately, and that it was being carried away in team loads.

Assessor Connolly said that the land bought by Blake had been dropped from taxation before he became a member of the board of assessors.

City Solicitor Maloney said that if the City Collector and Mayor Murray wanted to dispose of the property to the city at the time it was bought by Mr. Blake, there was no legal obstacle to the city having acquired the rights on the premises that Mr. Blake now owns, and he further said that if the land was valuable to the water department, and if satisfactory arrangements could be made between all interested parties, that the city could now acquire all the Blake rights, after certain legal formalities are complied with.

After the commissioners had asked various questions it appeared to be the sense of the meeting that the future of the water supply demanded that the land again become the property of the city, and a motion offered by Commissioner Kelley that Mr. Blake be requested to transfer all the rights

ENTHUSIASTIC MOOSE MEETING HELD

Class of 35 Candidates Initiated Last Evening by Lynn Degree Team

The Loyal Order of Moose was on the reservation in full force last evening, and the headquarters of Woburn lodge 1214 was the scene of the demonstration.

The full degree team from the Lynn lodge, 18 in number in full uniform performed the initiation work upon a class of 35 candidates in a very impressive manner. Accompanying the degree team was a delegation of 40 members of the Lynn lodge, the entire party travelling hither by special electric.

The meeting was made especially interesting by the presence of several national officers. George Ward the supreme lecturer, of Erie, Pa., gave an interesting address on the growth and history of the order.

Arthur W. Hayden, national director, told the story of the growing interest in the order in New England, where three years ago the entire membership was only 600, and now numbered upwards of 53000. As further illustrations of the rapid rise of the order in the country he quoted the examples of the Philadelphia lodge which has 13000 members, that at Los Angeles of 8000, at Boston of 7000, and one in Colorado of 9000.

W. H. Doris deputy national director, the organizer of the Woburn lodge, complimented the lodge upon its rapid growth in three months to a membership of 200 and announced that his request that the charter list be kept open for an additional 30 days had been granted by the Supreme director. This will be appreciated, he was confident, as there were numerous applications for membership from Winchester and Wilmington as well as Woburn.

The visiting degree team gave a very impressive exhibition of floor work, that was received with much favor. Collation was served. Delegations were present from several lodges in nearby sections.

THE TEST —OF— Shoemaking Efficiency.

It is a shame that so-called shoemakers should bet on one part of a shoe only. I did bet that way 25 years ago when I was one year in the trade, when I was 16 years old.

I will make a new shoe from the beginning to the end, and I can sew a pair of shoes by hand as neat as he can by machine, and everybody can tell in the wearing part which is the better.

I will make a new shoe from the beginning to the end, and I invite experts' inspection to decide which is the better; his or mine.

The difference between hand work and machine work is like a hand made coat and a machine made one. We do the most of our work by hand carefully.

When I opened a store, I did not put "Gorin" as he stated, but I put up "S. Gorin."

I owned and operated a shoe repairing shop long before my competitor ever thought of entering the business.

My brother sent for me but I paid for the ticket, he did not give me any, as I have receipts, for it. I also worked repairing shoes, and was paid 30 cents a pair for hand sewed shoes, and 15 for tapping a pair of shoes. If this is a living wage what is starvation?

TUESDAY, MARCH 18, 1913.

"ISN'T IT AWFUL MABEL?"

Have you read what they purpose doing out in Ohio? They are going to regulate woman's street attire by legislative enactment. Isn't that going some? Peek-a-boo waists are to be tabooed. Open-work hosiery banished! Hobble skirts to the discard! No wonder the sex is demanding the suffrage.

Yesterday Representative Louis P. Cappelle of Cincinnati introduced a bill providing for the appointment by the governor, of a commission of three "to prescribe the fashions to be worn by women in the state of Ohio." This savors of infringement of individual rights. The propounder of the measure says he is impelled to take the step because the outrageous fashions of the day is the cause of a great wave of immorality now sweeping over the country.

The bill provides that the commission, which is to consist of an ordained minister, a parent of not less than three children, and a social settlement worker, each of whom must be between 30 and 50 years of age, and of good moral character, is to fix the limits in dresses so that not more than two inches of the neck shall be exposed. Another clause reads "that transparent stockings shall not be displayed or worn in public places"

No outer garment trimmed or combined with lace, insertion or any kind of embroidery mesh or net through which the color or texture of the skin may be distinguished, without the same is backed by some opaque material, shall be worn. The commission is given the right to pass upon the style and patterns shown, and is clothed with power to prevent stores from displaying undraped artificial figures.

The palm for supreme foolishness belongs to Cappelle of Cincinnati. Of all the tommy rot, this bill of his is certainly the king pin. Everybody knows that woman's dress needs reform, that some of the specimens approach closely to the indecent, but the idea of attempting to regulate it by legislative enactment is absurd. And in all probability Cappelle will find out later that he has bitten off more than he can Fletcherize.

DECLAMATION IN SCHOOLS

What has declamation to do with public speaking and debating? How does it develop ability to speak one's own thoughts as he stands? What has it to do with debating a motion or question logically and forcefully? It makes no demands whatever on one's own thoughts. Provided the memory is sufficiently trustworthy, the thoughts in the piece declaimed need not be understood at all. Many a child speaks pieces with little or no idea of what he says. A declamation calls for no logic whatever. It may appear in Latin, Greek, or Choctaw, and effort will be concentrated on memorizing the words in order and pronouncing them in a conventional manner. Throw in a few gestures of the usual conventional sort and the phonograph has done its work more or less completely, and the speaker gets "genuine and emphatic applause."

Three hundred and thirty years ago Montaigue said in his "Essais," "Though we should become learned by other men's reading, I am sure a man can never be wise but by his own wisdom." That statement has never been disproved. How, then, does committing to memory, another's words and crying them out help the declaimer to analyze, compare,and classify statements made by an opponent, draw inferences and make deductions from them, balance and weigh them in the mental scales, and, finally draw on his own personal knowledge and experience, and formulate his own statements to confute his opponents, when all of these mental acts are required in debate and none of them in declamation? There is hardly a foot of common ground for comparison. Delusions which give opportunities for parade are fondly cherished and given up reluctantly.

In my youth I declaimed much, but found to my sorrow that the more I depended on other men's thoughts and forms of expression, the less I could marshal and formulate my own. Memory would not yield to reason. Personality was swamped by other personalities. To me declamation became a veritable shackle, and I abandoned it altogether. Then I began to study its effects on preparatory students and found that all of them could declaim, some of them remarkably well, but hardly any of them could debate. One of the very best could not debate at all, having apparently the courage of a lion when he was mouthing another man's words,but the timidity of a mouse in using his own. The same unfortunate condition was discerned among grammar school children for many years, the infirmity increasing with the age of the children and the increase of declamation. Then the whole thing was eradicated. Pupils were allowed and taught to talk about all their studies in the school room, to discuss, debate, reason, and act like human beings. Then bashfulness and self-consciousness disappeared, reason was enthroned, and genuine debaters took the floor and held it.. The effete declamation was not resurrected in my day.

This is only one view, one experience, among a great many, and perhaps a great deal better view. Is the value of declamation, as a means of putting a boy on his feet and of thinking for himself, worth reconsideration? What do the ready debaters say, the ones who have studied the matter, have tried it out, and have positive convictions on the question?

How many can trace any power in debate or off-hand speaking to declamations with certainty? Is it a time-honored relic which we have taken on trust, a transmittendum affair that is too sacred to be questioned? Mature opinions are wanted, of lawyers, clergymen, members of the city government, men who have found themselves and settled down to business, not those of school boys and fledgelings. To forestall one wrong impression that may be given, it should be stated that committing to memory gems of literature, prose and poetry is wholly commendable, if wholly disconnected from public parade. To a small extent these gems are serviceable in oral and written arguments and literary work in general. But for mental contemplation and spiritual comforts they are indispensable.

THEO P. BERLE TURNED DOWN

Former Woburn Clergyman Tries to Change School Administration in Reading but Fails

Reading held an adjourned town meeting last evening, and resumed discussion of the motion offered at a previous meeting by Theo. P. Berle of that town, and formerly pastor of the North Congregational church in this city. The meeting lasted until a late hour, and resulted in an overwhelming defeat of Mr. Berle's proposition.

Several years ago Reading elected Harry T. Watkins, who was already principal of the high school, superintendent of schools, allowing him to hold both offices. Later he was also made secretary of the school committee. Mr. Berle's contention was that under this plan the Reading high school suffered, and that its standard had so far fallen that the right of certification of graduates to colleges had been withdrawn. His motion was in effect that the present plan of one man holding both offices was not economical for the taxpayer or beneficial to the pupils, and that the town return to the old system.

The discussion waxed very warm at times. The ex-clergyman is a ready speaker and a quick thinker and his shots fell thick and fast. Principal Watkins was present, and defended his position. He denied absolutely that the standard had been lowered. The meeting stood by Watkins all right, and buried Mr. Berle under an avalanche of noes.

DIV. 18 A. O. H. HAD GALA NIGHT

Entertainment in Celebration of St. Patrick's Day

Div. 18, A.O.H. held its annual entertainment in its hall last night in honor of St. Patrick. The meeting was opened by President Samuel T. Hooper, who spoke of the great men in America today who are of Irish descent. He mentioned the Presidents who were either Irish by birth or descent, including President Jackson, "Old Hickory," a typical pioneer Irish American who was the son of a north of Ireland farmer; President Polk's grandparents were Irish immigrants; Presidents Buchanan and Arthur were sons of Ulster parents; Presidents Munroe and McKinley had enough Irish blood in them to repeatedly boast about it; three signers of the Declaration of Independence were of Irish birth, and at least six others were of Irish parentage, while John Hancock, the first signer of the Declaration of Independence was of Irish descent, his ancestors coming from Down country; John Sullivan struck the first blow for freedom four months before the battle of Lexington by capturing the military stores at Portsmouth. Whole companies of Irishmen fought through the Revolution, some of them under the green flag. The work of Mad Anthony Wayne, and General Moylan will live forever in American history as will the names of Commodore Barry and Generals Montgomery, Knox and Clinton in the war of 1812, and the one name that will outlive all others is that of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry who came from Ireland.

In the Civil war the Irish furnished men in both the Confederate and Federal armies: Generals Phil. Sheridan, George, Meade, General Sherman and Thomas F. Meagher of the Irish brigade. Among the Irish governors of the different states at the present time are Joseph M. Carey of Wyoming, John Burk of North Dakota, Francis E. McGovern of Wisconsin, Edward F. Duane of Illinois and John K. Tenner of Pennsylvania. Mayors of the large cities include Gaynor of New York, and Fitzgerald of Boston. Some of the other great men are James A. Farrell, president of the U.S. Steel Corporation, James Hill, railroad and steamship magnate; Thomas F. Ryan one of the greatest forces in international finance; Joseph C. Clark poet and historian; Harold F. McCormack, treasurer of International Harvester Company and his son, the inventor of the reaping machine; Patrick McGowan, president general of the American Irish historiacl society; William H. Maxwell, who has been superintendent of schools in New York since 1898; His Eminence William Cardinal O'Connell, His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons,His Eminence John Cardinel Farley. Of the Judges of the U. S. Supreme court Chief Justice Edward White, Justice Charles E. Hughes and Joseph McKenna; in the world of music Victor Herbert, greatest of living Irish composers and musicians; the late Patrick Gilmore, an Irishman named Dominick Lynch who introduced Italian opera here. John P. Holland, the inventor of the submarine boat; Samuel F. B. Morse of telegraph and ocean cable fame, Robert Fulton, the father of steam navigation were of Irish descent. Then there are more people of Irish parentage in the United States than in Ireland; more than 6,000,000 either born in Ireland or of Irish descent. New York and Boston have more Irish and their descendants than any city in Ireland.

Rev. Patrick T. Higgins, pastor of St. Joseph's church was the first speaker called upon and he spoke for the church and on St. Patrick. Michael Connors gave a recitation which was well received by the large crowd; President Martin McDonough of Div. 41 Stoneham, made a pleasing address, James F. McGrath the Hustler, told about his trip abroad and rendered in all his old time vein the beautiful pieces of poetry entitled "Erin's Flag" and the "Dandy Fifth."

Mayor William H. Henchey was given a deafening round when he rose to speak. He spoke in behalf of the city and of the good that an order such as the Hibernians could do for the general welfare of the city. Mr. B. J. Golden, one of the first members of the order, spoke of the growth of the order, and Michael Golden sang, "By the Lakes of Kilarney."

Others who contributed Irish songs were William Noyes, Hugh McCall, Edward Wall, Albert Hooper and Samuel T. Hooper. Mr. William Cogan and Hugh McCall presided at the piano. After the entertainment refreshments were served and everybody voted it one of the best times that Div. 18 A.O.H. has ever held.

MISSING WOBURN GIRL LOCATED

Mary Pattelina Sends Telegram from New Britain Connecticut

The anxiety which filled the mind of Mrs. Mary Pattelina was relieved last evening by the receipt of a telegram from her daughter Mary, who left home mysteriously Thursday evening last stating "Am safe with sister in New Britain, Conn. Will not come home."

It is not denied that the intended marriage between Miss Pattelina and Alfred Demio of Winchester met with some oppositon from the mother and that this opposition was the cause of the girl leaving home.

As matters now stend the wedding is at least postponed, and it is not improbable that Miss Pattelina may call it off altogether.

GOLDEN ATTACKS SUPT. SPENCER

he acquired through recent transactions with Mr. Golden to the city, upon payment of $100 was unanimously carried.

Mr. Blake said that he wanted time to consider the proposition and agreed to notify Mayor Henchey before the next meeting of the board whether he would accept or not.

Mr. Golden then asked permission to say something further on the subjest, and he was told to go ahead. He then launched his terrific attack on Superintendent Spencer, saying among other things

"Mr. Blake has complained of being inconvenienced by the publicity of this affair and I want to say that I also have received undue notoriety from it. The commencement of the trouble was when Mr. Spencer told Mrs. Blake in his characteristic way that her husband was cutting wood off of his (Spencer's) land. Mrs. Blake told him that if he wanted to know the facts to ask me. Did he come? No! Instead, in his sneaky way he goes around the city and says that I made an illegal sale of city property. He told you tonight that he did not know anything about it, and he don't know. Then he tells people that he intends to put me in jail. I want to tell him right here that unless he pays his water rates amounting to about $82 that I will have him in court and make him pay them. Has he a right just because he is superintendent of the water department to be exempt from water taxation? If he has, then I have the same right as collector of taxes to be exempt from taxes. This board of public works has by vote ordered those water rates paid but they have never been collected. He has defied the board. But he ought to pay those water rates, and I will make him pay them.

"When a man like Mr. Spencer comes before a board with a serious assertion he should be prepared to back up his statement with facts. But he did not know what he was talking about then and he don't know now.

"This whole dispute is not provoked by Mr. Spencer because there has been any injustice done the city. It was an attempt to injure me. In his bullying ignorant way he is going about telling of the illegality of my actions, and what he intends to do with me, and in order to prove that the sale of this land was perfectly legal I am going to advise Mr. Blake not to accept your proposition to purchase his rights.

"The superintendent of the water department thought he had me in a bad position, and I want the city solicitor and every member of this board to make a thorough investigation of this land sale. I court the fullest inquiry. Spencer is unfit to be superintendent of the water department, and if he was in his proper place he would be working in a sewer trench. I court and welcome the fullest inquiry into my official act.

"Spencer's particular grievance is that this lot of land got away from him. He is the largest purchaser of tax-title property in Woburn today.

When Mr. Golden finished Mr. Spencer rose and said that several of the statements made by the city collector were false and the meeting adjourned subject to a special call by the mayor when it is probable if Mr. Blake refuses to sell his rights that the matter may be again opened up.

Before the hearing, the board voted upon recommendaion of Commissioner Kelley to ask the city council to appropriate $300 for the purchase and planting of shade trees, and $200 to put Library park in condition.

Commissioner Wallace notified the board that he would within a short time recommend an appropriation for sewer extension. The commissioner said that there was no good reason why every property owner should not have the benefit of the sewer system, as all were forced to pay a sewer tax.

He thought that this important branch of civic improvement was being neglected, and he said that sewer extension was just as essential for the welfare of the community, and more so from a sanitary viewpoint than water and highway department improvements are.

A communication from John J. Forbes stating that imperfect wiring had been done in one of the local public buildings and that he was being credited with the work. He wanted the mistake rectified. It was the impression of the commissioners that Mr. Forbes was alluding to the recent wiring at the pumping station but the communication was sent back to him with a request that he designate the exact work he referred to.

A communication from Arthur V. Jones notified the board that water was leaking presumably from the water main into the cellar of the McLaughlin and Dennison drug store, and he wanted to know if the board intended to recognize the present complaint, and others that had been filed before. Commissioner Jones was authorized to make such investigation as may be necessary to determine if water comes from a defective water main.

J. R. Shields of School street attended the meeting and asked that a maple tree which shaded his greenhouses be taken down. Commissioner Kelley said that the tree was a live one and he wanted the board to see it before anything was done. It was decided that all the members would visit the premises.

A petition signed by about twenty residents of Green street and vicinity asking that a concrete sidewalk be constructed on Green street from Garfield avenue to Vernon street was referred to Commissioner Kennedy. The same petitioners asked that the sewer which now terminates at Garfield avenue be continued to Vernon street, and that a U. S. mail box that was taken down a year ago be replaced. The sewer application was referred to Commissioner Wallace, and the question of a new mail box was ordered sent to Postmaster Wyer.

Silencing Watch Ticks.

Some sick people want the time handy but cannot stand the ticking of a watch. If this is the case, place the watch beneath an ordinary drinking glass. The patient can see the time but the ticking will be silenced by the glass.

To the cowboys this athletic panoply was vastly impressive. With huge satisfaction they noticed the sleeveless shirt, the loose running trunks, and, above all, the generous display of medals. With a wild yell of delight they broke out upon the trail of their champion, only to have Glass thrust his corpulent body in their path. With an upflung arm he stemmed the tide.

"It's no use, boys," he cried, he's a mile away!"

CHAPTER VI.

THIS doesn't look much like our storehouse, does it?" Jean paused in her task, and, seating herself upon the summit of a step-ladder, scrutinized with satisfaction the transformation wrought by a myriad of college flags, sofa cushions, colored shawls, and bunting.

Roberta Keap dropped her hammer with an exclamation of pain.

"Ouch!" she cried, "I've hurt my thumb. I can't hit where I look when people are talking."

"Why don't you pin them up?" queried Miss Blake sweetly. "A hammer is so dangerous."

Mrs. Keap mumbled something, but her enunciation was indistinct, owing to the fact that her thumb was in her mouth. Helen finished tying a bow of ribbon upon the leg of a stool, patted it into proper form, then said:

"It looks cheerful."

"And restful," added Jean.

"Oh dear!" Jean descended from her precarious position and admitted, "I'm tired out."

All that morning the three had labored, busily transforming the storeroom into training-quarters for Speed, who had declared that such things were not only customary but necessary. To be sure, it adjoined the bunkroom, where the cowboys slept, and there were no gymnastic appliances to give it character, but it was the only spaee available, and what it lacked in horizontal bars, dumb-bells, and Indian clubs it more than compensated for by a cosey-corner, a window-seat, stand! I am going to be so desperately disappointed that I'll have to choose between suicide and marriage. The way I feel now, I think I'll choose marriage. But you must help."

"Leave it to me, Bo!"

From inside the house came the strains of Dearie, sung in a sympathetic tenor, and upon the conclusion Berkeley Fresno's voice inquiring:

"Miss Blake, did I ever tell you about the time I sang Dearie to the mayor's daughter in Walla Walla?"

Miss Blake appeared on the gallery with her musical admirer at her elbow.

"Yes," said she, sweetly. "You told me all about the mayor's daughter a week ago." Then spying Speed and his companion, she exclaimed: "Mr. Fresno has a fine voice, hasn't he? He sings with the Standard Glee Club."

"Indeed."

"Sure!" The Native Son of the Golden West shook up a hammock-cushion for the girl. "Tenor!" said he, sententiously.

"Say no more," Speed remarked; "it's all right with us!"

Fresno looked up.

"What's wrong with my singing?"

"Oh, I've just told the girls that you're going to run that foot race," Helen interposed, hurriedly, at which Fresno exploded.

"What's wrong with my running?" inquired Speed.

"I can beat you!"

Larry Glass nudged his employer openly, and seemed on the verge of hysteria. "Let him go," said he. "Let him go; he's funny."

Speed addressed Helen, with a magnanimous smile:

"Suppose we allow Frez to sing this foot race? We'll pull it off in the treble cleff."

"Oh, I mean it!" maintained the tenor, stubbornly. "I don't want to run Skinner, the cook, but I'll run you to see who does meet him."

Speed shrugged his shoulders indulgently.

"I'm afraid you're a little overweight."

"I'll train down."

"Perhaps if you wait until I beat this cook, I'll take you on."

Glass broke out, in husky indignation: "Sure! Get a rep, Cull, get a rep!" Then to his employer: "Come on, Wally, you've got to warm up." He mounted the steps heavily with his protege.

When they had gone, Miss Blake clapped her hands.

"I'm so excited!" she exclaimed. "You see, it's all my doings! Oh, how I adore athletes!"

"Most young girls do," Fresno smiled, sourly. "My taste runs more to music." After a moment's meditation, he observed: "Speed doesn't look like a sprinter to me. I—I'll wager he cant' do a hundred yards in fifteen-two."

"'Fifteen-two' is cribbage," said Miss Blake.

"Fifteen and two-fifths seconds is what I mean."

"Is that fast?"

Fresno smiled, indulgently this time. "Jean's friend Covington can go the distance in nine and four-fifths seconds. He's a real sprinter. I think this fellow is a joke."

"Indeed he is not! If Mr. Covington can run as fast as that, Mr. Speed can run faster. He told me so."

"Oh!" Fresno looked at her curiously. "The world's record is nine and three-fifths; that's the limit of human endurance."

"I hope he doesn't injure himself," breathed the girl, and the tenor wandered away, disgusted beyond measure. When he was out of hearing he remarked, aloud:

"I'll bet he runs so slow we'll have to wind a stop-watch on him. Anyhow, I think I'll find out something more about this race."

Once in his room, Mr. J. Wallingford Speed made a search for writing materials, while Larry Glass overhauled a trunk filled with athletic clothing of various descriptions. There were running-suits, rowing-suits, baseball and football suits, sweaters, jerseys, and bath robes—all of which were new and unstained. At the bottom Glass discovered a box full of bronze and near-gold emblems.

"Here's your medals," said he.

"Good! I'll wear them."

"Nix! You can't do that. Those gals will get wise." He selected one, and read on the reverse side, "Clerk of the course;" another was engraved "Starter." All were official badges of some sort or other. "You always were strong on the 'Reception Committee' stuff. There's six of them," said he.

Speed pointed to the bureau.

"Try a nail-file. See if you can't scratch off the lettering. How's this?" He read what he had written for the wire. "'Culver Covington, and so forth. Come quick. First train. Native Son making love to Jean.—Wally.' Ten words, and it tells the whole story. I can hardly explain why I want him, can I? He expects to stop off in Omaha for a day or two, but he'll be under way in an hour after he gets this. I hate to spoil his little visit, but he can take that in on his way home. Now I'll ring for somebody, and have this taken over to the station by the first wagon."

"Say, you better scratch this Fresno," said Larry.

"Why?"

"He's hep to you."

"Nonsense!"

Glass looked up at a sound, to discover Mariedetta, the Mexican maid, who had come in answer to Speed's call.

"In the doorway!" the trainer said, under his breath. "Pipe the Cuban Queen!"

"You call?" inquired Mariedetta of the younger man.

"Yes, I want this telegram to go to the depot as soon as possible."

and many cushions. Speed had expressed his delight with the idea, and agreed to wait for a glimpse of it.

Of all the denizens of the Flying Heart but two failed to enter fully into the spirit of the thing. Berkeley Fresno looked on with a cynicism which he was too wise to display before Miss Blake. Seeing the lady of his dreams monopolized by a rival, however, inspired him to sundry activities, and he spent much of his time among the cowboys, whom he found profitable to the point of mystery.

Mrs. Keap, the youthful chaperon, seemed likewise mastered by some private trouble, and puzzled her companions vaguely. Helen reported that she did not sleep, and once Jean found her crying softly. She seemed, moreover, to be apprehensive, in a tremulous, reasonless way; but when with friendly sympathy they brought the subject up, she dismissed it. In spite of secret tears, she had lent willing hands to the decoration of the gymnasium, and now nursed her swollen thumb with surprising good nature.

"Shall we let them in?" she inquired. "We have done all we can."

"Yes; we have finished."

In a flutter of anticipation Jean and Helen put the final touches to their task, while Mrs. Keap stepped to the door and called Speed.

He came at once, followed by Larry Glass, who, upon grasping the scheme of decoration, smote his brow and balanced dizzily upon his heels. Speed was lost in admiration.

It's wonderful!" ejaculated the young athlete. "Those college flags give it just the right touch. And see the cosey-corner!"

Glass regained his voice sufficiently to murmur, sarcastically, "Say, ain't this a swell-looking drum?"

Berkeley Frecno, drawn by the irresistible magnetism of Miss Blake's presence, wandered in and ran his eyes over the room.

"Why all the colors?" asked he.

"You can sing best where there is a piano. I can train best under the shadow of college emblems. I am a temperamental athlete."

"You'll be a dead athlete if you don't beat this cook." The Californian was angry.

"Indeed!" exclaimed his rival, airily.

"That's what I remarked. Did they tell you what happened to Humpy Joe, your predecessor?"

"It must have been an accident, judging from his name." At which Miss Blake tittered. She was growing to enjoy these passages at arms; they thrilled her vaguely.

"The only accident connected with the affair was that Still Bill and Willie didn't have their guns."

Glass started nervously. "Did these rummies want to shoot him?" he inquired.

"Certainly," said Fresno. "He lost a foot-race."

In spite of his assurance, J. Wallingford Speed felt a tremor of anxiety, but he laughed it off, saying:

"One would think a foot-race in this country was a pearl necklace."

"These cowboys ain't good losers, eh?" queried Glass.

"It's win or die out here."

During the ensuing pause Mrs. Keap took occasion to call Speed aside. "I have something to contribute to the training-quarters if you will help me bring it out," said she.

The young man bowed. "Most gladly."

"We'll be back in a little while," the chaperon announced to the others, and a moment later, when she and Speed had reached the veranda of the house, she paused.

"I—I want to speak to you," she began, hesitatingly. "It was just an excuse."

Wally looked at her with concern, for it was plain that she was deeply troubled.

"What is it?"

"I have been trying to get a word alone with you ever since I heard about this foot-race." The young man chilled with apprehension as Mrs. Keap turned her dark eyes upon him searchingly. "Why do you want to run?"

"To win back the cowboys' treasure. My heart is touched," he declared, boldly. Mrs. Keap smiled.

"I believe the latter, but are you sure you can win?"

"Abso-blooming-lutely."

"I didn't know you were a sprinter."

Speed shrugged his shoulders.

"Have you had experience?"

"Oceans of it!"

Mrs. Keap mused for a moment. "Tell me," said she, finally, "at what inter-collegiate game did you run last?"

"I didn't run last; I ran first." It was impossible to resent the boy's smile.

"Then at what game did you last run? I hope I'm not too curious?"

"Oh no, not at all!" Speed stammered.

"Or, if it is easier, at what college games did you first run?" Mrs. Keap was laughing openly now.

"Why the clear, ringing, rippling laughter?" asked the young man, to cover his confusion.

"Because I think it is very funny."

"Oh, you do!" Speed took refuge behind an atttitude of unbending dignity, but the young widow would have none of it.

"I know all about you," said she. "You are a very wonderful person, of course; you are a delightful fellow at a house-party, and a most suitable individual generally, but you are not an athlete, in spite of those beautiful clothes in your trunk."

"Who told you?"

"Culver Covington."

"I didn't know you two were acquainted."

Mrs. Keap flushed. "He told me all about you long ago. You wear all the athletic clothes, you know all the talk, you have tried to make the team a dozen times, but you are not even a substitute. You are merely the Varsity cheer-leader. Culver calls you 'the head-yeller.'"

"Columbus has discovered our continent!" said Speed. "You are a very wise chaperon, and you must have a corking memory for names, but even a head-yeller is better than a glee-club quarter-back." He nodded toward the bunk-house, whence they had come. "You haven't told anybody?"

"Not yet."

"'Yet,'" he quoted. "The futurity implied in that word disturbs me. Suppose you and I keep it for a little secret? Secrets are very delightful at house-parties."

"Don't you consider your action deceitful?"

"Not at all. My motto is 'We strive to please.'"

'RUSTY MUGS" SPLIT EVEN WITH THE "SHINY DIPPERS"

Two teams of youthful bowlers from the South End met on Flanders' alleys last evening and each strove to "trim up" the other to the best of its ability. The first string went to the "Shiny Dippers" by a handy margin of 21 pins, they rolling for a total of 365. The "Rusty Mugs" came back in the next string and buried their opponents by the score of 428 to 371. The rubber of the series was rolled with the excitement running high and the rivalry between the two teams strung to the highest pitch. When the smoke of battle cleared away, the "Shiny Dippers" were the conquerors by 20 pins, piling up the score of 398 for a string total. They claimed the best of the argument, but the big total of the previous string gave them the grand total 1150 to 1134. Mahon of the "Rusty Mugs" was high man for the evening with 106 and 266. Sales, $250,000

Tolls, $36

THIS is the most remarkable incident of its kind that we have heard of in the course of a demonstration of selling by telephone—sales totalling $250,000 at an expenditure of $36 for telephone tolls.

By permission we are enabled to say that the selling was done by MR. GEORGE R. KELLY of George R. Kelly & Co. of 104 Hanover St., Boston, New England selling agents of the American Window Glass Company of Pittsburgh.

One of our salesmen called upon Mr. Kelley to demonstrate our new toll service selling plans, only to find that already he was employing advanced methods along this line. Said he:

"We anticipated a rise in the price of window glass around January 1, and wanted to give our customers the benefit of current quotations.

"There wasn't time to make personal visits to the trade, letters wouldn't be satisfactory, so we made our calls by telephone.

"During the first ten days in December we made toll calls to widely separated points in New England, at a cost of about $36, and booked orders aggregating $250,000."

If any New England house can show greater results from selling by telephone, we would be glad to learn of them.

Business men interested in progressive ideas for the extension of trade are invited to send for our booklet entitled "Modern Methods of Money-Making," and for samples of our "Telephone Passes."

CLERK H. C. HALL RESIGNS POSITION

Notified Health Board Yesterday that He Wanted to be Relieved by March 31

With Dr. Carroll absent, Chairman Stewart and Mr. Corry transacted the business of the health board at the regular meeting held yesterday afternoon. There was little important business considered, the only communication of any consequence being a notification from clerk Major Henry C. Hall of his resignation from public office, the resignation to take effect on March 31. The letter of resignation follows:—

To the Board of Health of the City of Woburn.

Gentlemen:

I hereby resign the office of clerk of your board, and I ask to be relieved from further duties pertaining to that office on or before the 31st of March.

Henry C. Hall,
Clerk.

The resignation of Clerk Hall was apparently a surprise and there was no action taken. Major Hall said this morning that owing to the fact that his successor must be named under the civil service laws, he filed his resignation early in order to give the board time in which to apply for the establishment of an eligible list. Other than saying he was tired of his duties, and did not want to continue them he would not give for publication any reason for his withdrawal from a position which he has for six years filled to the satisfaction of the entire community.

A number of communications were read and placed on file, among them being one from Patrick J. McDonough, stating, that a recent change in the records of a previous meeting relating to his application for information about expenses incurred by Milk Inspector Edward P. Kelley was incorrect and that the original record was the true record. He renewed his application for the privilege to inspect the itemized account of Dr. Kelley and also to be shown a book presumed to be kept by the Inspector, in which matters of public importance are supposed to be recorded.

A communication from the Mass. Conference on Tuberculosis informing the board that the fifth conference of that association will be held in Library hall, Holyoke

ANNUAL DRAMATIC ENTERTAINMENT

Given under the Auspices of the S. of V. Auxiliary and Club

S. of V. hall was crowded with an interested and appreciative audience last evening on the occasion of the annual dramatic under the auspices of Charles Bowers Winn Camp, S. of V., Auxiliary and club, and the organizations fully sustained their well-earned reputation for the excellence of their entertainment and the ability of those taking part as real stars in the amateur firmament.

The program last evening included two one-act farcial comedies "Rubber Boots" and "That Rascal Pat," and they were both presented in a most creditable manner, for which the committee in charge as well as the individual members of the casts are entitled to much credit.

The plays are both full of stirring incidents and humorous situations, which were cleverly and effectively interpreted. The audience was kept on the qui vive all the time and frequent bursts of applause greeted the clever artists at every turn.

The play "Rubber Boots" was a short skit, the cast including three young ladies and a tramp. The adventures of the young ladies with their unwelcome, but genial visitor in the absence of their parents was amusing and ludicrous, but came to a happy ending.

George Wyer as the tramp was the perfection of pantomine acting, as he said nothing in his whole appearance on the stage. His antics were clever and of a high grade of silent comedy. The young ladies' work was of equally high order.

The plot of the play "That Rascal Pat" hinged upon the good-natured stupidity of "Pat McNoggerty" who tried to serve two masters at one and the same time, and in his dilemma complicated matters for both, so that a duel is imminent, with two broken hearts in prospect. The final catastrophe was averted, of course. Cupid got busy, the lovers were made happy, the crusty uncle gave his blessing and "That Rascal Pat" wore a halo.

Alfred Elson was superb, as "Pat" and Daniel Towse and Homer Gates gave as good a rendering for amateurs as has ever been seen in this locality, the former of a pompous old man, and the latter of the ardent but poor lover. Mrs. Cora Gates as the heroine and Mrs. Ida Dexter, as the maid, certainly came in for their share of the praise and compliments for their excellent work.

The cast was as follows:—

"That Rascal Pat"

Pat McNoggerty, a handy servant
Alfred Elson
Major Puffjacket, on half pay
Daniel Towse
Charles Livingstone, poor but ambitious
Homer Gates
Laura, niece to Puffjacket and in love with Charles
Mrs. Cora Gates
Nancy, her maid, and in love with Pat
Mrs. Ida Dexter

"Rubber Boots"

Pauline — Mrs. Cora Gates
Lou — Sadie Page
Sophie — Bessie Boutwell
A tramp, for and by whom there is nothing to be said.
George Wyer

After the plays, dancing was enjoyed to the music of Shinquin's orchestra, and dainties were exposed for sale.

"Cobblers" who advertise to do work by modern machinery have failed to accept my challenge and thereby make some "easy money." In my challenge I specified "edge trimming," the easiest part of shoe repairing. I had reason to think that even this they could not do. Expert opinion is united on the Goodyear Welt system of sewing shoes. No hand sewing has ever equalled it.

I changed my firm name to the Woburn Shoe Repairing company simply to give my brother a chance to live. He fails to appreciate this fact. When a new brother comes to Woburn and endeavors to make a living, he tries to block his progress. I did pay my first brother's passage from Europe and stood good for his credit when he started in business.

My brother worried because I gave assistance to my second brother the same as I did to him. He knows the new arrival is a good workman and can get the business.

I never was afraid of competition, that is why I help them all.

Today is the last day to accept the challenge. I am really sorry that I had no takers, as some of them need the money and the experience

Perfumes for Easter

There is no other time in the year when perfumes are so generally used as at Easter. The indications are there will be more than ever used this year, and for this reason we have stocked our show cases with some of the most delicate perfume odors obtainable. We particularly recommend the

VIOLET DULC LINE

This is practically a brand new line of perfumes, powder and creams, and without doubt these goods are almost perfection. Having eliminated the bad points and improved on the good points of other lines you can readily understand why this line is so much superior.

A combination set in a pretty box comprising of either perfume, toilet water, soap or sachet, in any assortment to please, makes a very acceptable Easter gift.

Of course we carry many other lines like Hudnuts, Roger & Gallet, Pivers, etc.

Try an ounce of Violet Dulc Extract at 50c. and you will be a regular customer.

WOBURN'S PLAN SATISFACTORY

The town of Reading has been somewhat torn up over the matter of school administration. For several years in that town the offices of Superintendent of Public schools, Secretary of the school committee, and Principal of the high school have been held by one person, Harry T. Watkins. Mr. Theo. P. Berle, a former resident of Woburn, but now of Reading, threw a bomb into Reading's town meeting, this week by moving that the offices be separated, alleging that under the present plan the school had suffered, and the tax payer had been unnecessarily burdened for the results obtained, inasmuch as in Woburn for a much smaller per pupil expenditure, much more satisfactory results are secured. The matter was warmly discussed but resulted in the defeat of Mr. Berle's motion.

Incidental to the debate, reference was made by Mr. Berle to the excellence of Woburn schools under the separate method. And that leads the JOURNAL to say, that whatever may be the condition in Reading, the people of Woburn are irrevocably committed to the method now employed. The principal of the high school has enough for any one man to do to manage the school. Superintendent Clapp is not an idle man by any means. The working hours of every day in the week are all too few for the performance of his duties.

The city of Woburn does not believe that one man can fill both positions without neglecting one or the other. That, however, is a matter for each locality to settle for itself.

o-o-o

It may interest those who are faced with the high cost of living—and who is not?—to know that a similar condition obtained in Woburn and elsewhere fifty-five years ago. In the JOURNAL of October 23, 1858, is this paragraph:—"It has been thought that people are degenerating because they don't live so long as in the days of Methuselah. But the fact is, provisions are so high that nobody can afford to live long at the current prices."

o-o-o

In the voluntary retirement of Major Henry C. Hall from the office of Clerk of the Board of Health, the city will lose the services of a model official, who will be missed. Major Hall's official life has been characterized by strict attention to duty, intelligent interpretation of the health laws, and courteous treatment of all with whom he came in contact.

BUSY DAY FOR FIRE DEPARTMENT

Grass and Brush Fires Cause Much Excitement but little Damage

The fire department was kept busy today, a series of grass and brush fires necessitating three alarm while hose one responded to a still alarm at 8.45 o'clock this morning for a brush fire at the home of Charles Cummings on Cambridge street.

Shortly after ten o'clock box 37 sounded for a brush fire on Bedford street, at the residence of Charles Quigley, blacksmith. There was no damage.

At 11.26 o'clock the department was called to Cambridge street again, this time for a grass fire covering several acres on the property of Mrs. John Cummings. For a time some of the buildings on the premises were threatened, and Alderman Marshall who owns adjoining property suffered the greatest loss. The coverings on a number of his spinach beds were burned, and the spinach destroyed.

The last alarm came at 1 o'clock for a grass fire at the corner of Salem and Bow streets, on property recently purchased by John Maloney. The fire spread with such rapidity that a barn was ablaze before the department arrived. There was little damage the barn fire being extinguished before it had gained much headway.

WALTER E. BURKE BURIED TODAY

Impressive Ceremonies at St. Charles Church and at Grave

An impressive tribute was paid this morning to the memory of Walter E. Burke, who died Sunday afternoon at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Burke, 267 Main street. A high mass of requiem was sung in St. Charles church, and the body was borne from the late home of the deceased which is almost directly opposite the church, by eight of his youthful associates from the Knights of the Sacred Heart, of which organization he was a highly esteemed officer. The route of the funeral party was flanked by members of his command, Company C, who stood with uncovered heads and later occupied the seats near the chancel in the church.

The officiating clergyman at the mass was Rev. Walter E. Fegan The service itself was in the form prescribed for military funerals, and incidental music was the Gregorian chant, Miss Alice O'Brien organist. Miss Nellie O'Brien sang "Pie Jesu."

The popularity of young Mr. Burke and the widespread sympathy with the bereaved family found expression in the wealth of floral tributes and the large attendance of sorrowing friends.

At the conclusion of mass the funeral procession formed with Company C, of the Knights of the Sacred Heart under command of Lieutenant Joseph Schiaffino acting as escort.

Marching beside the hearse were eight active pall bearers chosen from among the officers of the battalion the personnel comprising Captain Leon Fay, Captain Charles Lyons, Lieutenant Albert Ring, Lieutenant Harold Tracy, Lieutenant Martin Kelley, Lieutenant John Joyce, Lieutenant Patrick McLaughlin and Lieutenant Geo. Finn.

Immediately behind the hearse were Thomas Sheerin, trumpeter, and Color Sergeant James McLaughlin who bore the sword of the deceased captain.

The spectacle of the young cadets in full uniform paying their last tribute of respect to the memory of their dead comrade was pathetic, and the progress through the streets was watched with much interest and silent sympathy. Burial was in Calvary cemetery where prayers were offered. "Taps" was sounded by trumpeter Sheerin.

The military details of the service were in charge of Lieutenant Daniel J. Canty assisted by his staff, Adjutant John Fox, and Quartermaster John Doherty.

Delegations were present from Div. 3 A.O.H. Royal Arcanum of Boston, and Woburn high school class '12.

The death of this young man who had just attained his majority is especially sad because of the ability he displayed in all his undertakings in social, fraternal or business life and the promise which he gave of future usefulness.

TRYING OUT THE BATTERIES

Baseball practice was held in the Armory yesterday afternoon. Captain George Weafer had his battery candidates under his direction, instructing and giving counsel to the new stringers. Several of last year's team have reported for practice and about six batteries are in the formation. The promising candidates are Lawson, Kenney, Sherburne, J. Wall, E. Wall, Mulrenan, Walsh, and O'Rourke.

Practice will be held in the Armory every afternoon until the weather permits the men to get out in the open, where the greater liberty and fresh air will enable them to get into proper form and condition. If the matter of the coach is soon brought around successfully, there is every reason why the fans who have rooted for the High school team in past years, will have the chance to cheer for a winning team before the season ends.

HAMMOND CLASS HELD MEETING

The members of the Hammond class of the Baptist church met Monday evening at the home of Frank B. Gray, 65 Pleasant street, for the regular monthly social. Twelve members were present, Mr. Jonas P. During the evening a letter of sympathy and Easter greeting from the class was prepared to be sent to Mr. J. B. Gray now absent in California for the recovery of his health. After doing justice to inviting refreshments the class took up the question regarding the annual banquet. A committee was appointed consisting of Messrs. SAINT PATRICK, THE APOSTLE OF IRELAND

According to the Catholic Encyclopedia Saint Patrick was born at Kilpatrick, near Dumbarton, in Scotland, in the year 387, and died at Saul, Downpatrick, Ireland, March 17, 493. This week, therefore, marks the 1420th anniversary of his death. His father, Calpurnius, was a landed proprietor and decurion. His mother's name was Conchessa. At the age of sixteen Patrick was carried into captivity by a band of Irish marauders, and for six years was the slave of an Irish chieftain of County Antrim. During this time he served as his master's shepherd. He relates in his "Confessio" that during his captivity while tending the flocks he prayed many times in the day. While in bondage he became fluent in the Irish tongue, and from his master, who was a druidical high priest, he learned the mysteries of Druidism, from which he was destined later to free the Irish race.

After six years of slavery he succeeded in making his escape to Britain, whence he went to the monastery of St. Martin at Tours, and later to the sanctuary of Lerins. He subsequently spent a number of years at Auxerre, where he was under the guidance of St. Germain.

It was about 433 that Patrick landed in Ireland upon his mission to convert that country to Christianity. The remainder of a long life was devoted to this purpose. Many curious incidents in his fight against Druidism are recounted, and legends of his deeds still linger around many localities. It is said that upon his death his remains were wrapped in a shroud woven by the hand of St. Brigid.

More detailed information regarding the life of St. Patrick may be found at the library. Translations of his "Hymn before Tara," and his hymn called "The Breastplate of Saint Patrick" are also available.

The library contains a large number of books by Irish authors, as well as works about Ireland and the Irish.

DAVID LIVINGSTONE, EXPLORER AND MISSIONARY

One hundred years ago, on March 19, 1813, was born, also in Scotland, another great missionary, David Livingstone, of whom it has been said that he put another continent upon the map. This week London is celebrating his centenary, and well it may, for he gave to England an empire in Africa.

Over half of Livingstone's life of sixty years was spent in the wilds of Africa, preaching the gospel, fighting the slave trader, and exploring and mapping the unknown continent. On his return to London in 1856 he had already travelled 29,000 miles in Africa. The story of these travels is told in his "Missionary Travels and Researches in South Africa."

He made a second and a third journey of exploration, and during the last entirely disappeared from contact with the civilized world. This was the occasion of Henry M. Stanley's famous expedition in search of the intrepid explorer. Any one who enjoys a well-written story of strange scenes, peril, and adventure should read Stanley's story of his search, entitled, "How I found Livingstone."

Livingstone never returned to England from his last trip, but, worn out by hardship, privation, and disease, died in his little African hut while on his knees engaged in prayer.

The intensely interesting story of his devoted and adventurous life has been related by different writers.

Accounts by Blaikie, Chambliss, Horne, and Hughes may be found in the library. An interesting short narrative is included in the "Boys' Book of Explorers."

TEACHERS HIRED FOR LIFE

Swiss Pedagogues Receive Small Pay, but Are Persons of Consequence, Says School Head.

Thurgau.—"Nearly 90 per cent of the teachers in Switzerland are men," says W. K. Tate, supervisor of rural schools in South Carolina. Mr. Tate has just returned from a three months' investigation in Switzerland under the auspices of the national bureau of education.

"Five hundred dollars is considered a good salary for a teacher. After a life-time of service he may go as high $800. Living is cheaper there than here, however, and in addition to his salary he is given a dwelling, a certain amount of garden land and wood for fuel. His dwelling is generally in the same building with the school. His position is of considerable local importance. Aside from his duties in the schoolroom, he is often secretary of the local creamery association, leader of the village band, organist in the church and general intellectual guide for the community.

"When a teacher is engaged it is for life or a long term of years. He settles down with the people whose children he teaches, and expects to make that particular job his life work. Changes are rare. Twelve new teachers in one year in a system of 240 was considered very unusual. The record for continued service in the same village is held by a teacher in Thurgau, who has occupied the same position for sixty-five years. One teacher that I visited has held his position for twenty-four years, and his father held the same position for thirty-five years.

"One of the most attractive features of the Swiss schools is the cordial personal relation that exists between teacher and pupil. There is nothing of the military in the discipline of the school; no lining up; no marching to classes. When the children go to the classrooms they shake hands with the teacher, greeting him as if they had not seen him for a long time and are really glad to see him. The whole relation is one of charming naturalness and kindliness on both sides."

COMING TO THE BOSTON THEATRE

MACLYN ARBUCKLE

IN

"THE ROUND-UP"

SPECIAL PRICES

The attraction at the Boston Theatre beginning Easter Monday, March 24, will be the return of Maclyn Arbuckle in Klaw & Erlanger's massive production, "The Round-Up." The theatrical annals of Boston do not record such a towering success as "The Round-Up." It is the Great American Play of the hour. Every character and scene in the piece breathes the life of the great Southwest. The enthusiastic interest displayed by every audience is the most flattering endorsement this really great production can receive. The battle scene in the third act is a stupendous stage effect, the like of which has never been seen before. The appearance of twenty mounted Indians riding along a ledge of rock far above the stage level is a thrill indeed, but it is far surpassed in the great incident at the end of the third act, when "Slim" Hoover, the sheriff, and a troop of cavalrymen are shown in an actual hand-to-hand fight with a band of Apache Indian marauders escaped from their reservation. There have been great thrills presented on the Boston stage in years past, but nothing that touches this in point of realism has ever been seen in any theatre in the world. In the last act a group of cowboys are shown riding bucking broncos. This, too, is a novelty never before seen in what is termed an indoor attraction.

The magnitude of this production is such that it can only be played in a few cities and in the largest theatres. Its performances at the Boston are the only opportunities those living within a reasonable journey of Boston will have of seeing this tremendous dramatic sensation. So great is the demand for seats from those living at a distance from Boston that a special bureau has been established for the expeditious handling of mail orders, which when sent with cash or money order and accompanied by addressed, stamped envelope, receive immediate attention. Regular matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

Special Prices will prevail during "The Round-Up" engagement—25c, 50c, 75c and $1.00. No seat over $1.00. Seat Sale Tuesday, March 18; Mail Orders Now.

"Think of Helen."

"That's it; I can't think of anything else! She's mad about athletics, and I had to do something to stand off this weight-lifting tenor."

"Is it any wonder a woman distrusts every man she meets?" mused the chaperon. "Helen might forgive you, I couldn't."

"Oh, it's not that bad. I know what I'm doing."

"You will cause these cowboys to lose a lot more money."

"Not at all. When Culver arrives—"

"Oh, that is what I want to talk over with you," Mrs. Keap broke in, nervously.

"Then it isn't about the foot-race? You are not angry?" Speed brightened amazingly.

"I'm not exactly angry; I'm surprised and grieved. Of course, I can't forgive deceit—I dare say I am more particular than most people."

"But you won't tell?" Mrs. Keap indicated in some subtle manner that she was not above making terms, whereupon her companion declared warmly: "I'm yours for life! Ask me for my watch, my right eye, anything! I'll give it to you!"

"I assure you I sha'n't ask anything so important as that, but I shall ask a favor."

"Name it and it is yours!" Speed wrung the hand she offered.

"And perhaps I can do more than keep silent—although I don't see what good it will do. Perhaps I can help your suit."

"Gracious lady, all I ask is that you thrust out your foot and trip up Berkeley Fresno whenever he starts toward her. Put him out of the play, and I shall be the happiest man in the world."

"Agreed."

"Now, in what way can I serve you?"

Mrs. Keap became embarrassed, while the same shadowy trouble that had been observed of late settled upon her.

"I simply hate to ask it," she said, "but I suppose I must. There seems to be no other way out of it." Turning to him suddenly, she said, in a low, intense voice: "I—I'm in trouble, Mr. Speed, such dreadful trouble!"

"Oh, I'm so sorry!" he answered her, with genuine solicitude. "You needn't have made any conditions. I would have done anything I could for you."

"That's very kind, for I don't like our air of conspiracy, but"—Mrs. Keap was wringing her slender hands—"I just can't tell the girls. You—you can help me."

Speed allowed her time to grow calm, when she continued:

"I—I am engaged to be married."

"Felicitations!"

"Not at all," said the young widow, wretchedly. "That is the awful part of it. I am engaged to two men!" She turned her brown eyes full upon him; they were strained and tragic.

Speed felt himself impelled to laugh immoderately, but instead he observed, in a tone to relieve her anxiety:

"Nothing unusual in that; it has been done before. Even I have been prodigal with my affections. What can I do to relieve the congestion?"

"Please don't make light of it. It means so much to me. I—I'm in love with Jack Chapin."

"With Jack!"

"Yes. When I came here I thought I cared for somebody else. Why, I wanted to come here just because I knew that—that somebody else had been invited too, and we could be together."

"And he couldn't come—"

"Wait! And then, when I got here, I met Jack Chapin. That was less than a week ago, and yet in that short time I have learned that he is the only man I can ever love—the one man in all the world."

"And you can't accept because you have a previous engagement. I see! Jove! It's quite dramatic. But I don't see why you are so excited? If the other chap isn't coming—"

"But he is! That is what makes it so dreadful! If those two men should meet"—Mrs. Keap buried her face in her hands and shuddered—"there would be a tragedy, they are both so frightfully jealous." She began to tremble, and Speed laid a comforting hand upon her shoulder.

"I think you must be exciting yourself unduly," said he. "Jean's other friends didn't come. There's nobody due now but Culver Cov—"

"That's who it is!" Roberta raised her pallid face as the young man fell back.

"Culver! Great Scott! Why, he's engaged—"

"What!"

"Nothing! I—I—" Speed paused, at an utter loss for words.

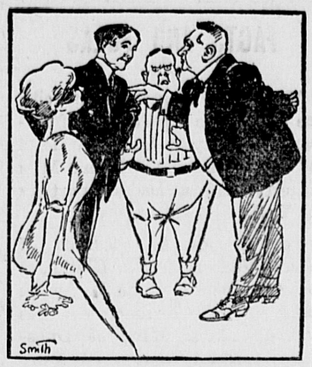

"You see, he'll discover the truth."

"Does he know you are here?"

"No. I intended to surprise him. I was jealous. I couldn't bear to think of his being here with other girls—men are so deceitful! That's why I consented to act as chaperon to Helen. And now to think that I should have met my fate in Jack Chapin!"

"I see. You want me to break the news to Culver."

"No! no!" Mrs. Keap was aghast. "If he even suspected the truth he'd

"You'll Be a Dead Athlete if You Don't Beat This Cook."

become a raging lion. Oh, I've been quite distracted ever since Jack left!"

"Well, what am I to do? You must have some part laid out for me?"

"I have. A desperate situation demands a desperate remedy. I've lost all conscience. That's why I agreed to protect you if you'd protect me."

"Go ahead."

"Culver is your friend."

"We're closer than a chord in G."

"Then you must wire him—"

"I have—"

"—Not to come."

"What!" J. Wallingford Speed started as if a wasp had stung him.

"You must wire him at once not to come. I don't care what excuse you give, but stop him. Stop him!"

Speed reached for a pillar; he felt that the porch was spinning slowly beneath his feet.

"Oh, see here, now! I can't do that!"

"You promised!" cried Mrs. Keap fiercely. "I have tried to think of something to tell him, but I'm too frightened."

"Yes, but—but I—want him here—for this foot-race." Wally swallowed bravely.

"Foot-race!" stormed the widow, indignantly. "Would you allow an insignificant thing like a foot-race to wreck a human life? Two human lives! Three?"

"Can't you—wire him?"

Mrs. Keap stamped her foot. "If he dreamed I was here he would hire a special train. No! It must come from you. You are his best friend."

"What can I say?" demanded the bewildered Speed, unhappily.

"I don't care what you say, I don't care what you do—only do something, and do it quickly before he has time to leave Chicago." Then sensing the hesitation in her companion's face: "Or perhaps you prefer to have Helen know the deceit you have practiced upon her? And I fancy these cowboys would resent the joke, don't you? What do you think would happen if they discovered their champion to be merely a cheer-leader with a trunkful of new clothes, who can't do a single out-door sport—not one?"

"Wait!" Speed mopped his brow with a red-and-blue silk handkerchief. "I'll do my best."

"Then I shall do my part." And Mrs. Keap, who could not bear deception, turned and went indoors while J. Wallingford Speed, a prey to sundry misgivings, stumbled down the steps, his head in a whirl.

CHAPTER VII.

BERKELEY FRESNO was devoting himself to Miss Blake.

"What do you think of our decorations?" she inquired.

"They are more or less athletic," he declared, "Was it Mr. Speed's idea?"

"Yes. He wanted training quarters."

"It's a joke, isn't it?"

"I don't think so. Mr. Fresno, why do you dislike Mr. Speed?"

Fresno bent a warm glance upon the questioner. "Don't you know?"

Helen shook her head with bland innocence. "Then you do dislike him?"

"No, indeed! I like him—he makes me laugh." Helen bridled loyally. "Did you see those medals he wore yesterday?" the young man queried.

"Of course, and I thought them beautiful."

"How were they inscribed? He wouldn't let me examine them."

"Naturally. If I had trophies like that I would guard them too."

Fresno nodded musingly. "I gave mine away."

"Oh, are you an athlete?"

"No, but I timed a foot-race once. They gave me a beautiful nearly-bronze emblem so that I could get into the infield."

"And did you win?"

"No! no! I didn't run! Don't you understand? I was an official." Fresno was vexed at the girl's lack of perception. "I'm not an athlete, Miss Blake. I'm just an ordinary sort of chap." He led her to a seat, while Jean enlisted the aid of Larry Glass and completed the finishing touches to the decorations. "Athletics don't do a fellow any good after he leaves college. I'm going into business this fall. Have you ever been to California?" Miss Blake admitted that she had never been so far, and Fresno launched himself upon a glowing description of his native state; but before he could shape the conversation to a point where his hearer might perchance express a desire to see its wonders, Still Bill Stover thrust his head cautiously through the door to the bunk-house, and allowed an admiring eye to rove over the transformation.

"Looks like a bazaar!" he exclaimed. "What the idea?"

"Trainin' quarters," said Glass.

"Mr. Speed goin' to live here?" inquired the foreman, bringing the remainder of his lanky body into view.

"No, indeed," Jean corrected, "he will merely use this room to train in."

"How do you train in a room?" Stover asked her.

"Why, you—just train, I suppose." Miss Chapin turned to Glass. "How does a person train in a room?"

"Why, he—just trains, that's all. A guy can't train without trainin' quarters, can he?"

"We thought it would make a nice gymnasium," offered Miss Blake.

"Looks like business." Stover's admiration was keen. "I rode over to Gallagher's place last night and laid our bets."

"How much have you wagered?" asked Fresno.

"More'n we can afford to lose."

"But you aren't going to lose," Miss Blake said, enthusiastically.

"I got Gallagher to play some records for me."

"'Silas on Fifth Avenue'?"

"Sure! And 'The Holy City,' too! Willie stayed out by the barb-wire fence; he didn't dast to go in. When I come out I found him ready to cry. That desperado has sure got the heart of a woman. I reckon he'd commit murder for that phonograph—he's so full of sentiment."

Fresno spoke sympathetically.

"It's a fortunate thing for you fellows that Speed came when he did. I'm anxious for him to beat this cook, and I hate to see him so careless with his training."

"Careless!" cried Helen.

"What's he done?" inquired Stover.

"Nothing, so far. That's the trouble. He's sure he can win, but"—Fresno shook his head, doubtfully—"there's such a thing as overconfidence. No matter how good a man may be, he should take care of himself."

"What's wrong with his trainin'?" demanded Glass.

"I think he ought to have more rest. It's too noisy around the house; he can't get enough sleep."

"Nor anybody else," agreed Glass, meaningly; "there's too much singin'."

"That's funny," said Stover. "Music soothes me, no matter how bad it is. Last night when we come back from the Centipede Mr. Fresno was singin' 'Dearie,' but I dozed right off in the middle of it. An' it's the same way with cattle. They like it. It's part of a man's duty when he's night-ridin' a herd to pizen the atmosphere with melody."

"We can't afford to spoil Speed's chances," argued the young man. "There is too much at stake. Am I right, Mr. Glass?"

Now, like most fat men, Lawrence Glass was fond of his rest, and since his arrival at the Flying Heart his sleeping-hours had been shortened considerably, so for once he agreed with the Californian.

"No question about it," said he.

"Mr. Speed Goin' to Live Here?" Inquired the Foreman.

"And I'll sleep here with him if you'll put a couple of cots in the place."

"But suppose Mr. Speed won't do it?" questioned Miss Blake.

"You ask him, and he won't refuse," said Jean.

"We don't want to see him defeated," urged Helen's other suitor; at which the girl rose, saying doubtfully: "Of course I'll do my best, if you think it's really important."

HIGH ROLLERS AND NEVER SWEATS WIN

Former Take Three Points—Latter Two, in Bowling Matches

The High Rollers showed excellent recuperative powers in the bowling contest with the Colts in the K. of C. league last evening, winning the second string by 26 pins after losing the first by 16. This gave them a ten pin lead on total, and they kept right on going in the third string finishing with a 43 pin margin. The final count was three out of four points in favor of the High Rollers from one of the most dangerous teams in the series. Reddy of the Colts was high on single string 96, and J. Kenney led on total, 258.

The Never Sweats walked off with four points from the Juniors in one of the best balanced games of the season. Each string was nip and tuck from start to finish, and it was only the hardest kind of luck that prevented the losing team from getting an even break, or at least winning one point and avoiding a shutout. Snider was a tower of strength to the Never Sweats rolling one string of 110 and a total of 309, and his splendid exhibition was a big factor in the clean sweep made by his team. The score:—

FOX'S TEAM SWAMP CUMMINGS' CREW

Take all Four Points in Fast Match Last Evening

Last evening on Flanders' alleys two teams from local leather shops took up the cudgels against each other. The team from Fox's shop seemed to have everything on their opponents from Cummings establishment and applied the white wash for four straignt points. They captured the first string rather easily, but only pulled out by six pins on the next. The rubber string came hard but when finished they were 16 pins to the good. J. Garvey of the defeated team was high man for the night with 114 and 279. For Fox's Doherty had high single with 101, and D. Garvey the total with 275. The match was full of excitement and furnished plenty of interest for the spectators and players. The summary:—

ALDERMEN AND POLICE PRACTISE

Getting into Form for Big Match on Patriot's Day

There are some people (those that always prejudge things, and who are always in bad) who are now saying that the police and aldermen are dead ones, and that neither outfit is game enough to toe the scratch in a bona fide bowling match. But anybody who can be classified with this brand of knockers should have been at Flanders' alleys yesterday afternoon and taken a peek at two of Woburn's "handsomest" and "bravest" clad in civilian clothes, keeping the pin boys on the jump.

The writer has on more than one occasion proven that he can tell an expert bowler when he sees one, and right here let it be understood that "Chick" Sweeney is just what the doctor ordered. The way he cleaned up strikes and spares yesterday was a caution, and what an arm that young man has got. His speed was wonderful and rarely did he make a bad miss, so accurate was his eye. Talk about George Shea is needless. He is in prime condition and his unerring aim enabled him to make Sweeney show all he had and then some.

Believe me "Dennie" Hogan and his bunch of "cannery" help will have to travel on Patriots day. Eddie McDonald who plays baseball better than he can bowl, will probably manage the police team and will be right there to root, and if rooting counts for anything and it always does, for the love of Pete gentle reader, be good on April 19, and get on the side lines to see the fun. And let us pray that the whole police department can have a few hours off to aid Manager McDonald in the rooting, and we understand that Alderman Hogan will not object if night sticks and burglar alarms are used to help out. But it must not be inferred that the aldermen are resting on their oars. Captain Hogan has already announced that in the selection of his team it will be a case of the survival of the fittest, and that he will not allow political pull to influence his judgment.

As a result Dennie Blake and Frank Naven, both boses in the "cannery", dropped into Flanders' last evening to get a little practise. They certainly displayed form enough to indicate that the "coppers" would have to step some. Dennis sure had some speed, but lacked control, something that he will acquire before the big match is rolled.

If one of the blue and brass brigade should accidentally get in the path of one of his fast ones there would be nothing left for his "pals" to do but order flowers. And that Naven person can bowl some too. Just keep your eye peeled dear reader and we will keep you posted. More anon. "Nuff Ced."

FIFTY CANDIDATES INITIATED

At Last Evening's Meeting of the Woburn Grange

The popularity of the grange movement was attested last evening when Woburn grange started on the road to membership fifty candidates.

An audience of 250 gathered to witness the impressive exercises, and included delegations from granges in Saugus, Everett, North Reading, Wakefield Wilmington, Lexington and Waltham.

The first degree was worked by the officers of the local grange under the leadership of the Master Hadley F. Higgins. The second degree was splendidly exemplified by the men's degree team of Waltham grange under the direction of Deputy Wallace. Master Cahill of Waltham grange accompanied the delegation from the Watch city, and was a guest of honor.

The local grange provided a generous collation for the occasion, this feature being in charge of a committee of which Miss Mary Breslin was chairman. Incidental music was rendered by the Woburn grange orchestra Miss Katherine McCarron leader. Vocal solos were rendered by Miss Madelin Jackson.

The meeting was marked by much enthusiasm, and the impressive initiation ceremony was followed with interest. The third and fourth degrees will be exemplified upon last evening's candidates April 2.

"INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY"

The Theme of Mrs. Mary E. Thayer at New Thought Meeting Yesterday

The parlors at the Warren avenue home of Mrs. H. C. Huntress were filled yesterday afternoon with friends of the New Thought movement, who were charmed with Mrs. Mary E. Thayer's treatment of the topic "Individual Responsibility." Mrs. Thayer is a member of the league in Boston and is accounted one of its most convincing speakers.

She said in part:—

Jesus never said, so far as we can find, that he was of any particular creed. He did say he was the Son of God, and so we are the children of God. Everything that exists has the spirit or God-spark within it. Nothing can exist without God. We are to a certain extent independent, but each of us is also interdependent, as our actions good or otherwise, conscious or unconscious must affect others with whom we come in contact.

Like the pebble thrown into the pool, first a small circle, then the larger and larger until the limit of the pool is reached. So is the influence we send out. God, having given us life and with it the spirit, has done all that He can do, unless we work and develop that spirit. Like the gardener with his seeds, unless he waters and attends to them after planting, removes the slugs, and weeds and undesirable twigs they will amount to nothing and his labor is in vain.

Character is like the plant. God has given us everything to build with, not for one day but for every day. He will not force us to use the material, but it is the duty of each of us to tend his own garden,(character), and see that all undesirable things are removed. By producing the finest in our own garden we can show our neighbors what is possible of achievement.

This policy and method of living should find expression in the kitchen, the parlor, the club, and every where else, for it may be practiced in one place as well as another. All is good if used right, Undesirable results are caused by using too much of one ingredient and too little of another, as in cooking. Food is not palatable if the proportions of material are wrong. The mistakes of yesterday we should use as means to climb by and so start each day right.

Mrs. Thayer said that it was impossible to get all of the truth at any one talk, or at any one session of church service. The true source and the inexhaustible source is God. The more you ask from Him, the greater will be his gifts. The speaker concluded by quoting the following sentences from Mrs. Mary Chapin: "Tomorrow is a bran new day. Nobody has ever lived it. There isn't a spot upon it. And it is mine. And I am going to do the best I can with it."

CITY COUNCIL MEETING TONIGHT

Interest Centres in Fire Committee Report on Hose Three Investigation

The regular semi-monthly meeting of the city council will be held this evening, and the most interesting if not the most important business on the calendar should be a report by the committee on fire setting forth facts revealed by the committee investigation of existing conditions at the hose three house.

At the last meeting of the council a communication from Lieutenant Edward J. Madden asking that an inquiry into conditions at hose three be ordered, was read, and after much discussion, the request was referred to the committee on fire. Lieutenant Madden was removed from the fire department the morning following the council meeting and since then, James McMorrow who was driver at hose three, has resigned, arousing no end of public interest in the situation.

The committee on fire has held two meetings during the past two weeks, the first to hear evidence on the application by Madden, and the other last Tuesday evening to act on the evidence and prepare a recommendation to be made to the council meeting tonight.

The hearing at which the grievances of Madden were aired, was held behind closed doors, although representatives of the press exhausted every resource in order to be present and give the public an accurate story of the proceedings.

Last Tuesday night the committee meeting according to current rumor terminated in the passage of a vote recommending to the city council that the investigation urged by ex-Lieutenant Madden was justified, that a disregard for discipline in the company was proven, and that the report will include a recommendation that Madden be restored to his former rank in the fire department.

Up to the time of going to press Chief Engineer Tracy has not publicly announced his decision, whether as a result of a hearing granted by him on the removal of Madden he will reconsider his former action, and reinstate the deposed lieutenant in the department or not. An adverse decision by the chief engineer will, if the public announcement made by Bernard J. Golden, attorney for Madden amounts to anything, get the controversy into court, Mr. Golden being credited with saying that he would not permit his client to accept unfavorable action by the chief engineer.

"Cobblers" who advertise to do work by modern machinery have failed to accept my challenge and thereby make some "easy money." In my challenge I specified "edge trimming," the easiest part of shoe repairing. I had reason to think that even this they could not do. Expert opinion is united on the Goodyear Welt system of sewing shoes. No hand sewing has ever equalled it.

I changed my firm name to the Woburn Shoe Repairing company simply to give my brother a chance to live. He fails to appreciate this fact. When a new brother comes to Woburn and endeavors to make a living, he tries to block his progress. I did pay my first brother's passage from Europe and stood good for his credit when he started in business.

My brother worried because I gave assistance to my second brothe the same as I did to him. He knows the new arrival is a good workman and can get the business.

I never was afraid of competition, that is why I help them all.

Today is the last day to accept the challenge. I am really sorry that I had no takers, as some of them need the money and the experience

This is practically a brand new line of perfumes, powder and creams, and without doubt these goods are almost perfection. Having eliminated the bad points and improved on the good points of other lines you can readily understand why this line is so much superior.

A combination set in a pretty box comprising of either perfume, toilet water, soap or sachet, in any assortment to please, makes a very acceptable Easter gift.

Of course we carry many other lines like Hudnuts, Roger & Gallet, Pivers, etc.

INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY

At the New Thought meeting yesterday the speaker emphasized the importance of individual responsibility, and a correspondent voices the same sentiment in a communication in today's JOURNAL suggesting that much of the litter upon our streets might be eliminated if the individual housewife would see to it that waste paper was burned in the stove or furnace and not dumped in the ash barrel, and that suggests the desirability of driving it home with the editorial hammer.

Ancient Jerusalem was known as a clean city, and it is said by veracious chroniclers that the reason might be found in the fact that every man swept before his own door. Here was an example of individual responsibility recognized and acted upon. That's all there is to it. If every one did his or her part in keeping the city clean Woburn would be a good aspirant for the title of "Spotless Town."

Any one who remembers the quarter-millenial celebration in this city in 1892 canaot fail to recall how spick and span the city looked on the eve of that festival. Houses were given a new dress of paint, fences were repaired, straightened and painted, trees and shrubs were carefully trimmed, walks were raked and swept, all rubbish was removed and the city wore its gala attire. And it was the work of the individual purely and simply.

The sermon is a short one. Its lesson is plain. Its application is not difficult. Suppose we all try it.

BURIED AT WOODBROOK

Mrs. E. R. Timson Laid to Rest This Afternoon

Funeral services were held at 32 Nashua street at two this afternoon for Mrs. Timson, wife of E.R. Timson, who died Monday morning at her home in Montvale. The home in which Mrs. Timson had spent many happy years and where two years since she and her husband observed their golden wedding anniversary was filled with sorrowing friends. Beautiful blossoms spoke of the love of many who knew Mrs. Timson intimately and felt the worth of her life.

Rev. Wolcott Calkins pastor emeritus, and Rev. Arthur A. Simmons pastor of the Montvale Congregational church officiated. Both had intimate knowledge through pastoral relations of the sterling character, and womanly qualities of the deceased, and their tributes were heartfelt and eloquent.

Mrs. Simmons had charge of the incidental music which comprised "The Home Land," "Sometime we will Understand" and "One Sweetly Solemn Thought." Among the floral tributes were: Spray of callas from the church, a crescent of forget-me-nots from the Social workers, and violets from the Bible class of which Mrs. Timson was a member. A touching feature of the service was when each member of the Social Workers, of which Mrs. Timson was vice-president, deposited in the casket a pansy. "That's for remembrance."

Burial was at Woodbrook, pall bearers comprising: Charles Welsh, H. A. Tilden, W. H. Ward, Charles H. Cadwell, John Whiting, and Thomas Heartz.

COMMUNICATION

To the Editor of the JOURNAL:

Have the citizens of Woburn a feeling of civic pride? Doubtless. Every one of us delights in the good points of our city, thinks with pride when it is commended, and hotly resents any adverse criticism. Yet some of us have probably experienced a sense of mortification when conducting visitors through the city. We wonder uneasily what must be the opinions they are forming of our community housekeeping.

Yesterday, when I was coming from the station, about five minutes' walk from my home, I counted the separate pieces of paper that I could see on the streets and in adjoining lots. My count reached 487 pieces. I missed some, too. What kind of housekeepers are we if we allow the corridors and empty rooms in our city house to be littered with waste?

This is not written as a criticism of the city government. We are poor, every one knows. The remedy is much nearer home than city hall. We should not let the papers get on the streets at all. Think how easily papers are blown from ash barrels. Think how soon, if they are thrown out with the ashes, they are blown from the dump to clutter the streets. If all our waste paper should be destroyed by burning in stove or furnace, much of this nuisance might be abated. This, like most matters of housekeeping, then, rests with the women of the community. Let us all try to clean our immediate neighborhood, and from now on let us burn all our papers! So shall we take a definite step toward a cleaner, better Woburn.

FUNERAL OF E. H. PALMER

At His Late home 88 Prospect Street Reading Yesterday

A marked tribute was paid yesterday to the memory of Edward H. Palmer who died Monday at his home 88 Prospect street in Reading. Mr. Palmer was president of the Reading savings bank and Reading co-operative bank, and president of the Carter, Rice & Co., paper manufacturers and dealers in Boston. He had been with the latter firm 39 years, and was widely known for his financial ability.

The attendance at the funeral yesterday was very large, and included many of Boston's prominent business men. Rev. D. A. Newton of the Congregational church officiated. There were many floral tributes. Pall bearers comprised Walter S. Parker and Lewis M. Bancroft of the Savings bank, Frank E. Crafts and John Connolly of the Co-operative bank, Frank W. Power and Charles A. Young of Carter, Rice & Co., Boston, Herbert N. Viall and William B. Livermore of Reading. Burial was at Laurel hill.

Mr. Palmer was born at New Bedford 65 years ago, son of Mark S. and Mary G. (Dunbar) Palmer. He is survived by his wife and one son.

RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS GIVE HEARING

A delegation of Winchester citizens attended the public hearing given at 20 Beacon street, Tuesday afternoon, before the railroad commission. A petition was presented by Whitfield L. Tuck, and signed by a long list of other citizene. the purpose of which was to bring fully to public attention, the facts of the dissatisfaction of the patrons of the Bay state street railroad and the Boston Elevated road who reside in Somerville, Medford, Winchester and Woburn.

Three petitions were preseuted, The first was an effort to have the Bay state street railroad company extend its track from its present termination where it comes up from Winchester, and have the track join the Elevated tracks in the center of Arlington, so that the line of cars running to Arlington from Winchester, can connect and run to the Harvard square terminal station of Cambridge tunnel without passengers changing cars. A similar petition was presented the railroad commission about a month or six weeks ago and rejected. Since then the commission has undergone a change in its composition and the petitioners look for more favorable consideration.

Mr. Tuck spoke eloquently for the measure and was ably supported by D. W. Parke. Several other Winchester citizens appeared and spoke for the measure including Frank Rowe, Ralph Redfern, Geo. H. Carter, and P. E. Fitzgerald.

The representatives of the railway corporations were not strongly opposed to the idea and took the matter under consideration. If the two companies agree on the matter, it is likely to be put through No opposition was expressed by the companies' representatives.

Also a petition was offered to have the Woburn-Winchester cars run express from Sullivan square to Medford square. William J. Daly, chairman of the Winchester board of selectmen approved and spoke in favor of this petition.

The Elevated road agreed to try the plan from Sullivan square to Winter hill as an experiment, and if it proves good to continue the plan to Medford square. If the plan works and is aproved, the elevated line will operate a similar plan in o ther places in its routes in greater Boston where the plan is feasible.

The third petition was for the combined street railroad corporations to erect a waiting room at Winthrop square, Medford. This has been before the commission previously and was refused.

Mr. Tuck spoke warmly on this measure and the chairman of the commission agreed with him, saying that waiting rooms should be erected at terminal points of all railways all over the state.

The railroad representatives opposed the measure, on the ground that there was no necessity for the erecting of a structure for a waiting room, and besides, there was no land to be had for the purpose.

Mr. Tuck claims this to be a farce, as he came through Winthrop Square recently and saw no less than three signs bearing the inscription "Land for sale."

The measures were left with the commission to consider and report on as soon as possible.

The petitioners expect and hope to hear a favorable report on all petitions.

PRIZES FOR DRAWING AT HIGH SCHOOL

STONEHAM VOTES $112,000 QUICKLY

The Town Adopts Finance Committee's Recommendations—Tax Rate $24.85

Five hundred voters gathered in Armory hall, Stoneham, last evening, and voted to raise and appropriate $112,000 in round numbers as recommended by the finance committee. The committee's recommendations were based on a tax-rate approximating $24.85.

Seventy-six of the ninety articles were cleaned up by 10.30 when the meeting adjourned for one week. An attempt was made to establish a change in the method of electing selectmen, one member each year for three years, but the motion was lost, and the town will continue its longtime policy of voting for the entire board yearly for a term of one year.

CHARLES QUIGLEY CASE CONTINUED

Winchester Man Charged with Breaking and Entering Hutchinson Bungalow

Charles Quigley of Winchester pleaded not guilty this morning in the local court to a charge of breaking and entering. Chief of Police McIntosh stated that the government case was not quite ready and asked the court to order a continuance to next Saturday. Judge Johnson granted the request of the chief.

The alleged break took place March 9, at the bungalow on Russel hill, Cross street, owned by Albert A. Hutchinson, and a clock, a search light, collars, stockings and other articles of clothing were stolen. Chief McIntosh has recovered all the property with the exception of the search light, and as a result of a search made at the home of the defendant, Quigley he has brought a charge of breaking against the latter. Bail was fixed at $300.

JUNIOR HISTORY CLASS DEBATE

The II history (C) division held a debate in room 4, period I this morning. Hugh Marshall presided over the meeting and principal George W. Low was the judge.

The subject of the debate was "Resolved that the United States Constitution should be amended so as to give equal suffrage to men and women."

The affirmative was defended by Albert Ring and Miss Duran. Martin Kelley and Miss Gertrude Murch spoke for the negative.

Principal Low awarded the decision to the negative. MissDuran's argument was a strong plea for the affirmative, but her partner did not supplement her effort as he might have done, and the verdict for best all round presentation had to go to the negative.

WOMAN'S CLUB NOTES

Mrs. Martha W. Bond, president, and Mrs. Lena H. Pratt, corresponding secretary, were guests of the Woman's Educational club of West Newton last Friday afternoon.

Mrs. W. W. Wade represented the club at the Conference of the Home Economics Committee of the State Federation held at Waltham last Friday afternoon.

The club, through its Art committee, has offered two prizes of two dollars and a half in gold each to the pupils of the High school excelling in arts and crafts and mechanical drawing.

By invitation of the Somerville Woman's club a conference in the interests of music will be held on Wednesday afternoon at two o'clock in Unitarian hall, Somerville. Guests are requested to present visiting cards at the door, bearing the name of the club represented. Mrs. Mulligan will be present and speak. Miss Maud Scheerer will talk on "The Speaking Voice" and there will be other interesting speakers.

Albert Edward Wiggam, spoken of as "The Apostle of the New Efficiency" will lecture before the club tomorrow afternoon at its regular meeting. He is a man of varied experiences, on the farm, in the mines and as mine superintendent, as a chemist, newspaper reporter and editorialist for a great daily. He has long specialized upon Medical sociology and biology. Heredity is the most fascinating subject that has ever engaged the mind of man. No man has mastered it more completely than Mr. Wiggam. His lecture will be both instructive and interesting. This will be an open meeting, each member being allowed to invite a guest. An invitation has been extended to the superintendent and teachers in the public schools.

APPEAL FOR SUPPORT

Class III held its morning exercises in the High school assembly hall today. At the close, President Lawson of the Athletic association and Director W. A. Walker spoke in behalf of the association, and sought to arouse the proper school spirit in the class for the support of school athletics. Principal Low also spoke in a similar vein.

The athletic management of the Woburn high school desire all members of the school to make an effort to pay their dues as soon as possible as the success of the baseball team this season depends on the amount of money supplied to pay for a coach and incidental expenses. All pupils who have signed cards should fulfil their pledge at once.

NORTH READING MAN HELD FOR GRAND JURY

Charles S. Deady was before Judge Johnson this morning charged with attempted felonious assault upon Annie L. Sweeney. Both are from North Reading. Judge John G. Maguire appeared for the government, and John Blanchard of Boston defended Deady. After hearing the evidence the court found probable cause and held Deady in $1000 bonds for the next session of the Middlesex county grand jury. There were a number of witnesses heard the defence contending that Deady was not the man, and that it was a case of mistaken identity.

WAS BEATEN ON HONEYMOON

Grand Jury Holds D. Jack Lit After Former Wife Describes Attack in Hotel.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Following her divorce from her former husband, D. Jack Lit, the son of Col. Sam D. Lit of Lit Bros., Mrs. Lit appeared before the grand jury and swore to the ill treatment which she had received from her husband from the first night of their marriage on January 31, 1912.

Mrs. Lit testified that she was subjected to such treatment on the part of her hsuband that she was wrecked physically, and her family physician, Prof. David C. Beisman of the University of Pennsylvania, and her father, Ralph Blum of Blum Bros., were witnesses in her behalf.

So atrocious was the recital of the experiences of the bride that the grand jury found seven true bills against Lit on the charges of assault and battery and other forms of assault, which indicate that if the young man is convicted he will have to spend at least 20 years in prison.

Mrs. Lit is a helpless cripple, says her physician. She will never be the same young girlish debutante that figured in so many of the city's social functions.

Soon after the marriage of the Lits it was charged in reports that came to this city from Florida that it was necessary for the attaches of the hotel where they were spending their honeymoon to almost break down the door to rescue Mrs. Lit from the beating of her husband.

Ralph Blum, the father of Mrs. Lit, has insisted that Lit be punished. All the influence of the wealth of the two families, who own the second and third largest department stores in the city, was exerted to try and settle the differences. It was not a case that money could assuage and Mr. Blum refused to have any sum accepted for the injuries which his daughter sustained.

He has demanded an indictment and a prison term, despite all the power and influence brought to bear, and the case was heard by the grand jury and the indictments followed in less than a half hour's time.

"Thank you," said Stover gratefully, while Fresno congratulated himself upon an easy victory.

The two girls took Speed's trainer with them, and went forth in search of the young man.

"It's up to you fellows to see that he gets to bed early," said Fresno, when he and Stover were alone.

"Leave it to us. And as for gettin' up, we turn out at daylight. I don't reckon he could sleep none after that if he tried." Stover pointed to the striped elastic coils of the exerciser against the wall. "I didn't want to speak about it while they was here," said he, "but one of them young ladies lost her garters."

"That's not a pair of garters, that's a chest-weight."

"Jest wait for what?"

"Chest-weight—chest-developer."

"Oh!" Stover examined the device curiously. "I thought a chest-developer came in a bottle."

Fresno explained the operation of the apparatus, at which the cowman remarked, admiringly:

"That young feller is all right, ain't he?"

"Think so?"

"Sure! Don't you?"

Fresno explained his doubts by a

"Ain't He No Champeen?"

crafty lift of his brows and a shrug. "I thought so—at first."

Stover wheeled upon him abruptly. "What's wrong?"

"Oh, nothing."

After a pause the foreman remarked, vaguely: "He's the intercollegit champeen of Yale."

"Oh no, hardly that, or I would have heard of him."

"Ain't he no champeen?"

"Champion of the running broad smile and the half-mile talk perhaps."

"Ain't he a foot-runner?"

"Perhaps. I've never seen him run, but I have my doubts."

"Good Lord!" moaned Stover, weakly.

"He may be the best sprinter in the country, mind you, but I'll lay a little bet that he can't run a hundred yards without sustenance."

"Without what?"

"Sustenance—something to eat."

"Well, we've got plenty for him to eat," said the mystified foreman.

"You don't understand. However, time will tell."

"But we ain't got no time. We've made this race 'pay or play,' a week from Saturday, and the bets are down. We was afraid the Centipede would welsh when they seen who we had, so we framed it that way. What's to be done?"

Again Fresno displayed an artistic restraint that was admirable. "It's none of my business," said he, with a careless shrug.

"I—I guess I'll tell Willie and the boys," vouchsafed Bill apprehensively.

"No! no! Don't breathe a word I've said to you. He may be a crackerjack, and I wouldn't do him an injustice for the world. All the same, I wish he hadn't broken my stop-watch."

"D' you think he broke it a-purpose?"

"What do you think?"

Stover mopped the sweat from his brow.

"Can't we time him with a ordinary watch?"

"Sure. We can take yours. It won't be exact, but—"

"I ain't got no watch. I bet mine last night at the Centipede. Willie's got one, though."

"Mind you, he may be all right," Fresno repeated, reassuringly; then hearing the object of their discussion approaching with his trainer, the two strolled out through the bunkroom, Stover a prey to a new-born suspicion, Fresno musing to himself that diplomacy was not a lost art.

"You're a fine friend, you are!" Speed exploded, when he and Glass were inside the gymnasium. "What made you say 'yes?'"

"I had to."

"Rot, Larry! You played into Fresno's hands deliberately! Now I've got to spend my evenings in bed while he sits in the hammock and sings 'Dearie.'" He shook his head gloomily. "Who knows what may happen?"

"It will do you good to get some sleep, Wally."

"But I don't want to sleep!" cried the exasperated suitor. "I want to make love. Do you think I came all the way from New York to sleep? I can do that at Yale."

"Take it from me, Bo, you've got plenty of time to win that dame. Eight hours is a workin' day anywhere." Glass chuckled. "The whole thing is a hit. Look at this joint, for instance." He took in their surroundings with a comprehensive gesture. "It looks about as much like a gymnasium as I look like a contortionist. Why don't you get a Morris chair and a mandolin?"

"There are two reasons," said Speed, facetiously. "First, it takes an athlete to get out of a Morris chair; and, second, a mandolin has proved to be many a young man's ruin."

Glass examined the bow of ribbon upon the lonesome piece of exercising apparatus.

"It looks like the trainin'-stable for the Colonial Dames. What a yelp this place would be to Covington or any other athlete."

"It is not an athletic gymnasium." Speed smiled as he lighted a cigarette. "It is a romantic gymnasium. As Socrates once observed—"

"Socrates! I'm hep to him," Glass interrupted, quickly. "I trained a Greek professor once and got wised up on all that stuff. Socrates was the —the Hemlock Kid."

"Exactly! As Socrates, the Hemlock Kid, deftly put it, 'in hoc signature vintage.'"

"I don't get you."

"That is archaic Scandinavian, and, translated, means, 'Love cannot thrive without her bower.'"

"No answer to that telegram yet, eh?"

"Hardly time."

"Better wire Covington again, hadn't you? Mebbe he didn't get it?"

"I promised Mrs. Keap that I would, but—" Speed lost himself abruptly in speculation, for he did not know exactly how to manage this unexpected complication. Of one thing only was he certain; it would require some thought.

"Say, Wally, suppose Covington don't come?"

"Then I shall sprain my ankle," said the other. "Hello! What in the world—"

Still Bill Stover and Willie came into the room carrying an armful of lumber. Behind them followed Carara with a huge wooden tub, and Cloudy rolling a kerosene barrel.

"Where do you want it, gents?" inquired the foreman.

"Where do we want what?"

"The shower-bath."

"Shower— I didn't order a shower-bath!"

"No; but we aim to make it as pleasant for you as we can."

"If there is anything I abhor, it's a shower-bath!" exclaimed the athlete.

"You just got to have one. Mr. Fresno said all this gymnasium lacked was a shower-bath, a pair of scales, and a bulletin board. He said you'd sure need a bath after workin' that chest-developer. We ain't got no scales, nor no board, but we'll toggle up some sort of a bath for you. The blacksmith's makin' a squirter to go on the bar'l."

"Very well, put it wherever you wish. I sha'n't use it."

"I wouldn't overlook nothin', if I was you," said Willie, in even milder tones that Stover had used.

"You overwhelm me with these little attentions," retorted Mr. Speed.

"Where you goin' to run today?" inquired the first speaker.

"I don't know. Why?"

"We thought you might do a hundred yards agin time."

"Nix!" interposed Glass, hurriedly. "I can't let him overdo at the start. Besides, we ain't got no stop-watch."

"I got a reg'lar watch," said Willie, "and I can catch you pretty close. We'd admire to see you travel some, Mr. Speed."

But Glass vowed that he was in charge of his protege's health, and would not permit it. Once outside, however, he exclaimed: "That's more of Fresno's work, Wally! I tell you, he's Jerry. He'll rib them pirates to clock you, and if they do—well, you'd better keep runnin', that's all."

"You can do me a favor," said Speed. "Buy that watch."

"There's other watches on the farm."

"Buy them all, and bring me the bill."

Before setting out on his daily grind, Speed announced to his trainer that he had decided to take him along for company, and when that corpulent gentleman rebelled on the ground that the day was too sultry, his employer would have none of it, so together they trotted away later in the morning, Speed in his silken suit, Glass running flat-footed and with great effort. But once safely hidden from view, they dropped into a walk, and selecting a favorable resting place, paused. Speed lighted a cigarette, Glass produced a deck of cards from his pocket, and they played seven-up. Having covered five miles in this exhausting fashion, they returned to the ranch in time for luncheon. Both ate heartily, for the exercise had agreed with them.

CHAPTER VIII.

LAWRENCE GLASS was beginning to like New Mexico. Not only did it afford a tinge of romance, discernable in the deep, haunting eyes of Mariedetta, the maid, but it offered an opportunity for financial advancement—as, for instance, the purchase of Willie's watch. This timepiece cost the trainer twenty-one dollars, and he sold it to Speed for double the amount, believing in the luck of even numbers. Nor did young Speed allow his trainer's efforts to cease here, for in every portable timepiece on the ranch he recognized a menace, and not until Lawrence had cornered the market and the whole collection was safely locked in his trunk did he breathe easily. This required two days, during which the young people at the ranch enjoyed themselves thoroughly. They were halycon days for the Yale man, for Fresno was universally agreeable, and seemed resigned to the fact that Helen should prefer his rival's company to his own.

As for Glass, he recounted tales of Mariedetta's capitulation to his employer, and wheezed merrily over the discomfiture of the Mexican girl's former admirers.

"She's a swell little flame," he confided to Speed one afternoon, as they lounged luxuriously in the shade at their customary resting place. "Yes, and I'm aces with her, too." They had set out for their daily run, and were now contesting for the seven-up supremacy of the Catskill mountains. Already Glass had been declared the undisputed champion of the Atlantic coast, while Speed on the day previous had wrested from him the championship of the Mississippi valley.

"But Mariedetta is dark!" said the college man, as he cut the cards. "She is almost a mulatto."

"Naw! She's no dinge. She's an Aztec, an' them Aztec's is swell people. Say, she can play a guitar like a barber!"

"Miss Blake told me she was in love with Carara."

Glass grunted contemptuously. "I've got it on that insurrecto four ways. Why, I'm learning to talk Spanish myself. If he gets lossy, I'll cross one over his bow." The trainer made a vicious jab at an imaginary Mexican. "He ain't got a good wallop in him.

"I thought cowboys was tough guys," continued Glass, "but it's a mistake. That little Willie, for instance, is a lamb. He packs that Mauser for protection. He's afraid some farmer will walk up and poke his eye out with a corn-cob. One copper with a night-stick could stampede the whole outfit. But they're all right, at that," he acknowledged, magnanimously. "They're a nice bunch of fellers when you know how to take 'em."

"The flies are awful today," Speed complained. "They bite my legs."

"I'll bring out a bath robe tomorrow, and we'll hide it in the bushes. I wish there was some place to keep this beer cool." Glass shifted some bottles to a point where the sunlight did not strike them.

"I'm getting tired of training, Larry," acknowledged the young man, with a yawn. "It takes so much time."

Glass shook his head in sympathy. "Seems like we'd ought to hear from Covington," said he.

"He's on his way, no doubt. Isn't it time to go back to the ranch?"

Glass consulted his watch. "No, we ain't done but three miles. Here goes for the rubber."

It was Berkeley Fresno who retreated cautiously from the shelter of a thicket a hundred yards up the arroyo and started briskly homeward, congratulating himself upon the impulse that had decided him to follow the training partners upon their daily routine. He made directly for the corral.

* * * * *

"Which I don't consider there's no consideration comin' to him whatever," said Willie that evening. "He ain't acted on the level."

"Now, see here," objected Stover, "he may be just what he claims he is. Simply because he don't go skallyhootin' around in the hot sun ain't no sign he can't run."

"What about them empty beer bottles?" demanded Willie. "No feller can train on that stuff. I went out there myself and seen 'em. There was a dozen."

"Mebbe Glass drank it. What I claim is this: We ain't got no proof. Fresno is stuck on Miss Blake, and life's a knocker."

"Then let's git some proof, and dam' quick."

"Si, Senores," agreed Carara, who had been an interested listener.

"I agree with you, but we got to be careful—"

Willie grunted with disgust.

"—we can't go at it like we was killin' snakes. Mr. Speed is a guest here."

Again the little gun man expressed his opinion, this time in violet-tinted profanity, and the other cowboys joined in.

WILMINGTON

Mrs. Grace Addison had a narrow escape from serious injury yesterday. She was driving at Hudson's Corner. A large automobile came along and Mrs. Addison turned out for it. Another runabout following driven by a Dr. Baker of Lowell, struck the rear wheel of the carriage which was overturned and Mrs. Addison was caught in the wreckage. The horse broke loose from the carriage and bolted up Church street, where he was caught in the yard of E. T. Kinsman. The horse breaking loose is probably all that saved Mrs. Addison from more serious injury. She was but slightly injured.

Toll Uses in Sales Campaigns

SUCH testimonials as the following from the J. E. SOPER COMPANY, wholesalers of grain and feed at 206 Chamber of Commerce, Boston, furnish unimpeachable testimony of the value of the telephone, especially the toll lines, in sales campaigns.

We quote a paragraph of a letter to the Company from this concern:

"We find that the telephone takes the place, in a large degree, of men on the road, and that our business is done in a much more satisfactory way by having a man sell our goods from the office, as he then knows everything a salesman should know concerning the quality, location and other features of the goods, whereas a man on the road does not always have his information and is frequently induced to guess it, which does not work at all."

We would not suggest this rule in every case. The advantages of face-to-face salesmanship and the magnetism of a personality, coupled with the importance of showing many lines of goods, are not to be depreciated. On standard lines, however, once the salesman's personality is established, the telephone is an efficient auxiliary, and especially helpful to the salesman in making advance appointment.

TIMELY VETOES BY THE MAYOR

Fire Committee Reports on Lieutenant Madden's Petition and Recommends Reinstatement

ORDER FOR CURFEW LAW

Mayor Henchey's first veto messages were received at the meeting of the city council last evening, and in both cases the mayor was unanimously sustained.

The first order which met with disapproval by His Honor, was the order for the laying of a new six-inch water main on Lexington street, as passed by the council at its last meeting, the order providing for the taking of the necessary funds from the earnings of the water department. This was the feature of the order which met with the official objections, based on the opinion of the city solicitor, that the section of the order relating to the taking of funds from the earnings of the water department for this purpose, was illegal. Following is the text of the veto:—

To the Honorable City Council

Gentlemen:

I herewith return without my signature the order passed by your board appropriating $5,000 for a water main on Lexington street. I do so for the following reasons: That in the original water act of the legislature passed in 1871 creating the water supply for the city of Woburn, and subsequent acts it expressly states in what way the surplus earnings of the water department shall be used. I am of the opinion that the action of your board in appropriating this money from the receipts of the water department is contrary to these acts and consequently illegal. Hoping that your Honorable board will give this matter further consideration, I remain

Very truly yours,

William H. Henchey,

Mayor.

The order was reconsidered and the veto was sustained by a unanimous vote of the council. Later an order was introduced providing for an appropriation of $5,000 for the purpose of laying the new six-inch water main in Lexington street, and it was referred to the committee on finance for consideration and report.

The second veto related to the order granting the petition of the New England Tel. & Tel. company, for permission to lay and maintain underground conduits and manholes in Mishawum road. The Mayor's objections to this order were as follows:

To the Honorable City Council

Gentlemen:

I herewith return without my signature, the petition granted by your board to the New England Tel. & Tel. company to lay conduits in Mishawum road and I do so for the following reasons:

That in the petition it is my desire to have inserted a condition that would make it mandatory upon the petitioners to return to its present condition, subject to the approval of the commissioner of streets, the road bed which they contemplate opening to place the conduits. Hoping that your Honorable board will consider this petition further, I remain

Very truly yours,

William H. Henchey,

Mayor.

This order was also reconsidered and the veto sustained by a unanimous vote of the council. Later an order was introduced to give the company an opportunity to insert the clause providing for relaying of the street to meet the approval of the highway department, and the granting of the petition will be held in abeyance, awaiting the insertion of the provisional clause desired by the mayor.

In neither of the vetoes did the mayor object to the passing of the orders except for the technicalities specified.

The petitions received were of varied order, William C. Dillingham, clerk of courts sent a communication, requesting the drawing of 14 jurors, four civil and ten criminal.

The civil list drawn was Edward T. Mulkeen, 10 Cross street, David H. Holland, Union street, Henry C. Miller, 55 Garfield avennue, George R. Warren, 35 Mishawum road.

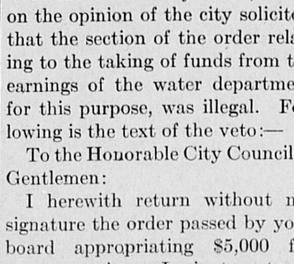

The criminal list was William O'Reilly, 19 Reed street, Michael J. Meagher, 18 Mann's court, Patrick J. Cox, 269 Main street, William P. Chute, 82 Pleasant street, Charles W. Fitz, 7 Winn street, John M. Pressy, 75 Mishawum road, Walter E. Mead, 452 Washington street, Frank A. Haney, 30 Highland street, Andrew H. Cuneo, 10 Mt. Pleasant street, George E. Bland, 26 Mt. Pleasant street.

No one appeared but the company's representative for the public hearing on the petition of the Edison company for authority to locate one pole on Middleses street He stated that the extra pole was required to furnish electric service to an applicant at 23 Middlesex street. The order was passed its final reading.

GOOD FOR YOU, MR. MAYOR

Mayor Henchey exercised the veto power very wisely last evening. In the one wherein he calls the council's attention to the fact that the uses to which the surplus earnings of the water department can be applied are clearly defined and cannot be ignored he gave evidence of study and watchfulness that must command the respect and approval of every citizen.

In the other executive communication he was equally zealous in his desire to safeguard the city's interests. In vetoing the order passed by the city council permitting the New England Telephone and Telegraph company to lay underground conduits and construct manholes in Mishawum road and intersecting streets, without first binding the company to put the highway in its original condition after the work is completed, he demonstrated that he is keeping his weather eye open for leaks in any legislation that may be enacted during the current year.

The mayor very properly insists that the company must first consent to repair the highway under the direction of the street department, before they are granted the privilege they have applied for. This is a moderate but firm demand that the interests of the city be fully protected. It is unpleasant to say, but nevertheless true, that repeatedly in past years the rights of the city have been subordinated to the wishes of corporations who are constantly seeking privileges in practically all of our main thoroughfares. Too long has the duty, owed by every member of a city government to the citizens and taxpayers, been disregarded and the community on more than one occasion has not only been greatly inconvenienced but has suffered seriously.

Mayor Henchey might have gone a step further in his veto message and recommended that a clause be inserted in the permit compelling the company to employ local labor. It is no injustice to the corporation, in a case of this kind where skilled labor is not required, for the local authorities to make provision in its official action for the welfare of its citizens. The work of digging and refilling a trench can be performed by any man in good health, and just now with the leather business none too good, there are a great number of good citizens of Woburn who would gladly accept a chance to tide over a few weeks of inactivity by working for the petitioning corporation.

It is pleasing also to note that the city council last evening without a dissenting vote accepted the recommendations contained in both the veto messages from the mayor. It is a sure sign that the dog-in-the-manger policies of some of our past administrations are not to be continued, and that republican and democratic officials alike may well forget petty personalities, in a general desire to regulate city affairs in a sane manner, and to expend the tax payers' money for the greatest good of the greatest number.

Mayor Henchey and every other official will be accorded unstinted support from the people in every official act similar to those of last evening, even though they may incur the displeasure of corporate interests and a few petty politicians. In the final analysis of the merit of men in public office it has ever been true that the man with the confidence of the public to sustain him has been the man with the most power for good.

STILL UNSATISFIED

The council committee on fire reported last evening, on the matter of conditions alleged to exist in hose company number three, concerning which Edward J. Madden late lieutenant of the company asked an investigation, that Madden was justified in preferring the request, that there was an utter lack of discipline in the company, and that in the opinion of the committee, Lieut. Madden ought to be reinstated, all of which was forecasted in yesterday's JOURNAL. The finding was practically the conclusion of the entire committee, Alderman Naven of ward seven alone dissenting.

But the public which supplies the funds is still in the dark as to what the conditions are in hose three company. Must it accept on faith the ipse dixit of the committee? It is possible that the public, the tax-paying public, the party financially responsible for the existence and support of the company, if it knew the facts, would demand in tones not to be denied the abolition of the company in its entirety. What are the conditions, gentlemen, upon which you base your conclusions that appear to substantiate Madden in every particular? Don't you see that the public is justified in thinking you are trying to hide the true condition of affairs.

One word about the disposition of the report. The record is that it was received—not accepted or adopted—and placed on file. Thus disposed of, what does it amount to? It is simply so much paper in the custody of the city clerk. It has no vitalizing corrective force. As a dust gatherer it may be a success, but as a factor for good, for progress, for reform, it is as harmless as a gingerbread pill.

To the outside public which meekly walks up to the city collector's office and pays its annual apportionment, it seems as if the council might have injected a little life into the matter by accepting and adopting the practically unanimous report of a committee which has had all the facts, and then ordered that copies of the report, with an abstract of the evidence secured, and an attested copy of the council's approval be sent to the mayor and chief engineer and to the press.

It is urged that the council has not final and definite jurisdiction, but a chief engineer, who was created by the council, would think twice before he ignored a properly preferred request of the city fathers.

TIMELY VETOES BY THE MAYOR

two pool tables was granted without reference.

The petition of Sylvester B. Smith of 6 Eastern avenue for an auctioneer's license was referred to committee on police and licenses.

Hart's Express company petitioned for a license to transport intoxicating liquors. It was referred to police and license committee. Two petitions from Michael Smith of 29 Main street, one for a common victualler's license, and one to put two pool tables in were granted without reference.

The petition of Owen Doherty for a night lunch cart stand at the Common, was granted without reference.

James H. Hoy of 4 Madison street applied for a license to be a private detective. After much discussion by the various aldermen, the matter was finally referred to the committee on police and license. Mr. Hoy appeared and spoke for himself, telling of his wish for immediate favorable action, as delay would prevent him taking up much important business. The most discussion was concerning the filing of his bond for $3,000. None of the council were sure of the law pertaining to the bond. Mr. Hoy stated and so did a couple of aldermen that the license had to be granted before Mr. Hoy filed his bond with the city treasurer. The discussion ended after being taken up for the second time near the close of the meeting, the applicant being instructed to file his bond and then apply for his license.

Upon recommendation of the highway and finance committees the petition of John T. Connolly to be retired on half pay under the provisions of the laborers pensioning act was referred to the city solicitor, for an opinion as to the legality of the claim and also as to the amount of pension.

The board of public works sent up an estimate on the probable cost of an extension of the water main in Lowell street as petitioned for by Arthur W. Dickson and several others. The extension is for a distance of several hundred feet past the house of E. P. Marion. According to the estimate it will cost $1614 for a two inch main and for a six inch $2930.90. The communication was referred to the committee on finance.

The request of the board of public works for an appropriation of $200 to put Library park in proper condition, and $300 for the purchase and planting of shade trees was also sent to the finance committee.

The report of the finance committee appropriating $500 for the block system was accepted.

The report of the fire committee on the request of Edward Madden for an investigation of conditions in hose three company, was received and placed on file. Following is the report: "That the committee finds that Lieut. Madden was justified in asking for an investigation of the conditions existing in said hose company and also finds a lack of discipline existing in said hose company at that time. The committee also recommends to the chief the reinstatement of Lieut. Madden" Alderman Navin dissenting. Some discussion followed the reading of the report over the authority of the council to recommend reinstatement of the deposed lieutenant. Alderman Navin and Blake spoke at some length and the former quoted Section 16 of the revised charter.

The petition of the Edison company for authority to locate 6 poles on Spring court, northerly from Green street, and on Green street at Spring court to set and remove one pole passed its final reading.

The communication from the B. of P. W. requesting the council to rescind the portion of the order appropriating $5,000 for water meters was not taken from the table.

The request of the same board for $20,000 for water mains, and also to transfer $10,000 from income of water department was passed.

Two orders, one for $250 for fire alarm boxes, and one for $600 for drainage pipe at corner of Montvale avenue and Central street were passed.

An order introduced by Alderman Hogan for $150 for new settees on the common was referred to finance committee.

Alderman Marshall introduced an order for $5,000 to be appropriated from borrowing capacity to pay for a new water main to be laid on Lexington street. Referred to finance committee.

Alderman Rix's order for $375 by loan to pay for laying a sewer about 350 feet in length on Cleveland avenue was referred to same committee.

Alderman Dennis P. Blake introduced the following order,

Section 1. No child under 16 years of age shall loiter or remain upon any street, highway, park, or other public place in this city after the hour of 9 p. m. of any day unless accompanied by, or under the care of a parent, guardian, or other adult person, or performing or returning from employment or from the performance of some duty directed in writing by said parent, guardian or other adult person and no such child while performing such duty or returning from the performance thereof or from employment shall loiter upon any such street, highway, park or other public way or place.

Section 2. The fire chief shall cause three blows to be sounded on the fire alarm signal at 9 o'clock p. m.

Referred to committee on ordinances.

Youngest Daughter of King Alfonso Is Threatened to Become Deaf and Dumb.

Madrid.—It is learned from a person in the immediate entourage of the royal family that it is greatly feared that Infanta Maria Christina, now fourteen months old, the youngest child of the king and queen, is threatened with the same impediment in hearing and speech as her little brother, Don Jaime, now four years old.

King Alfonso.

The other two children, Crown Prince Alfonso, nearly six, and Infanta Beatrice, not quite four, are normal.

Undoubtedly the king's own health is causing concern. His appearance has become ghastly.

NO "MOVIES" FOR VASSAR

Students Asked to Uphold Dignity by Not Attending Vaudeville and Picture Shows.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.—The privilege of attending moving picture shows has been withdrawn from Vassar students. The prohibitory order, posted on the bulletin boards in the college corridors, has brought a pang to the three hundred young women who daily attend the film exhibitions. It reads in substance:

"Vassar college students will aid the faculty in upholding the dignity of the institution by refraining from attending vaudeville and moving picture exhibitions in Poughkeepsie for the remainder of the term. Infraction of this rule will not be tolerated."

The girls flock to this city every afternoon and after witnessing the "movies" return to the dormitories to regale the other students with stories of the exciting events they have seen portrayed. The college authorities consider all this a waste of time as well as an affront to the dignity of the institution.

WHAT OUR HOUSEHOLDS COST

Ten Billion Dollars a Year Is Figure Arrived at by Professor Muensterberg.

New York.—The women of the United States spend nearly $10,000,000,000 a year for maintaining the households of the country, according to Prof. Hugo Muensterberg of Harvard in a statement which is causing much discussion among New York women just now. In woman's hands, therefore, is the greatest single business of the United States, for the vast expenditures of the government itself are insignificant beside such a tremendous budget.

The only rival of housekeeping as an industry is agriculture. The total value of the products of agriculture in the United States is also about $10,000,000,000 a year. But it should be remembered that that figure is for the output, the finished product of the farms, while the expenditure of the housewives is only for the raw materials from which by their own labor and management they create the real values of the home—a finished product which can hardly be estimated in financial terms.

The Harvard professor points out that, with such a tremendous business undertaking on their hands, the women of the country do not fit themselves for their highly technical and professional duties with "that deeper knowledge of the material, its sources, its effects, its characteristics, which would be demanded of any other large economic transactions." He laments the bargain craze, and urges more care, not for the dress of the housekeeper, but for the dress of the home, which, he says, is even more important.

For all which remarks the women of New York are expressing their thanks to the learned professor and quietly wondering among themselves what kind of home he is used to seeing in the neighborhood of Harvard square.

Edison Refuses $1,000,000.

Cleveland, O.—Thomas A. Edison, the inventor, was offered $1,000,000 for the rights of his new talking machinery invention, but Attorney Brady, who represented the capitalists, said Mr. Edison only laughed at the offer.

PATRIOT IS DYING

O"Donovan Rossa Nearing End of a Troubled Career.

He Fought and Long Suffered Imprisonment in the Struggle for Erin's Freedom—Liberated by Queen Victoria.

New York.—When Jeremiah Donovan, the Irish patriot and picturesque Fenian, adopted the name "O'Donovan Rossa" fifty years ago and collected a sum said to have exceeded $90,000, much of it from Irish girls throughout the United States, he promised to free Ireland by drastic measures. The avowed aim of his life and purpose of the fund was the liberation of Ireland from English rule.

O'Donovan Rossa, now nearing his eighty-third year, is said to be dying of rheumatism and complications at 194 Richmond terrace, New Brighton, Staten Island, where he lives in a queer ramshackle cottage with his wife and three daughters, says a correspondent.

At the end of a stormy life he is in comparative poverty, and the Irish societies are about to give him a substantial testimonial in recognition of his perfervid patriotism, which led to imprisonment and banishment.

In the "Life in Prison," published from 5 Barclay street in 1899, Rossa wrote:

"England has proclaimed war against me and forbids me to tread my native land, and so help me God, I will wage war against her until she is stricken to her knees or until I am stricken to my grave."

O'Donovan Rossa is as uncompromising today as he was in the days when he was confined in a dungeon with his hands tied behind his back, eating his scant rations from the floor. He was always a physical force, having little sympathy with those who sought for and gained compromise.

Born in County Cork in 1831, his father, who was in fairly good circumstances, sent him to school until 1844. Then came crop failures and agitations, followed by troublous times in Ireland. He became part of the young Ireland movement. His mother, brothers and sisters emigrated to Philadelphia and he was left alone at Skibbereen, apprenticed to a kinsman who had a store. In a short time young O'Donovan had a store of his own and was a leader in the patriotic movement, fanned by the fenian leaders.

In 1858 he became a full member and in the next year he served his first term in Cork jail. His business was ruined, his country demoralized. Still in the revolutionary movement, he traveled over Ireland, England and Scotland organizing Fenian bands.

In 1863, Ireland becoming too hot for him, he came here on a visit. He went back after a few months, became involved in an aggressive campaign and fell into the hands of the English authorities, and from 1865 to 1871 he was in jail. He was released only to be banished from Great Britain and her possessions.

In this country he published a newspaper, wrote books, traveled and lectured. Through correspondence and influence and funds he collected, he still kept things stirred up in his native land, although thousands of miles away from it.

The New York newspapers of February 3, 1885, recounted the shooting of Rossa in Chambers street by Yseulte Dudley, an English trained nurse, who resented his utterance at a meeting held in "Dynamite Row," which was near Rossa's office.

In 1891 the edict of banishment was raised and Rossa returned to Cork, where he was made clerk of the county council at a comfortable salary. Queen Victoria, as a jubilee favor, granted him a full pardon.

In the meantime, less strenuous arguments than O'Donovan Rossa's have impelled the British house of commons to pass an Irish home rule bill, the third reading having been carried by a vote of 367 to 257.

WORD CAUSES CHURCH ROW

Church Upset by Rector's Criticism of Young Woman's Rendition of "The Holy City."

Huntington, L. I.—The Episcopal church community here is perturbed to an amusing extent over the criticism which Rev. Charles S. Cragg, rector of St. John's church, directed against a young woman soloist who sang the word Jerusalem as "Jer-u-see-lum" in the rendition of "The Holy City" at an entertainment by the Huntington Historical society.

So shocked was the rector at the way the word was intoned he straightway sat down and wrote a note to Miss Gladys Dean of Ohio, the soloist, and declared it made the whole number "an object of ridicule to many." He declared that the syllable "sa" should be pronounced as if it were "ser" or "sar."

The controversy which ensued has by no means subsided and church members, finding dictionaries unavailing, are still swapping opinions.

Telltale Mirrors Are Removed.

Philadelphia.—The telltale mirrors in the halls of the Bellevue-Stratford will be removed. Recently a divorce decree was granted on the evidence given by a monitor girl, who told what she saw in the mirrors. The hotel managers do not wish to become involved in any scandals.

"All the same he is a guest, and no rough work goes. I'm in charge while Mr. Chapin is away, and I'm responsible."

"Senor Bill," Carara ventured, "the fat vaquero, he is no guest. He is one of us."

"That's right," seconded Willie "He's told us all along that Mr. Speed was a Merc-ry-footed wonder, and if the young feller can't run he had ought to have told us."

Mr. Cloudy showed his understanding of the discussion by nodding silently.

"We'll put it up to him in the morning," said Stover.

"If Mr. Speed cannot r-r-run, w'at you do, eh?" questioned the Mexican.

Nobody answered. Still Bill seemed at a loss for words, Mr. Cloudy stared gloomily into space, and Willie ground his teeth.

On the following morning Speed sought a secluded nook with Helen, but no sooner had he launched himself fairly upon the subject uppermost in his mind than he was disturbed by a delegation of cowboys, consisting of the original four who had waited upon him that first morning after his arrival. They came forward with grave and serious mien, requesting a moment's interview. It was plain there was something of more than ordinary importance upon their minds from the manner in which Stover spoke, but when Helen quickly volunteered to withdraw, Speed checked her.

"Stay where you are; I have no secrets from you," said he. Then noting the troubled face of the foreman, quoted impatiently:

"'You may fire when ready, Gridley.'"

Still Bill shifted the lump in his cheek, and cleared his throat before beginning formally.

"Mr. Speed, while we honor you a heap for your accomplishments, and while we believe in you as a man and a champeen, we kind of feel that it might make you stretch your legs some if you knew just exactly what this foot-race means to the Flying Heart outfit."

"I assured you that the Centipede cook would be beaten," said the college man, stiffly.

"Isn't Mr. Speed's word sufficient?" inquired the girl.

Stover bowed. "It had sure ought to be, and we thank you for them new assurances. You see, our spiritual unrest is due to the fact that Hungry Joe's get-away left us broke, and we banked on you to pull us even. That first experience strained our credulity to the bustin' point, and—well, in words of one syllable, we come from Joplin."

"Missouri," said Willie.

"My dear sirs, I can't prove that you are going to win your wagers until the day of the race. However, if you are broke to start with, I don't see how you can expect to lose a great deal."

"You ain't got the right angle on the affair," Stover explained. "Outside of the onbearable contumely of losin' twice to this Centipede outfit, which would be bad enough, we have drawn a month's wages in advance, and we have put it up. Moreover, I have bet my watch, which was presented to me by the officials of the Santa Fe for killin' a pair of road-agents when I was depity sheriff."

Miss Blake uttered a little scream, and Speed regarded the lanky speaker with new interest.

"It's a Waltham movement, solid gold case, eighteen jewels, and engraved with my name."

"No wonder you prize it," said Wally.

"I bet my saddle," informed Carara, in his slow, soft dialect. "Stamp' leather wit' silver filagree. It is more dear to me than—well—I love it ver' much, senor!"

"Seems like Willie has made the extreme sacrifice," Stover followed up. "While all our boys has gone the limit, Willie has topped 'em all; he's bet his gun."

"Indeed! Is it a good weapon?"

"It's been good to me," said the little man, dryly. "I took it off the quivering remains of a sheriff in Dodge City, up to that time the best hip shot in Kansas."

Speed felt a cold chill steal up his spine, while Miss Blake went pale and laid a trembling hand upon his arm.

"You see it ain't intrinsic value so much as association and sentiment that leads to this interview," Stover continued. "It ain't no joke—we don't joke with the Centipede—and we've relied on you. The Mex here would do murder for that saddle." Carara nodded, and breathed something in his own tongue. "I have parted with my honor, and Willie is gamblin' just as high."

"But I notice Mr.—Willie still has his revolver."

"Sure I got it!" Willie laughed, abruptly. "And I don't give it up till we lose, neither. That's the understandin'." His voice was surprisingly harsh for one so high-pitched. He looked more like a professor than ever.

"Willie has reasons for his caution which we respect," explained the spokesman.

J. Wallingford Speed, face to face with these serious-minded gentlemen, began to reflect that this foot-race was not a thing to be taken too lightly.

"I can't understand," he declared, with a touch of irritation, "why you should risk such priceless things upon a friendly encounter."

"Friendly!" cried Willie and Stover in a tone that made their listeners gasp. "The Centipede and the Flying Heart is just as friendly as a pair of wild boars."

"You set, it's a good thing we wised you up," added the latter.

Carara muttered fiercely: "Senor, I worka five year' for that saddle. I am a good gambler, si, si! but I keel somebody biffore I lose it to the Centipede."

"And is that Echo phonograph worth all this?" inquired Helen.

"We won that phonograph at risk of life and limb," said Willie, doggedly, "from the Centipede—"

"—and twenty other outfits, senor."

"It's a trophy," declared the foreman, "and so long as it ain't where it belongs, the Flying Heart is in disgrace."

"Even the 'Leven X treats us scornful!" cried the smallest of the trio angrily. "We're a joke to the whole state."

"I know just how these gentlemen must feel," declared Miss Blake, tactfully, at which Stover bowed with grateful awkwardness.

"And it's really a wonderful instrument," said he. "I don't reckon there's another one like it in the world, leastways in these parts. You'd ought to hear it—clear as a bell—"

Carara Followed With a Huge Wooden Tub.

"And sweet," said Willie. "God! It's sure sweet!"

"I begin to feel your loss," said Speed gravely. "Gentlemen, I can only assure you I shall do my best."

"Then you won't take no chances?" inquired Willie, mildly.

"You may rely upon me to take care of myself."

"Thank you!" The delegation moved away.

"What d' you think of him?" inquired Stover of the little man in glasses, when they were out of hearing.

"I think he's all right," Willie hesitated, "only kind of crazy, like all eastern boys. It don't seem credible that no sane man would dast to bluff after what we've said. He'd be flyin' in the face of Providence."

But this comforting conclusion wavered again, when Berkeley Fresno, who had awaited their report, scoffed openly.

"He can't run! If he could run he'd be running. I tell you, he can't run as fast as a sheep can walk."

"Senor, you see those beautiful medal he have?" expostulated Carara.

"Sure," agreed Willie. "His brisket

Retreated Cautiously From the Shelter of a Thicket.

was covered with 'em. He had one that hung down like a dewlap."

"Phony!"

"I've killed men for less," muttered the stoop-shouldered man.

"Did you see his legs?" Fresno was bent upon convincing his hearers.

"Couldn't help but see 'em in that runnin' suit."

"Nice and soft and white, weren't they?"

"They didn't look like dark meat," Stover agreed, reluctantly. "But you can't go nothin' on the looks of a feller's legs."

"Well, then, take his wind. A runner always has good lungs, but I'll bet if you snapped him on the chest with a rubber band he'd cough himself to death."

"Mebbe he ain't in good shape yet." Fresno sneered. "No, and he'll never get into good condition with those girls hanging around him all the time. Don't you know that the worst thing in the world for an athlete is to talk to a woman?"

"That's the worst thing in the world for anybody," said Willie, with cynicism. "But how can we stop it?"

"Make him eat as well as sleep in his training quarters; don't let him spend any time whatever in female company. Keep your eyes on him night and day."

Willie spoke his mind deliberately. "I'm in favor of that. If this is another Humpy Joe affair I'm a-goin' to put one more notch in my gun-handle, and it looks like a cub bear had chawed it already."

"There ain't but one thing to do," Stover announced, firmly. "We've got to put it up to Mr. Glass and learn the truth."

"You'll find him in the bunk-house," directed Fresno. "I think I'll trail along and hear what he has to say."

CHAPTER IX.

GLASS had gone to the cowboys' sleeping quarters in search of his employer, and was upon the point of leaving when the delegation filed in. He regarded them with careless contempt, and removed his clay pipe to exclaim, cheerfully:

"B—zoo gents! Where's my protege?"

"I don't know. Where did you have it last?"

"I mean Speed, my trainin' partner. That's a French word."

"Oh! We just left him."

"Think I'll hunt him up."

"Wait a minute." Willie came forward. "Let's talk."

"All right. We'll visit. Let her go, professor."

"You've been handlin' him for quite a spell, haven't you?"

"Sure! It's my trainin' that put him where he is. Ask him if it ain't."

"Then he's a good athlete, is he?"

"Is he good? Huh!" Glass grunted, expressively.

"How fast can he do a hundred yards?"

Larry yawned as if this conversation bored him.

"Oh—about—eight—seconds."

At this amazing declaration Willie paused, as if to thoroughly digest it.

"Eight seconds!" repeated the little man at length.

"Sure! Depends on how he feels, of course."

Berkeley Fresno, in the corner, snickered audibly, at which the trainer scowled at him.

"Think he can't do it, eh? Well, he's there four ways from the ace."

Seeing no evidence that his statement failed to carry conviction in other quarters at least, Glass went further. It was so easy to string these simple-minded people that he could not resist the temptation.

"Didn't you never hear about the killin' he made at Saratoga?" he queried.

Willie started, and his hand crept slowly backward along his belt. "Killin'! Is that his game?"

"Now, get me right," explained the former speaker. "He breaks trainin', and goes up to Saratoga for a little rest. While he's there he wins eight thousand dollars playin' diabolo."

"Playin' what?" queried Stover.

"Diabolo! He backs himself, of course."

Glass took an imaginary spool from his pocket, spun it by means of an imaginary string, then sent it aloft and pretended to catch it dexterously. The cowboys watched him with grave, uncomprehending eyes.

"He starts with a case five and runs it up to eight thousand dollars, that's all."

Stover uttered an exclamation of astonishment, whereupon the New Yorker grew even bolder.

"The next week he hops over to Bar Harbor and wins the futurity ping-pong stakes from scratch. That's worth twenty thousand if it's worth a lead nickel. Oh, I guess he's there, all right!" He searched out a match and relighted his pipe.

"I suppose he's a great croquet player, too," observed Fresno, whose face was purple.

"Sure!" Glass winked at him, glad to see that the Californian enjoyed this kind of sport.

"We don't care nothin' about his skill at sleight-of-hand tricks," said the man in spectacles, seriously. "And we wouldn't hold his croquet habits agin him. Some men drink, some gamble, some do worse; every man has his weakness, and croquet may be his. What we want to know is this: Can he win our phonograph?"

"Surest thing you know!"

There are few twentieth century Isaiahs. Nowadays, when the Lord asks, "Whom shall I send?" men don't say, "Here am I, send me"—they send their wives.—Woltman.

ORGANIZATION OF BOY SCOUTS COUNCIL

Perfected at Meeting of Citizens Last Evening—Addresses by Judge Stone and E. O. Loomis

In accordance with a notice published in the JOURNAL by a committee on organization a public meeting was held last night in Concert hall to consider the expediency of organizing a local council of the Boy Scouts of America. It was unfortunate that the weather was so inclement as to prevent the attendance of many who were desirous of hearing about the project. Those present, however, were much interested in the presentation of the subject and unanimous in favoring the organization. The meeting was called to order by the Chairman of the committee, and on nomination from the floor Mr. William F. Davis was elected as the presiding officer. Dr. F. O. West was elected secretary.

The first speaker was Judge Arthur P. Stone of Cambridge. Judge Stone began his remarks by disclaiming any official connection whatever with the Boy Scouts. His interest in the movement had arisen through his observation of the activities of the scouts in connection with his experience of ten years as a justice of a police court. His work had been largely confined to the juvenile session, and thereby he had been brought into close contact with present day problems and tendencies of boy life. He felt that conditions were greatly changed since the time of his own boyhood, and that the boy of the present day does not have as free or as wholesome an opportunity to indulge the natural instincts of boy nature. His plea was that the boy should not be deprived of the play time of his life which was every boy's right. At the same time he recognized that there must under present conditions be more attention given to providing proper conditions under which the boy may have his good time. He urged that it was much better that we should be forehanded in the matter, and not wait until the boy was brought to the police court before we began his education. He adduced many interesting cases from his own experience which went to show that many boys came to the notice of the law who were not essentially vicious, but merely because there had been no proper direction given to their youthful energies. His judgment of boys was very optimistic and sympathetic, and he asserted that there were comparatively few who were naturally depraved. The Boy Scout plan, he said, was in no way a fad with him. He saw in it a sane and wholesome way of helping to better conditions.

Judge Stone was followed by Mr. E. O. Loomis, secretary of the Boston council. The latter speaker dwelt briefly upon the general purposes of the organization, and answered specific questions from the floor as to details.

The meeting then proceeded to the election of a local council. A committee, having been appointed to draw up a list of nominations, presented the following names:

A. H. Linscott, G. I. Clapp, William F. Davis, O. M. Bean, James F. McGovern, William Liedman, Leon L. Dorr, Elmer E. Silver, Roland Dow, G. H. Evans, Beecher Powers, M. H. Cotton, W. E. Blodgett, F. O. West, A. W. Parker, Bernard Peterson, G. W. Low, G. L. Hosmer, Ernest Newman, C. F. Budd, Captain F. C. Kean, and J. A. Provest.

In selecting this list of names great care was exercised to secure representatives of different interests and sections of the city.

It is expected that the council will meet and organize at an early date, when further announcement will be made of the progress of the movement.

MIDDLESEX CENTRAL POMONA GRANGE

Regular Monthly Meeting held at Saugus Yesterday

The regular meeting of Middlesex Central Pomona Grange was held at Saugus yesterday, the meeting being called to order at 10.30 a. m. in Knights of Pythias hall by Master Frank T. Marston of Everett. The address of welcome was given by Wilbur Newhall, past master of Saugus, and responded to by John R. Comley Master of Bedford grange. Mr. Newhall in reminiscenses of Saugus said the first female seminary in this country was founded in Saugus and that President Eliot of Harvard college was employed as chore boy in that seminary and that his parents are buried in Saugus cemetery. Roll call and reports from Granges showed that the following granges were represented: Acton, Bedford, Concord, Everett, Lexington, Lincoln, Sudbury, Wakefield, Waltham, Weston Woburn, Camden, Me., North Reading.

Master Frank T. Marston gave notice of a Grange Rally day to be held in Faneuil hall, Boston, on October 30, 1913, for the purpose of conferring the sixth degree. As the state grange has discontinued conferring the fifth degree, the Pomona granges must attend to that degree and have a large class ready to take the degree on October 30, 1913 in Faneuil hall.

State master Charles M. Gardner called attention to the State meeting to be held in Tremont Temple on December 9, 10, 11, and stated that the sixth degree would be conferred at that time. There will also be in session at this time, an exhibit in Lorimer hall, when the best of everything grown in the soil of this state will be on exhibition. One hundred and ten grangers of eastern Massachusetts will each make a specialty of one article, and perfection will be expected in all details. The afternoon session was open to the public and was called to order at 2 o'clock by Worthy Lecturer E. Horace Perley of Wakefield. A chorus of young women sang grange songs and there were readings by Miss Martha Wilson of Wakefield. This meeting was very fortunate in having secured George H. Ellis, father of the celebrated Ellis milk bill to speak. The bill was clearly defined in his remarks. He spoke of the desirability of having control of all out-of-state milk, control of unsatisfactory dairies, and in order to keep the confidence of consumers, a higher price for milk is necessary as labor and feed are twice what they used to be; certified milk from 15 cents to 20 cents a quart was the desirable thing, and people should be educated up to this standard.

State Master Gardner followed Mr. Ellis, and in a quiet, forceful manner, showed to the satisfaction of the grangers present, the flaws in and the undesirability of the Ellis bill for the milk producers of today. At the close of the discussion a vote was taken which showed only one in favor of the Ellis bill. Miss Viola Foss of Concord rendered piano solos, Geo. Atherton of Salem spoke of the doings of the Probate court, Mrs. Amelia Stanley of Waltham read a paper on "A trip to Chinatown" and Frederick Taylor of Concord, a vocal solo. Mr. Glover of Danvers was greatly enjoyed in recitations.

It was announced that at the Reading-Wakefield fair this fall, in addition to the five granges who competed for prizes last year there would be three more, Reading, Lynnfield and Stoneham, and at Billerica a state contest will be held this fall at which $100 prizes will be given to all raising 102 bushels of corn or over to the acre.

A rising vote of thanks was given Saugus grange 292 for the royal hospitality extended and the meeting closed with singing America.

WILMINGTON

The last Farmers' Institute of the season was held yesterday in Grange hall. Considering the weather there was a large attendance. In the morning W. H. Davenport of Colerain spoke on "Handling Hens for Utility Only." He handles his subject in a very able manner and gave many points of helpfulness to the poultry raiser. Dinner was served at 12.30, about 100 sitting down. After dinner speaking and readings were enjoyed. Miss Arey giving a well received reading. Mr. Davenport, W. Wallace Davies of Reading, and Mr. Trull of Tewksbury gave addresses. After dinner speaking the meeting was again adjourned to the upper hall.

Miss Arey of Boston gave another reading taken from the play "Miss Civilization" by Richard Harding Davis, followed by one of Joseph C. Lincoln's "Cape Cod Ballads." Mr. Davenport was again introduced and spoke on "The Sunny Side of the Farm." He said there were three kinds of weather, stormy weather, sunny weather, and cloudy weather, and three kinds of work, stormy work, sunny work and cloudy work, and the farm was no place for a lazy man. He said there was plenty of room on the farm for the boy, "Give the boy a farm all his own you can't make a man of him any easier." He said that of 50 farmers whom he had asked the question "What is the sunniest thing on the farm?" the most common answer was "The privilege of being your own boss," and second "the privilege of being near and with animal life." He displayed over 20 ribbons which he has won at Poultry shows with the old "Dominiker" hen. He finished by saying he might spend a whole day telling about the products of the farm, but the best product is "True manhood."

One incident of the day that appeared funny to all except the victim was that a gentleman from Tyngsboro unhitched his horse from his wagon and tied him in the horse sheds. The horse evidently not liking his surroundings, slipped his halter and started for home where he arrived later in the day.

The High school baseball schedule is completed containing 12 games:

A certain man purchased a setting of eggs for $15, from which he hatched five cockerels and four pullets. He selected the best cockerel, put him with the four pullets into a Poultry Show, got first prize, and was offered $750 for the five birds.

You have the same chance. To be "at the top" is old fashioned now. The struggle of modern times is to "aviate," soar above the fellow at the top, knock him off his perch, and make a new high record.

To avinte in the poultry business you must have the goods. Get the best eggs you can buy—if only a few, three or four or more—and get them early so they will be fully matured for the Fall Shows.

S. C. White Orpingtons have captured the public heart all over the world. They have a record, point for point, that can't be beaten. Get your eggs from the best pen of the best breed that ever scratched for their living, and they will scratch for yours.

My pen of S. C. White Orpingtons took first at Boston, January 7, 1913. I can furnish eggs from this pen at 60 cents each, one or more as you may want, and baby chicks at 90 cents each. Others at 30 cents each for eggs and 45 cents each for chicks. Get them early and try your luck.

WELCOME THE BOY SCOUTS

The widespread interest in the formation of a local branch of the Boy Scouts of America is creditable to the community. The movement elsewhere has grown because it is founded on the rational basis of a sympathetic appeal to the boy nature.

The average boy is bubbling over with a desire to investigate. He is, if he is a real boy with good red blood in his veins, a restless creature constantly looking for an outlet for his enthusiasm. When he plays, he plays hard. When he studies, he studies diligently. He is thoroughly in earnest.

The Boy Scout movement purposes to direct this restless, investigating nature of the boy into channels, where instruction goes hand in hand with play. Under trained guidance the boy is interested in matters that count, matters that will prove of future use, that will develop his faculties and train his head and hand.

There is evidence that several groups or classes of the organization will be recruited here. Plans are being formulated for the early institution of the order. It cannot be pushed too vigorously. The boys will do their part.

HOGAN ANNOUNCES TEAM

Alderman Dennis P. Hogan has announced his team of aldermanic bowlers who meet the Police at Flanders' alleys next Patriot's day.

His team consists of Dennis Blake, Frank Navin, Parker Poole, Ellis Marshall, Dennis Hogan, and Joseph Devlin as substitute. Now let the coppers beware.

Navin and Blake were practicing Thursday and yesterday evenings and some pretty scores were piled up. Frank and the two "Dennies" are sure some kids for making the pins fly. They aren't satisfied with bowling in the evenings only but at lunch hour in the big village (Boston) every day, these raving fans squeeze out time to roll several strings to keep in condition. Keep your eyes open, ladies and gents.

Supreme Court Affirms Master's Finding in Famous Case

The issue this week of the Banker and Tradesman contains a decision by the full bench of the Massachusetts Supreme Court in the cases of Lovejoy and W. Frank Fowle against Bailey and others. The cases have been in litigation for several years, and involved the legality of the foreclosure and other transactions connected with the old firm of Fowle Brothers and company.

The master to whom the cases were first referred found that the sale of the partnership business of Fowle Brothers and company to Clemson-Bailey and company was for the purpose of defrauding Fowle and Lovejoy, and that the foreclosure of mortgage of real and personal property and sale to Clemson, together with the sale by Bailey in the name of Fowle Brothers and company, and sales by Blendinger to the Bailey-Blendinger manufacturing company was all made in pursuance of a fraudulent scheme to defraud Fowle and Lovejoy.

The master found that Fowle was not insane at the time of the transactions but did find that he was overreached and defrauded.

The full bench of the supreme court has now upheld the findings and conclusions of the master, and has held that Fowle is to have a decree against the defendants for the amount found due to him, Mayberry, Hallowell and Hammond with George W. Norris of this city were counsel for the defendants, Bailey, Blendinger and Clemson, and J. C. Coit was attorney for Fowle.

WOMAN'S CLUB LECTURE

Mr. Albert Edward Wiggam, "The Apostle of Efficiency," lectured before the Woman's club yesterday afternoon. His talk was a combination of his two lectures "Dollars and Sense" and "Forty Kinds of Fools." The proper title he said should be "The Cradle and the Nation." He made an earnest plea for wiser motherhood. The biggest fact in all civilization was the nervous system of the child. Everything depends upon the way the baby is fed. 200,000 babies died in 1910 who might have been saved. What we do with this human child will measure the future civilization of the world. There were in all thirty-three departments in college for the study and advancement of animals and only one for the study of the child. Mothers should be educated how to care for their babies.

Of all the babies born, one out of every twenty dies because of a stupid and foolish mother. In Germany they have passed a law to fine mothers who will not nurse their babies. Germany must have soldiers. Most of the diseases such as tuberculosis, diphtheria, rheumatism, kidney diseases, etc., are due to neglect to properly care for children. Nearly all crime and drunkenness is traceable to the same cause, also the alarming increase in feeblemindedness. Young children's throat nose and ears must be under constant inspection. The first teeth must not be neglected. He closed by saying that it was a straight line from the physical defects of a child to the door of the penetentiary.

"TOP O' THE MORN'IN" AT THE TREMONT

A happy mingling of sentiment and humor produced in the fashion characteristic of Henry W. Savage and performed by a cast of really notable players led by such distinguished individuals at Tim Murphy and Gertrude Quinlan; that is "Top O' The Mornin' " which begins a limited engagement at the Tremont theatre on Monday, March 24. There will be the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees. "Top O' The Mornin' " is the work of Anna Caldwell whose reputation as a writer of humor is established. There are thrills as well as laughs in "Top O' The Mornin' ". The story has to do with one "Jerry" O'Donnell an Irish lass lately arrived in the United States to make her home with her relatives. In the part of "Jerry" O'Donnell, Miss Quinlan has a role which seems to have been written with her especially in mind for its portrayal.

Tim Murphy characterizes Father Quinn, the old priest. Thurlow Bergen is the young lawyer, George LeGuere the graceless brother, and every one of the score of other characters is in hands as capably fitted for its handling. The last act scene showing a "Kerry" fair in a recreation park teems with lightf color and action. During the progress of the fair, there are tugs of war, piping contests, dancing contests and every other bit of activity that could be discovered upon the program of a real Kerry fair.

LAST WEEK OF "THE PINK LADY" AT THE COLONIAL

At the Colonial theatre, Boston, on Monday evening, March 24, that most delightful musical comedies "The Pink Lady" which has been the most talked of success of the past and present season in Boston, New York and London, will begin the last week of its Boston engagement.

Some musical plays are rich in musical numbers, but lack in story, while others, with a good story, lack in fetching music. "The Pink Lady" more so than any other play of its sort, is happy both in its book and music. However, even without a note of music it would be a highly diverting farce.

The music is exceptionally fascinating, and such numbers as "Beautiful Lady," "The Girl by the Saskatchawan," "The Kiss Waltz," "Donny Did, Donny Didn't" and "Hide and Seek" linger long in memory.

Presented with the original New York and London cast and a beauty chorus of sixty. Matinees wil be given on Wednesday and Saturday.

"THE ROUND UP" AT THE BOSTON THEATRE

Back to the Boston theatre, and for another wonderful engagement without doubt, beginning Easter Monday, March 24, comes Maclyn Arbuckle in Klaw & Erlanger's massive production of Edmund Day's vivid and stirring play of Western life, "The Round Up." Bigger and more wonderful than ever in its great scenes and its marvelous battle scene, with its great cast headed by Maclyn Arbuckle as the sheriff, and with the cowboys, Indians and bronchos it will again be a supremely sensational and popular Easter attraction for theatre goers from far and near so great is the demand for seats for those living at a distance from Boston that a special bureau has been established for the expeditious handling of mail orders, which when sent with cash or mondy order and accompanied by address, stamped envelope receive immediate attention. Regular matinees Wednesday and Saturday. Popular prices will prevail during "The Round Up" engagement.

ANNIVERSARY WEEK AT B. F. KEITH'S THEATRE

Exactly nineteen years ago next Monday, March 24, the doors of B. F. Keith's beautiful theatre were thrown open to the public for the first time. For the week beginning with the anniversary of thie epoch-making event in the history of American vaudeville, Mr. Keith has arranged a stupendous all-star bill, one that is thoroughly typical of the tremendous strides made in vaudeville in the past two decades. Henry Woodruff, the popular legitimate actor, and former star of "Brown of Harvard," will make his vaudeville debut in a one act comedy playlet by John Stokes, entitled, "A Regular Business Man." This is a merry comedy dealing with the mishaps that befell a young millionaire who decides to break into business via his father's office, "just like a regular business man." The youngster succeeds in his purpose. He not only becomes a regular business man, but wins the heart and hand of a pretty stenographer in his father's office. The novelty of the week will be Travailla Brothers and their wonderful Diving Seal, "Winks," who performs most startling feats beneath the water in a mammoth glass tank. W. C. Fields, the silent humorist, just returned from Europe will be another big feature, and Dolly Connolly and Percy Wenrich, the song writer, have a series of new popular song hits. James Leonard and company will present "When Ham Lets Her," an amusing travesty on Shakespeare's immortal tragedy; Morgan, Hayes and Morgan, rathskeller entertainers; Dooley and Parkerin Odd Funnyosites, The Granscoms, in a novel specialty, and the wonderful Thomas A. Edison talking motion pictures with all new subjects.

Orlando, Fla.—Seated in a barber stand in the public square, in the presence of scores of townsfolk assembled for the event, Sode Hill, an aged resident of Orlando, recently had his first haircut in 16 years.

During the 1896 campaign Hill made a pledge to allow his locks to grow untrimmed until a Democrat became president of the United States.

Folowing the slipping of the hair, Hill made a speech to his fellow townsmen in which he declared that the pleasure of parting with his superabundance of hair was not more welcome than the assurance that a Democrat at last had taken up his residence in the White House.

Mystic Crystal Sphere Is Morgan's Gift to Museum.

Water-Pure Globe Venerated for Centuries in the Orient Now Where Visitors Gaze Into Its Liquid Depths.

New York.—The Museum of Natural History recently has acquired a "mystic crystal sphere"—a silver-mounted globe of quartz, water-pure and of wonderful symmetry. This curious bauble for centuries has bene regarded with veneration and even fear by people of the far east. Unknown powers of hallucination lurk within its limpid depths, and this has been utilized by wizard and seer with no little profit in bygone days.

The crystal is the gift of J. Pierpont Morgan. Nearly five inches in diameter, it is absolutely devoid of flaw, cloud, stain or irregularity, and even the most cynical disbeliever in matters mystical cannot but admit a fascination, a subtle sense of the occult, when looking into its clear depths.

Where did it come from? What is its history? These are questions that must remain unanswered. About its glassy surface hangs strange delusions of prophecy and clairvoyance—tales of credulity and superstition that are not always scoffed at by the most scornful of scientific writers.

Fabulous are the weird stores told of its effect upon the lives of men and women. There was the young girl of San Saturn, who eloped with her sister's husband. She took a famous crystal—a family heirloom with her—and the morning after the escapade she was found lifeless on a couch with the crystal broken in a thousand pieces on the floor.

Probably the most expert crystal fashioners were the Japanese and Chinese of a thousand years ago! They had no labor-saving devices, but skill, patience and hereditary pride made up for their lack of mechanical tools.

The masses, at first rounded into globular form by chipping with small steel hammers, were subsequently ground down to an even surface with powdered garnet or emery. The last transformation polish was imparted by rubbing the surface with bamboo and with the hand, which had previously been dipped in a rough kind of rouge.

The largest and most perfect sphere known is kept in the Green Vault at Dresden. It weighs fifteen pounds and is seven inches in diameter.

The great value of the large spheres arises from the rarity of the quartz masses of desirable quality for their creation. The islands of Nippon and Fujiyama yield a superior grade of material, the fragments being uncovered in the gravel beds of ancient streams.

That the use of crystals by spiritualistic mediums is by no means of recent origin may be gathered from the observations of Garcia, a Spanish philosopher, who writes that "wise men among the natives practiced a sort of divination through the use of rock crystal and brought its influence to bear upon their crops."

BOYS BARRED AS ESCORTS

School Authorities Near Kiev Are Somewhat Strict in Matter—Teachers Also Hit.

Vienna, Austria.—The recent discussion and general opposition in Austria to coeducation in the schools and colleges of the dual monarchy has brought comparison to the working of this system of instruction in Russia.

Khorol, a town near Kiev, carries the banner for severe ordinances. Here, as in many provincial towns, boy pupils have been forbidden to go walking with the girl students in the streets, but the Khorol board of education followed this ordinance with an order prohibiting the teachesr also to be seen on the streets in company with the women, on the ground that they should furnish an example of proper conduct to their pupils. At a high school party held in Khorol during the holidays the school authorities at midnight segregated the boy pupils in a locked room, dismissed the girls unescorted, and released the young men only when time enough had elapsed for the young women to reach their homes.

Berlin Physicians to Try a Scheme to Gain a Rest—Only Few Are on Duty.

Berlin.—A scheme, which has long been considered by Berlin physicians, is to be tried out, in the Moabit district, when certain doctors will be appointed to answer all calls between noon and midnight on Sunday.

It is planned to have different physicians serve each Sunday to the end that others may have a rest one day in the week. If it works out wel! it will probably be extended to the whole city.

Rockefeller Kin Stops at $1 Hotel.

Kansas City, Mo.—Frank S. Rockefeller, first cousin of the oil king and himself well supplied with material things, occupied a dollar room at the Sexton hotel when here on business regarding his 5,000-acre ranch near Russell, Kan. When he came to Kansas, 36 years ago, he had $200.

GOING SOME

"Then you vouch for him, do you?" Willie's eyes were bent upon the fat man with a look of searching gravity that warned Glass not to temporize.

"With my life!" exclaimed the trainer.

"You're on!" said the cowboy, with unexpected grimness.

"What d' you mean?"

But before the other could explain, Berkeley Fresno, who had sunk weakly into a chair at Larry's extravagant praise of his rival, afforded a diversion. The tenor had leaned back, convulsed with enjoyment when, losing his balance, he came to the floor with a crash. The sudden sound brought a terrifying result, for with a startled cry the undersized cowman leaped as if touched by a living flame. Like a flash of light he whirled and poised on his toes, his long, evil-looking revolver drawn and cocked, his tense face vulturelike and fierce. His eyes glared through his spectacles, his livid features worked as if at the sound of his own death-call. His whole frame was tense; a galvanic current had transformed him. His weapon darted toward the spot whence the noise had come, and he would have fired blindly had not Stover yelled:

"Don't shoot!"

Willie paused, and the breath crept audibly into his lungs.

"Who done that?" he asked, harshly.

Still Bill brought his lanky frame up above the level of the table.

"God 'lmighty! don't be so sudden, Willie!" he cried. "It was a accident."

But the gun man seemed unconvinced. With a cat-like tread he stole cautiously to the door, and stared out into the sunlight; then, seeing nobody in sight, he replaced his weapon in its resting place and sighed with relief.

"I thought it was the marshal from Waco," he said. "He'll never git me alive."

Stover addressed himself to Fresno, who had gone pale, and was still prostrate where he had fallen.

"Get up, Mr. Berkeley, but don't make no more moves like that behind a man's back. He most got you."

Fresno arose in a daze and mopped his brow, mumuring, weakly: "I—I didn't mean to."

Carara and Mr. Cloudy came out from cover whither they had fled at Willie's first movement.

"I dreamed about that feller agin last night," apologized the little man. "I'm sort of nervous, and any sudden noise sets me off."

As for Glass, that corpulent individual had disappeared as if into thin air; only a stir in one of the bunks betrayed his hiding place. At the first sight of Willie's revolver he had dived for a refuge and was now flattened against the wall, a pillow pressed over his head to deaden the expected report.

"Hey!" called the foreman, but Glass did not hear him.

"Seems to be gun-shy," observed Willie, gently.

Stover crossed to the bunk and laid a hand upon the occupant, at which a convulsion ran through the trainer's soft body, and it became as rigid as if locked in death. "Come out, Mr. Glass, it's all over."

Larry muttered in a stifled voice, "Go 'way!"

"It was a mistake."

He opened his tight-shut lids, rolled over, and thrust forth a round, pallid face. He saw Stover laughing, and beheld the white teeth of Carara, the Mexican, who said:

"Perhaps the Senor is sleepy!"

Finding himself the object of what seemed to him a particularly senseless joke, the New Yorker crept forth, his face suffused with anger. Strangely enough, he still retained the pipe in his fingers.

"Say, are youse guys tryin' to kid me?" he demanded, roughly. Now that no firearm was in sight, he was master of himself again; and seeing the cause of his undignified alarm leaning against the table, he stepped toward him threateningly. "If you try that again, young feller, I'll chip you on the jaw, and give you a long, dreamy nap." He thrust a short, square fist under Willie's nose.

That scholarly gentleman straightened up, and edged his way to one side, Glass following aggressively.

"You're a husky, ain't you?" said the little man, squinting up at the red face above him.

"Am I?" Glass snorted. "Take a good look!" With deliberate menace he bumped violently into the other. It was with difficulty he could restrain himself from crushing him.

Stover gasped and retreated, while Carara crossed himself, then sidled back of a bunk. Mr. Cloudy stepped silently out through the open door and held his thumbs.

"You start to kid me and I'll wallop you—"

"One moment!" Willie was transfigured suddenly. An instant since he had been a stoop-shouldered, short-sighted, insignificant person, more gentle mannered than a child, but in a flash he became a palpitating fury: an evil atom supercharged with such terrific venom that his antagonist drew back involuntarily. "Don't you make no threat'nin' moves in my direction, or you'll go East in an ice-bath!" He was panting as if the effort to hold himself in leash was almost more than he could stand.

"G'wan!" said Glass, thickly.

"You're deluded with the idea that the Constitution made all men equal, but it didn't; it was Mr. Colt." With a movement quicker than light the speaker drew his gun for the second time, and buried half the barrel in the New Yorker's ribs.

"Look out!" Glass barked the words, and undertook to deflect the weapon with his hand.

"Let it alone or it'll go off!"

Glass dropped his hand as if it had been burned, and stared down his bulging front with horrified, fascinated eyes.

"Now, listen. We've stood for you as long as we can. You've made your talk and got away with it, but from now on you're working for us. We've framed a foot-race, and put up our panga because you said you had a champeen. Now, we ain't sayin' you lied—'cause if we thought you had, I'd gun-shoot you here, now." Willie paused, while Glass licked his lips and undertook to frame a reply. The black muzzle of the weapon hovering near his heart, however, stupefied him. Mechanically he thrust the stem of his pipe between his lips while Willie continued to glare at him balefully. "You're boss is a guest, but you ain't. We can talk plain to you."

"Y—yes, of course."

"You said just now you'd answer for him with your life. Well, we aim to make you! We ain't a-goin' to lose this foot-race under no circumstances whatever, so we give you complete authority over the body, health, and speed of Mr. Speed. It's up to you to make him beat that cook."

"S-s-suppose he gets sick or sprains his ankle?" Glass undertook to move his body from in front of the weapon, but it followed him as if magnetized.

"There ain't a-goin' to be no accidents or excuses. It's pay or play, money at the tape. You're his trainer, and it's your fault if he ain't fit when he toes the mark. Understand?"

Willie lowered the muzzle of his weapon, and fired between the legs of Glass, who leaped into the air with all the grace of a gazelle. It was due to no conscious action on his part that the trainer leaped; his muscles were stimulated spasmodically, and propelled him from the floor

"Did you hear what I said?" demanded Willie, in a voice that sounded like the sawing of a meat bone.

Glass opened his mouth, and when no sound issued, nodded.

"And you understand?"

Again the trainer bobbed his head.

"Then I guess that's all. It's up to you." Willie replaced his gun, and the fat man threatened to fall. "Come on, boys!" The cowboys filed out silently, but on the threshold Willie paused and darted a venomous glance at his enemy. "Don't forget what I said about Mr. Colt and the equality of man."

"Yes, sir!—yes, ma'am!" ejaculated the frightened trainer, nervously. When they were gone he collapsed.

"They are rather severe, aren't they?" ventured Fresno.

"Severe!" cried the unhappy man "Why, Speed can't—" He was about to explain everything when the memory of Willie's words smote him like a blow. That fiend had threatened to kill him, Lawrence Glass, without preliminary if it became evident that a fraud had been practiced. Manifestly this was no place for hysterical confidences. Larry's mouth closed like a trap, while the Californian watched him intently. At length he did speak but in a strangely softened tone, and at utter variance with his custom.

Like a Flash His Revolver Leaped Out.

"Say, Mr. Fresno! Which direction is New York?"

"That way." Fresno pointed to the east, and the other man stared longingly out through the bunk-house window.

"It's quite a walk, ain't it?"

"Walk?" Berkeley laughed. "It's two or three thousand miles!" Glass sighed heavily. "Why do you ask?"

"Oh, nothin'. Jest gettin' homesick." He calmed himself with an effort, entered the gymnasium as if in search of something, and then set forth to find Speed.

That ecstatic young gentleman wrenched his gaze away from the blue eyes of Miss Blake to see his trainer signaling him from afar.

"What is it, Lawrence?"

"Got to see you."

"Presently."

"Nix! I got to see you now!" Glass' ruddy face was blotched, and he seemed to rest in the grip of some blighting malady. Beneath his arm he carried a tight-rolled bundle. Sensing something important back of this unusual demeanor, Speed excused himself and followed Larry, who did not trust to speech until they were alone in the gymnasium with the doors closed. Then he unrolled the bundle he carried, spread it upon the floor, and stepped into its exact center.

"Are you standing on my prayer-rug?" demanded his companion, angrily.

"I am! And from this on I'm goin' to make it work itself to death. She said a feller couldn't get hurt if he stood on it and said 'Allah.' Well, I'm goin' to wear it out."

"What's wrong?"

"Do you know what's goin' to happen to me if Covington don't get here and beat this cook?"

"Happen to you?"

"Yes, me! These outlaws have put it up to me to win this bet for them."

"Well, Covington can beat anybody."

"But Covington isn't here yet."

"Not yet, but—" The young man

"It's Up to You to Make Him Beat That Cook."

smiled. "You're not frightened, are you?"

"Scared to death, that's all," acknowledged the other. Then when his employer laughed openly, he broke out at a white-heat. "Joke, eh? Well, you'd better have a good laugh while you can, because Humpy Joe's finish will be a ten-course dinner to what you'll get if Covington misses his train."

"How easily frightened you are!"

"Yes? Well, any time people start shooting shots I'm too big for this earth. The hole in a gun looks as big as a gas-tank to me."

"But nobody is going to shoot you!" exclaimed the mystified college man.

"They ain't, hey? I missed the Golden Stairs by a lip not half an hour ago." With feverish intensity he told his narrow escape from destruction, the memory bringing a sweat of agony to his brow. "And the worst of it is," he concluded, "I'm 'marked' with guns. I've always been that way."

"Tut! tut! Don't alarm yourself. If Covington shouldn't come, the race will be declared off."

"No chance," announced the trainer, with utter conviction. "These thugs have made it pay or play, and the bets are down."

"You know I can't run."

"If he don't come, you'll have to!"

"Absurd! I shall be indisposed."

"If you mean you'll get sick, or sprain an ankle, or break a leg, or kill yourself, guess again. I'm responsible for you now. Something may go wrong with me, but nothin' is goin' to happen to you. My only chance to make a live of it is to get some one to outrun this cook. You're the only chance I've got, if Culver don't show, and the first law of nature ain't never been repealed."

"Self-protection, eh?"

"Exactly." Glass coughed thrice without result, stepped off the prayer-rug, rolled it up tightly; then, hugging it beneath his arm, went on: "That four-eyed guy slipped me a whole lot of feed-box information. Why, he's a killer, Wally! And he's got a cash-register to tally his dead."

"Notches on his gun-handle, I suppose?"

"So many that it looks like his wife had used it to hang pictures with. I tell you, he's the most deceitful rummy I ever seen. What's more, he's got the homicide habit, and the habit has got its eye on me." Glass was in deadly earnest, and his alarm contrasted so strongly with his former contemptuous attitude toward the cowboys that Speed was constrained to laugh again.

"It's the most amusing thing I ever heard of."

CHIEF TRACY STANDS BY HIS GUNS

Refuses to Reinstate Lieut. Madden and Gives His Reasons--Appeal To Court Monday

This morning Chief Engineer Frank E. Tracy filed with City Clerk McHugh notice that he would not reinstate in his former position in the fire department, Lieut. Edward J. Madden of hose company three whom he recently removed. The decision of the chief engineer is filed as a result of a hearing given to Madden last week, on the cause for removal, and at which Bernard J. Golden appeared as counsel for the deposed lieutenant. The communication from Chief Tracy to the city clerk follows:

March 22, 1913.

Bernard F. McHugh,
City Clerk.

Dear Sir:

On the evidence presented at the hearing which was held on Friday evening March 4, 1913, I find that Edward J. Madden on Sunday evening February 16, 1913, used disrespectful and insulting language to a superior officer, which he failed to disprove at this hearing. As he has offered no apology for his action on that evening, either before or since the hearing, I hereby order the notice of his removal from the position of call lieutenant affirmed.

Very truly yours,
Frank E. Tracy.

I further certify that I have mailed a copy of the above notice to Bernard J. Golden, counsel of record for Edward J. Madden.

Frank E. Tracy.

Attorney Golden said, after learning of the decision of the chief engineer that on Monday morning he would petition the justice of the Fourth District court as provided by Chapter 624, Acts of 1911, Revised laws of Massachusetts, asking the court to review the action of the chief engineer in removing Madden. The law under which Attorney Golden will proceed stipulates that in cases similar to the one in question, the person removed may within ten days after an adverse decision is rendered, request the court to review the case, and it is within the province of the presiding justice to affirm the action of removal or order reinstatement. The only probable action on Monday morning when Mr. Golden files his petition will be fixing of a date to hear the facts in the case. City Solicitor J. Fred Maloney will appear for the city.

Chief Tracy broke silence this morning for the first time since the controversy began, and told a representative of the JOURNAL that he had refrained from making a public statement because he knew that a hearing could be demanded under the law, and he preferred to wait until he had given the hearing before he gave the facts in the case to the press. The chief engineer states that the general impression that he removed Madden the day after the council meeting when Madden asked for an investigation of hose three conditions was erroneous. He says that on February 16, 1913 he was called on the telephone by Lieut. Madden, who asked him if he could spare time to come over at once to the hose house. The chief replied that he could not come immediately. After a brief conversation in which according to Chief Tracy, nothing was said to warrant it, without any provocation, Madden used language that was indecent and vulgar. As a result of the language used by Madden on the telephone the chief engineer sent for the lieutenant, and he called at the office of the chief on Tuesday evening, February 18. The chief in order to avoid any injustice to Madden asked him if he was the person with whom he had talked on the telephone and Madden replied that he was. Chief Tracy then told Madden that he had used language that was indecent and unbecoming a member of the fire department, and suggested that it would be better for all concerned if the lieutenant would resign his position. This Madden refused to do, and Chief Tracy then gave him until the following evening at 6 o'clock to resign. The chief says he did not receive any notice from Madden on the next day and that he then wrote and mailed to Madden notice of his dismissal from the service, the same to take effect at 6 o'clock on Thursday evening February 20, 1913, the night that the city council was requested by Madden to make an investigation. The chief says that he also sent a notification of the removal of Madden to Captain James McGovern, of company three.

Chief Tracy said further that he had acted in good faith in the proceedings to date, and that he was not averse to giving the public the facts. He said he realized that it was believed by most everybody that he removed Madden after the latter had asked for an investigation. He wanted to dissipate this impression in the public mind and said that he had absolute proof that Madden had been removed, and was no longer a member of the department before the city council met to act on the application for a hearing.

The outcome of the case in the courts will be watched closely and it is now quite likely that all the internal troubles in the hose three company leading up to the present complication will become public property.

LOONEY'S SHAVERS TRIM MURPHY'S OWLS

Two teams from Beggs and Cobb's tannery met at Flanders' alleys last night to do mortal combat. The "Shavers" captained by Henry Looney gave the "Owls," Joe Murphy's aggregation, a close shave and a haircut. It was a pretty tight squeeze in the third string, the victors only pulling out by one pin amid great excitement. Looney came in with a 109 string just breaking in with enough to put the total on his side. The other strings were won comfortably. There was something doing throughout the whole match. Captain Looney was high man with 117, and 314, he was the only man in the game to roll over the century mark. The summary:—

EVEN BREAKS IN K. OF C. SERIES

Each Team Scores Two Points in Red Sox—Tiger, and Pirate—Cans Matches

Last night was a big night at the Knight alleya in the K. of C. bowling games. After the Red Sox and Tigers for two hours had slammed the maples in all directions, each team showing everything it had in order to secure an advantage, they finished with honors evenly divided.

On the other alleys the Pirates and Cans were putting up a great contest, and the final count showed that two points won and two lost was the best that either team could do, so close was the bowling. The Cans looked good after the first couple of strings with two points to their credit, and perhaps might have been a little over confident in the last string of the match.

Right there was where the Pirates came with a rush and without any trouble wiped out the 11 pin lead for total held by their opponents. The Pirates' score in the last string was the highest in the match, and the Cans, no doubt, unnerved by the unexpected rally, seemed completely lost, and were beaten 57 pins, McColgan anchor for the team rolling 65, the lowest he has been credited with in a match game since the opening of the series. The results in both matches showed the teams so well matched that it is doubtful if the final standing in the league can be predicted until the last games of the series have been rolled. In the Red Sox-Tiger games, Lyons had high single and total, 100 and 280. Harkins was the star between the Pirates and Cans rolling 98 and 274. The scores:—

Can We Help You?
(As We Helped This Man)

Herbert O. Russell is a farmer in North Hadley, Mass., who turned a threatened loss, not only to himself but to his neighbors, into a highly profitable business transaction by making judicious use of the telephone toll lines. He is the Mr. Blank of the following story which appeared in TELEPHONE TOPICS. We use his name by permission:

A HADLEY PASTORAL.

The fertile fields of old Hadley are especially adapted for raising tobacco and onions and especially onions, which are usually a very profitable crop. This year the crop was larger than ever before—bumper to the nth. Prices at once slunk alarmingly until it came to be a grave question whether it was worth while to market the crop. Some farmers became discouraged and left the crop to rot in the fields. One gave the subject careful thought. While he was pondering the question his glance fell upon the telephone in his kitchen. Could that be the answer?

The next day he called on Manager Proctor for information. He secured full particulars about our toll facilities, then went home and planned a sales campaign by telephone. Each evening the family carefully studied the directories and made up a list of wholesale commission dealers in the large cities.

Early each morning Mr. Blank called them by telephone. Results were immediate and surprising. He made satisfactory terms in short order for the sale of his entire crop and before long he was shipping onions by the carload. After he disposed of his own crop, the commission merchants continued their demands for more onions, and Mr. Blank commenced buying his neighbors' crops which he sold at a good profit. As a result of his work he has sold twenty-one carloads of onions. It need not be added that he is extremely grateful for the resources of our telephone service.

Miss Elizabeth Bixby of Wellesley college was in this city yesterday.

There will be a regular meeting of the school committee tomorrow evening.

Major Wilford A. Walker of the High school battalion has been ill at his home in Burlington.

MOOSE HOME IN PROSPECT

Meeting Tonight to Discuss Permanent Quarters for New Organization

Tonight Woburn Lodge 1214 Loyal order of Moose will hold a meeting and the principal business will be taking initial stepa to provide a Moose home in this city. WIND DESTROYS LARGE MAPLE

Handsome Tree in Front of Corbett Residence, Chestnut Street Falls

The heavy wind this morning blew down the large maple tree in front of the house of Lyle C. Corbett, 5 Chestnut street. The tree was broken right close to the ground and were it not for the wires with which it came in contact while falling the building might have been badly damaged. The wires held the tree up and outside of a broken window the Corbett home was not injured. Workmen from the local moth department, and from the Edison light and telephone companies were busy all afternoon clearing away the deadwood and getting the wires back into place.

EASTER ECHOES FILL THE AIR

End of Lenten Season Observed with Song and Verse

The passing of the penitential season was fittingly observed in all local churches yesterday. From every pulpit were uttered words attuned to the happy joyous Easter tide, and children of the several Sunday schools held special services during the day in which the jubilant note told the story of glad awakening. At all the services there was a large attendance.

The feature of the Easter concert at the North Congregational church last evening was the presentation of the cantata "The Risen King," under the direction of Harold L. Child, with Wilbur F. Burleigh presiding at the organ. Contributing artists were: Miss Mabel Madsen, Miss Deborah Curtis and Mrs. Parker T. Poole sopranos, Mrs. Herbert C. Huntress contralto, Percy Acaster tenor, Bertram Cass and Earl Sylvestr bass. Prior to the cantata the program comprised: Organ prelude Faulkes' "Grand Chorus;" anthem, Gaines' "For Christ the Lord is Risen;" solo, Brackett's "O King Immortal", Miss Madsen; recitations by Eunice Wood and Mattie Creed; solo "It is Enough" from "Elijah", Mr. Acaster. The program throughout was one of marked musical excellence.

At the First Congregational church the young people gave a group of stories based on the devoted life of Livingstone the explorer. At the Unitarian the program comprised Easter music and recitations. The Methodist Sunday school program was made up of seasonable vocal selections, and recitations full of the Easter spirit. The cantata "The Glory of the Garden" was the principal number in the program at the Baptist church with Miss Marie Sorensen as soloist. Musical numbers and recitations made up the program at the Montvale Congregational. During the offertory there was a violin duet by Misses May Nason and Pearl Chase, Miss Helen Stockholm accompanist. The program at Trinity Episcopal was especially rich in the musical quality of the selections offered. Besides the regular services at Trinity Rev. Roy W. Magoun conducted two services at All Saints' Mission at Stoneham.

The programs as published in detail in Saturday's JOURNAL were faithfully carried out and won much approval for their superior musical quality. At all the churches the Easter floral decorations were an attractive background for the impressive exercises.

DEATH OF WELL KNOWN CHARACTER

Daniel H. Richards Passed Away at His Home Yesterday Aged 73

Daniel Hammond Richards died at his home, 25 Fairmount street yesterday morning of pneumonia. In his death the city loses a unique figure, an oldtime resident, and upright citizen.

Mr. Richards was born in Cambridge in June 1840, son of Daniel H. Richards. His mother's maiden name was Leathe. His father was a successful carpenter in Cambridge, and under his father's direction the son learned the trade. In later years he was known as an expert lather, and handled some heavy contracts. He was always accounted a man of the strictest ntegrity.

At the time of his death he was filling his 41st year of consecutive service as treasurer of the Unitarian Sunday school, a position of which he was very proud, and in which his honesty and correctness found the fullest expression. Mr. Richard's books of record are models of neatness. In addition to his financial record, Mr. Richards kept a diary in which is carefully set down all pastoral changes in the church, special sermons, events in church history, meteorological data, and striking happenings in the world at large.

Mr. Richards is survived by a daughter, Mrs. James Bruce Jr., of Springfield, Ill., a son, Albert Richards of Boston, and a brother, Edward H. Richards of Woburn. Funeral services will be held at his home, Tuesday at two o'clock.

STILL ALARMS KEEP FIREMEN BUSY

The general order of the day, yesterday, was calling for aid from Hose one to put out small fires. The calls kept the crew of that company on the steady jump. The first help was needed at 11.50 to put out a brush and grass fire in the rear of some houses at Nichols' corner. No damage and small loss of time.

The wagon had hardly reached the station from that call, when one came in at 12.30 for a brush fire on the side of Horn pond mountain, near the pumping station. Before it was extinguished it had damaged the roof of a pipe shed, to the extent of $25.

Another call came in at 2.15. A small brush fire was in progress on the side of Rag Rock near Houghton street. No damage and easily put out.

At 4 o'clock a call came to put out a brush fire near Tremont and Nashua streets in Montvale.

The final call of the day came at 6.40 to extinguish a chimney fire at the home of William J. Luck, 17 Union street.

TURN ON THE WATER

The dusty condition of the streets especially in the business section of the city would seem to call for some measure of relief from the department having the matter in charge. To the pedestrian whose eyes are blinded with dust, and the business man who is forced to see his stock of goods depreciated in value, a watering cart in commission would be a welcome sight.

The change from mud to dust was a quick one, the strong wind drying out the moisture very rapidly, and possibly the street department officials do not realize the conditions, but it is a matter that can be easily and quickly remedied. Turn the water into the standpipes, start out the water wagons, turn the sprinklers loose, and a dust-ridden community will rise up to bless you.

A Terse Summary of the Suffrage Question

Women Ought to be Spared Humiliation of Begging Voting Privilege

Says Albert B. Williams in the Philadelphia Ledger: "Can we not spare them this? Can we not amend the constitution with reasonable promptness to spare women the necessity of becoming unpleasantly persistent? Why should we wait for them to ask us at all for the right of suffrage? Is it necessary for us to know whether they want to vote or not? Is it necessary for us to calculate carefully whether their voting, in its immediate effect, will be beneficial? In regard to men we do not ask whether the unexperienced youth of 21 years of age wants to vote or not. We do not ask whether they will vote with the same wisdom and conscientiousness as their fathers. We simply take it for granted that the privilege of casting the ballot will be an important factor in the development of their patriotism and of ultimate benefit to the community. We do not ask whether over busy business men or over idle men of leaisure will want to vote if they have the opportunity to do so, or will only vote when their own special interests are at stake.

We have confidence in a general way, in the political eficiency of the rights of suffrage. We can hardly feel at home or entirely comfortable in a community where a multitude of men have not as yet acquired the right to vote. We never expect to feel comfortable or entirely safe in a community where the women are permitted to remain politically our inferiors.

A national idealism at this time in the world's history is grotesque without the conception of equal votes for women. Our vaunted devotion to democracy is a farce if we cannot treat women in the spirit of fellowship as our equals. Woe to our political institutions, woe to our manhood, if we fail to give a hearty welcome to the advancing spirit of a nobler womanhood!"

CREMATION IS HELD "PAGAN"

Sharp Controversy Precipitated by Health Officials' Advocacy of Incineration as Best Method.

Washington.—Dr. W. C. Woodward, health officer of the District of Columbia, has precipitated a sharp controversy on the question of cremation, which is stirring church circles. Clergymen have taken up the matter and are denouncing as "pagan" such disposition of the dead. The controversy has reached the newspaper stage, and arguments for and against creation are finding their way into print.

"I believe it is the only sanitary way of disposing of the dead," said Dr. Woodward, "and surely it is the only poetic way. I hope to see cremation extended."

Monsignore William P. Russell, pastor of St. Patrick's Catholic church, declared that cremation "was against the teachings of Christianity." He declared that it was contrary to the tenents of Catholicism and that such disposition of the bodies of the departed was a reversal to the days of pagan Rome.

Several Protestant pastors voiced the same view.

URGES WORK FOR WOMAN

Claims Her Place in Some Definite Vocation or Profession Will Not Make Her Less Attractive.

Kansas City, Mo.—"Girls and young women should have occupations," said Rabbi Henry H. Mayer of B'Nai Jehudah temple, in a lecture on "The Independence of Women."

"The cessation of woman's being an equal sharer of the burden with man has made her a drone and a parasite," he said. "Women's field of labor has shrunk so that her status is only one degree better than that of the woman in the oriental harem.

"Women's entry into a definite vocation or profession and her rivalry in business will not make her less attractive to man. Men like to talk to independent women who know something of what is going on in the world."

MEN DOOMED BY FATE

Spanish Prime Minister Foretold His Own Death.

Wonderful Prognostications of Mahmoud, an Egyptian Astrologer, Were Verified, When Bourtos Pasha Was Slain.

London.—"I know that I am condemned to death, because I possess positive information that two anarchists have taken an oath to kill me. I know, further, that the anarchist who is to take my life is a man who was banished from Buenos Aires, and that he went thence to Paris and Biarritz, after which the police lost trace of him."

So spoke the late Senor Canalejas, the Spanish prime minister, on Nov. 8, 1912, in a conversation with an intimate friend, and four days later he was shot dead by an assassin while looking in at the window of a book shop.

It must be a terrible strain on nerves and pluck to feel, as so many have done, that the sword hangs over their head, suspended, as it were, by a single hair.

But such has been the fate of more than one public man during the past few years, and of scores in earlier days.

In February, 1910, Sheik Mahmoud, a well known Egyptian astrologer, went to Boutros Pasha, prime minister of Egypt, and told him that he foresaw his death at the hands of an assassin. Boutros believed the prophecy and, as every one knows, was foully murdered a few months later.

It is worth mentioning that Mahmoud put in print a prediction of the death of King Edward three months before it occurred. He said that it would come to pass in May.

By the way, he also foretold in 1910 that King George of Greece would annex three Turkish cities. This also has come true.

While on the subject of Turkey and the east, we may say that the late King Alexander of Servia fully believed that he would meet with a violent death.

Years earlier, in fact, when King Milan, Alexander's father, was on the throne, a Servian peasant predicted that Milan's reign would be one of many misfortunes, that he would wage an unsuccessful war, that he would marry, have one son and then be divorced. He ended by prophesying a violent death for the son.

Alexander, realizing how true the rest of the predictions had been, frequently spoke to his intimates of his coming end, but he could hardly have expected that it would have been attended by such horrors as were actually the case.

Of all modern stories of doom, none is so terrible as that of the Austrian noble family of Vetzera. The name will be familiar to all readers, because of the Baroness Marie Vetzera, for love of whom the Crown Prince Rudolf killed himself.

Every member of that family was beautiful and gifted, yet for generations ill-fate dogged them and none died a natural death,

Marie, it is believed, poisoned herself with strychnine, her brother, a fine young officer, was burnt to death in the awful conflagration at the Ring theater; the father, Baron Vetzera, fell dead of sunstroke in a Cairo street. Finally, Jeanne, countess of Bylandt, one of the most beautiful and accomplished women who ever lived, died suddenly in Rome.

Poison caused her death, but whether administered intentionally or not none can say.

New York.—Since the death of Mrs. Frederick K. Sachleben of Brooklyn, recently, it has become known that she and her husband William have made the strange arrangement to have their bodies cremated, their ashes mingled and scattered from the middle span of the Brooklyn bridge. The woman's body was taken to a crematory. The ashes will be placed in an urn and preserved until the death of her husband, at which time Ernest M. Friendrich, a son-in-law, will carry out the wishes of both.

ESCAPE RENT DAY 7 YEARS

Heirs of Late Landlord Found, New York Tenants Hear Homes Will Be Sold.

New York.—Rent days are due for the families who for more than seven years since the death of Frederick S. Copley on December 9, 1905, have been occupying free of charge three dwellings in South Prince street, Flushing. Copley, an Englishman, died on Staten Island, leaving no will.

After a world-wide search, Nelson Tunnicliffe, an attorney of this city, found the heirs in England, Africa and Australia. They have authorized the sale of the property.

Leaves His Partner $1,000,000.

New York.—Carrying out a compact made four years ago that whichever of the two died first should leave the other a million dollars, the will of the late George W. Crossman, a leader in the coffee market, leaves to his partner, Herman Sielcken, the sum agreed upon.

WILL AID CHILDREN

Five Hour Day Is Asked Workers in Massachusetts.

To Lead Country Again If Measure Pending In the Legislature Is Passed—Other States Aid Reform.

New York.—Massachusetts will again lead the country in one part of its child labor laws, according to the national child labor committee, if the bill to reduce the hours of work for all under sixteen years becomes law. Massachusetts now has a ten-hour day for workers under sixteen, which it is proposed to reduce at one step to a five-hour day, with the requirement that all child workers under sixteen shall attend a part time day school.

Other states, meanwhile, are wondering if they can establish the eight-hour day, and definite campaigns for this end are on in Arkansas, California, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Texas, West Virginia and elsewhere.

The committee points out that the bills which have already been introduced in Pennsylvania, Delaware and Texas all include the regulation of street trades provided in the uniform child labor law.

This allows no newsboy under twelve years and no other street trader under fourteen. It also forbids all girls to engage in these occupations before they are sixteen years old.

New York, under the recommendation of the state factory investigating commission, is considering bills not only to prohibit child labor in canneries and tenements, but to reorganize the factory inspection department as an industrial commission with a greatly increased staff of inspectors. Delaware, Indiana, Missouri, North Carolina and others are also talking of measures to make more efficient their departments of inspection.

In many states, minimum wage boards, pensions for widowed mothers, prohibition of night work and methods of determining age of children seeking employment are under discussion.

New Hampshire and some of the southern states will probably raise the age limit for working children from twelve to fourteen years, and it is hoped that a child labor law for territories will be presented to congress.

A compulsory school attendance law has been introduced in the North Carolina legislature, and bills are talked of in South Carolina, Tennessee and Texas.

WOMAN VETERAN IN WANT

"Mustered Out" of New York Municipal Service; Was Wounded in Battle.

New York.—Kady Brownell, the only woman veteran of the civil war, has been mustered out of the civil service, under which she had served the last seventeen years.

She and her husband, Robert S. Brownell, have been living in the Jumel mansion, corner of One Hundred and Sixtieth street and Edgecomb avenue, where they have been acting as caretakers. Commissioner Stover of the park department tried to arrange with the Grand Army of the Republic, of which both Mr. and Mrs. Brownell are members, to take care of them in some institution for the rest of their lives. The difficulty is that the organization has not had to consider similar case before.

Mrs. Brownell's military career may be said to have begun with her birth on the battlefield, when her father, Colonel George Southwell was stationed in Caffaria, South Wales. Her mother died a few days later, but the child was sturdy and lived to go home with her father.

After a time he was ordered back to Africa and the little girl came to the United States with another friend of the father's, Cameron McKenzie. While living in Central Falls, R. I., she met and was married to Mr. Brownell, she being then barely 18 years old. Three days after her marriage the war broke out and her husband, who was one of the charter members of the Mechanics' Rifles of Providence, was summoned to go to the front.

He went home and broke the news that he was going to the war. His wife said she, too, would go to the front and fight beside her husband.

Both Mrs. Brownell and her husband were wounded during the war, the latter seriously. In 1884 congress passed an act granting her a special pension. Since 1903 she has been employed by the New York Department of Parks.

STUNG WHEN BEEHIVE LEAKS

Alton Expressman Has Nine Miles of Acute Discomfort—Ban Is Placed on the "Stingers."

St. Louis, Mo.—If three boxes of bees which Harry Collins, an Alton expressman, received to carry from Alton to Wood River, a distance of nine miles, had not "leaked," Collins' face would look different.

Before starting with the bees Collins made particular inquiry as to whether the boxes "leaked," as he termed it. He was told they did not. With G. H. Pierre he started on the drive. One after another, infuriated young bees wiggled through cracks, to Collins' discomfiture.

Smarting under a particularly effective sting, he finally managed to turn the wagon into a deep rut and upset one of the boxes. Thousands of bees swarmed forth and made the following fifteen minutes unpleasant.

Collins suffered particularly. After the bees subsided in the box the journey was resumed. Collins will carry no more boxes of bees.

Oats Sprouted in Farmer's Eye.

Branchville, N. J.—Farmer Jacob Rose has discovered that his eye is a fine place to grow oats. A seed flew into his eye while threshing last summer, and recently his eye gave him so much trouble that he was compelled to visit a doctor. The physician removed the grain, which had grown a sprout almost a half inch long.

OLD CELLO PROVES A PRIZE

Philadelphia Musician Discovers a Hopeless Istrument Is a Barbe and Merely Out of Repair.

Philadelphia.—Bertram A. Austin, a musician, of 4956 Rubicam avenue, Germantown, has discovered that an ancient cello, which has lain neglected in his studio for many years, is a "Barbe," and worth $1,000.

About four years ago one of Mr. Austin's pupils brought a disreputable-looking cello into the studio which he said he had picked up in a pawnshop. He tested it and discovered that the bass had a rich tone, while the treble was decidedly squeaky.

He threw it to one side as hopeless, and for months it lay in the junk heap. Several times he tried to dispose of it in trade, but nobody wanted the old instrument when they heard the sad lament of the treble.

T. A. Daly, widely known poet and humorist, took an interest in the instrument because of its ancient appearance, and advised Mr. Austin to take it to William Moenning, a skillful "doctor" of sick musical instruments. Mr. Austin acted on this advice. He was astounded when Moenning showed him this inscription inside the case, "J. Barbe, pere: Paris, 1790."

Mr. Moenning found that the treble soundpost was three inches out of place, being close against the bass bar. He repaired this difficulty and all of the rare sweetness of tone has been restored to the instrument.

Barbe was one of the most famous makers of violins and cellos of the eighteenth century.

HEN LAYS RECTANGULAR EGGS

Wilkesbarre Man Says the Square Ones Are Bigger and Better Than the Round Ones.

Wilkesbarre.—Port Northrup, who lives in Towanda township and is one of the oldest farmers in Luzerne county, is the proud possessor of a hen that lays square eggs. The chicken has so far laid eight of them, and they are all built on the lines of a rectangle.

This fowl lays an egg three and a quarter inches long and almost square, the four sides running from an inch and one-quarter to an inch and one-eighth in width. The ends of the eggs instead of bulging out are depressed and they will naturally not roll off the table.

Northrup is now figuring on the possibility of developing a strain of square egg layers. He says that the square egg is bigger and better than the rund ones, and that for shipping and storage purposes it has many advantages.

What caused the hen to change her method of construction of eggs is a problem that Northrup has been unable to solve.

TWO GOWNS IN TEN YEARS

Woman Seeking Separation Says Husband Did Not Provide for Her Properly.

White Plains, N. Y.—Testimony was heard by Justice Tompkins in the supreme court at White Plains in the separation action started by Mrs. Elsie C. Toussaint against Alfred E. Toussaint, formerly of Ardsley on the Hudson.

Mrs. Toussaint testified that in ten years her husband had bought her only one suit, two pairs of shoes and a gown costing $75.

Mr. Toussaint denied all of his wife's charges.

Every Policeman His Rival.

Chicago.—Anthony Comstock has a rival in every member of the police force here. Detective Fred Hirsch has ordered the removal of Paul Chabas' painting "September Morn" from shop windows, and art lovers are up in arms.

"Yes," said the trainer, with elaborate sarcasm, "it would be awful funny if it wasn't on the square." He moistened his lip nervously.

"You alarm yourself unnecessarily We'll hear from Culver soon, either by wire or in person. He's never failed me yet. But if I were you Larry, I'd leave that Mexican girl alone."

"Mary?"

"Yes. Mariedetta. Now, there's something to be afraid of. If these cowboys are in love with her and have their eyes on you—"

"Come in!"

Senor Aurelio Maria Carara entered. He was smoking his customary corn-husk cigarette, but his dark eyes were grave and his silken mustachios were pointed to the fineness of a bristle.

CHAPTER X.

BUENOS dias, Senor." Carara bowed politely to Speed.

"Good-morning again," said Wally.

Turning to the trainer, Carara eyed him from top to toe, removed his cigarette, and flipped the ashes daintily from it; then, smiling disdainfully, said:

"Buenos dias, Senor Fat!"

Glass started. "You talkin' to me?"

"Yes." Carara leaned languidly against the wall, took a match from his pocket, and dextrously struck it between the nails of his thumb and finger. He breathed his lungs full of smoke and exhaled it through his nose. "I would have spik to you biffore, but the Senor Fat is—he shrugged his shoulders—"frighten' so bad he will not understan'. So—I come back."

"Who's scared?" said Glass, gruffly.

Carara turned his palm outward, in gentle apology.

"You been talk' a gret deal to my Senorita—to Mariedetta, eh?"

"Oh, the Cuban Queen!" Glass winked openly at Speed. "Sure! I slip her a laugh now and then."

"She is not Cubana, she is Mexicana," said Carara, politely.

"Well, what d'you think of that! I thought she was a Cuban." Glass began to chuckle.

"Senor Fat," broke in the Mexican, sharply, while Larry winced at the distasteful appellation, "she is my Senorita!"

"Is she? Well, I can't help it if she falls for me." The speaker cast an appreciative glance at his employer. "And you can cut out that 'Senor Fat,' because it don't go—" Then he gasped, for Carara slowly drew from inside his shirt a long, thin-bladed knife bearing marks of recent grinding, and his black eyes snapped. His face had become suddenly convulsed, while his voice rang with the tone of chilled metal. Glass retreated a step, a shudder ran through him, and his eyes riveted themselves upon the weapon with horrified intensity.

"Listen, Pig! If you spik to her again, I will cut you." The gaze of the Mexican pierced his victim. "I will not keel you, I will just—cut you!"

Speed, who had sat in open-mouthed amazement during the scene, pinched himself. Like Larry, he could not remove his gaze from the swarthy man He pulled himself together with an effort, however, undertaking to divert the present trend of the conversation.

"W—where will you cut him?" he asked, pleasantly, more to make conversation than from any lingering question as to the precise location.

"Here." Carara turned the blade against himself, and traced a cross upon his front, whereupon the trainer gurgled and laid protecting hands upon his protruding abdomen. "You spik Spanish?"

"No." Glass shook his head.

"But you understan' w'at I try to say?"

"Yes—oh yes—I'm hep all right."

"And the Senor Fat will r-r-remember?"

"Sure!" Glass sighed miserably and tearing his eyes away from the glittering blade, rolled them toward his employer. "I don't want her! Mr. Speed knows I don't want her!"

Carara bowed. "And the Fat Senor will not spik wit' her again?"

"No!"

"Gracias, Senor! I thank you!"

"You're welcome!" agreed the New Yorker, with repressed feeling.

"Adios! Adios, Senor Speed!"

"Goodby!" exclaimed the two in chorus.

Carara returned the knife to its hiding-place, swept the floor gracefully with his sombrero, then placing the spangled head-piece at an exact angle upon his raven locks, lounged out, his silver spurs tinkling in the silence.

Glass took a deep breath.

"He doesn't mean to kill you—just cut you," said Speed.

"I got it," declared the other, fervently. Again he laid repressing hands upon his bulging front and looked down at it tenderly. "They've all got it in for my pad, haven't they?"

"I told you to keep away from that girl."

"Humph!" Glass spoke with soulful conviction. "Take it from me, Bo, I'll walk around her as if she was a lake. Who'd ever think that chorus-maid was a killer?"

"Surely you don't care for her seriously?"

"Not now. I—I love my Cuban,

"The Fat Senor Will Not Spik Wit Her Again?"

but"—he quivered apprehensively—"I'll bet that rummy packs a 'shiv' in every pocket."

From outside the bunk-house came the low, musical notes of a quail, and Glass puckered his lips to answer, then grew pale. "That's her," he declared, in a panic. "I've got a date with her."

"Are you going to keep it?"

"Not for a nose-bag full of gold nuggets! Take a look, Wally, and see what she's doing."

Speed did as directed. "She's waiting."

"Let her wait," breathed the trainer.

"Here comes Stover and Willie."

"More bad news." Glass unrolled his prayer-rug, and stepped upon it hastily. "Say, what's that word? Quick! You know! The password. Quick!"

"Allah!"

"That's her!" The fat man began to mumble thickly. It was plain that his spirit was utterly broken.

But this call was prompted purely

"There's Something for You."

by solicitude, it seemed. Willie had little to say, and Stover, ignoring all mention of the earlier encounter he had witnessed, exclaimed:

"There's been some queer goin's-on 'round here, Mr. Speed. Have you noticed 'em?"

"No. What sort?"

"Well, the other mornin' I discovered some tracks through one of Miss Jean's flower-beds."

"Tracks!"

"Sure! Strange tracks. Man's tracks."

"What does that signify?"

"We ain't altogether certain. Carara says he seen a stranger hangin around night before last, and jest now we found where a hoss had been picketed out in the ravine. Looks like he'd stood there more'n once."

"It has nothing to do with me."

"I ain't sure. It looks to us like it's somebody from the Centipede. They're equal to any devilment."

Speed showed an utter lack of comprehension, so Willie explained.

"Understand, we've made this race pay or play. Mebbe they aim to cripple you."

"Me!" Speed started. "Good heavens!"

"Oh, they'd do it quick enough! I wouldn't put it past 'em to drop a .45 through your winder if it could be done safe."

"Shoot me, you mean?"

"Allah!" said Glass, devoutly from his corner.

Stover and Willie nodded. "If I was keep the lamp between me and the winder every night."

"Why, this is abominable!" exclaimed the young college man, stiffly. "I—I can't stand for this, it's getting too serious."

"There ain't nothin' to fear," said Willie, soothingly. "Remember, I told you at the start that we'd see there wasn't no crooked work done. Well, I'm goin' to ride herd on you constant, Mr. Speed." He smiled in a manner to reassure. "If there's any shootin' comes off, I'll be in on it."

"S—say, what's to prevent us being murdered when we're out for a run?" queried Glass.

"Me!" declared the little man. "I'll saddle my bronc' an' lope along with you. We'll keep to the open country."

Instantly Speed saw the direful consequences of such a procedure, and summoned his courage to say: "No. It's very kind of you, but I shall give up training."

"What!"

"I mean training on the road. I—I'll run indoors."

"Not a bit like it," declared Stover. "You'll get your daily run if we have to lay off all the punchers on the place and put 'em on as a body-guard. We can't let you get hurt. You're worth too much to us."

"Larry and I will take a chance."

"Not for mine!" firmly declared the trainer. "I don't need no mineral in my system. I'm for the house."

"Then I shall run alone."

"You're game," said Willie admiringly, and his auditor breathed easier, "but we can't allow it."

"I—I'd rather risk my life than put you to so much trouble."

"It's only a pleasure."

"Nevertheless, I can't allow it. I'll run alone, if they kill me for it."

"Oh, they won't try to kill you. They'll probably shoot you in the legs. That's just as good, and it's a heap easier to get away with."

Speed felt his knee-caps twitching.

"I've got it!" said he at last. "I'll run at night!"

Stover hesitated thoughtfully.

"I don't reckon you could do yourself justice that-away, but you might do your trainin' at daylight. The Centipede goes to work the same time we do, and the chances is your assassin won't miss his breakfast."

"Good! I—I'll do that!"

"I sure admire your courage, but if you see anything suspicious, let us know. We'll git 'em," said Willie.

"Thank you."

The two men went out, whereupon Glass chattered:

"W—what did I tell you? It's worse'n suicide to stick around this farm. I'm going to blow."

"Where are you going?"

"New York. Let's beat it!"

"Never!" exclaimed the college man, stubbornly. "We'll hear from Covington before long. Besides, I can't leave until I get some money from home."

"Let's walk."

"Don't be a fool!"

"Then I've got to have a drink." Glass started for the living-quarters, but at the door ducked quickly out of sight. "She's there!" he whispered tragically. "She seen me, too!"

Mariedetta was squatting in the shade opposite, her eyes fixed stolidly upon the training-quarters.

"Then you've got to lay low till she gives up," declared Wally. "We're in trouble enough as it is."

For nearly an hour the partners discussed the situation while the Mexican maid retained her position; then, when Glass was on the verge of making a desperate sally, Cloudy entered silently. Although this had been an unhappy morning for the trainer, here at least was one person of whom he had no fear, and his natural optimism being again to the fort, he greeted the Indian lightly.

"Well, how's the weather, Cloudy?"

"Mr. Cloudy to you," said the other. Both Glass and his protege stared It was the first word the Indian had uttered since their arrival. Lawrence winked at his companion.

"All right, if you like it better. How's the weather, Mister Cloudy?" He snickered at his own joke, whereupon the aborigine turned upon him slowly, and said, in perfect English:

"Your humor is misplaced with me. Don't forget, Mr. Glass, that the one Yale football team you trained, I dropped a goal on from the forty-five-yard line."

Glass allowed his mouth to open in amazement. The day was replete with surprises.

"'96!" he said, while the light of understanding came over him. "You're Cloudy-but-the-Sun-Shines?"

"Yes—Carlisle." Cloudy threw back his head, and pointed with dignity to the flag of his Alma Mater hanging upon the wall.

"By Jove, I remember that!" exclaimed Speed.

"So will Yale so long as she lives," predicted the Indian, grimly. "You crippled me in the second half"—he stirred his withered leg—"but I dropped it on you; and—I have not forgotten." He ground the last sentence between his teeth.

"See here, Bo—Mr. Cloudy. You don't blame us for that?"

Cloudy grunted, and threw a yellow envelope on the floor at Speed's feet. "There is something for you," said he, while his lips curled. He turned and limped silently to the door.

"And I tried to kid him!" breathed Glass with disgust, when the visitor had gone. "I ain't been in right since Garfield was shot."

"It's a telegram from Covington!" cried Speed, tearing open the message. "At last!"

"Thank the Lord!" Glass started forward eagerly. "When 'll he be here? Quick!" Then he paused. J. Wallingford Speed had gone deathly pale, and was reeling slightly. "What's wrong?"

MADDEN CASE NOW IN COURT

Attorney Golden Will File Petition for Review of Evidence

Attorney Bernard J. Golden announced this morning, that sometime during the day he would file with Clerk Gage of the local court his petition for a review of the testimony in the case of Lieutenant Edward J. Madden of hose company three, who was removed from the fire department by Chief Engineer Frank E. Tracy. At the hour of going to press Clerk Gage had received no such notice from Mr. Golden.

Mr. Golden said it was the first case of its kind so far as he could ascertain to be heard in the Fourth District court, and as he had no precedents to be guided by he wanted to be certain that the phraseology of his petition was legally correct before it was filed. It is probable that the case will not be heard by the court until the latter part of this week or perhaps the first of next.

Since last Saturday morning, when the chief engineer officially reaffirmed his original decission, that the removal of Madden from the department was necessary for the "good of the service" there has been more interest than ever displayed in the controversy, and there seems a general public demand that the facts be made known.

In his first public statement, Chief Tracy is on record as saying that he removed the lieutenant before the latter asked the city council to investigate conditions at the company. This statement if correct, and the chief says that he has indisputable proof of his assertion, corrects an impression that has prevailed to a great extent that the chief removed Madden immediately after the lieutenant requested the investigation, some people in discussing the case going so far as to say that the request for an investigation was the cause for removal.

Another striking feature in the stand taken by the chief engineer, is his refusal, to accept the recommendation made at the last meeting of the city council by the committee on fire, that the Madden request for an investigation was justified, and that Madden be reinstated in the fire department. While the chief has absolute power in the matter, the committee on fire has always been considered a factor in departmental affairs, and it will be interesting to learn when the court commences its investigation, what manner of testimony, or what information in the possession of either led the committee and the chief to differ so widely.

BOY ADMITS MANY THEFTS

Tells Police He and Brother Robbed Homes in Lakewood, N. J., to Sell to a Jeweler.

Hackensack, N. J.—Paul Ostin, 16 years old, one of two brothers charged with having robbed several summer residences in Lakewood, was arrested in Hackensack. The boy in the presence of Chief of Police Jacob Dunn of this place and Deputy Sheriff W. T. Mason of Lakewood, broke down and confessed. Carl Ostin, 17, was arrested a few days ago in Lakewood, but would not confess. The thefts amounted to several thousands of dollars.

Paul told the police he was employed in a real estate office in Lakewood and was in charge of the keys of many of the houses of New Yorkers who had closed up their summer homes.

"One day Carl came to me and said that as I had the keys to these houses we might just as well get into them and see what they had and what we could steal, and that's how I began," said the youthful prisoner. The lad said a Lakewood jeweler told him to bring all the jewelry he could get and he would give him something for it.

Paul said he got as much as three dollars for a diamond ring, and more for gold watches. Constable Mason says he knows the jeweler, and when he left here for Lakewood with Paul, would question him. Carl Ostin is under arrest in Lakewood on the charge of the theft of $30 from a patron of the Lakewood postoffice.

WINCHESTER

The baptismal service was administered to six young people in the Baptist church yesterday morning.

Tuesday afternoon of this week, at 2.30 o'clock, the Sewing meeting of the Ladies' Friendly society of the Unitarian church will be held in the church parlors.

The High school play, "Captain Letterblair," will be given, Saturday evening April 5, in the Town hall. The tickets are selling fast and success is assured.

Mr. Peter MacQueen gave an illustrated lecture in the Methodist church last evening on "Livingstone in Africa." A large and appreciative audience was present.

The annual dinner of the Calumet club has been postponed one week, owing to numerous social functions which will take place, and the date now set is for April 5.

The concert this year was a departure from the usual custom, inasmuch that the talent was taken entirely from professional circles. It proved a success and the committee in charge are to be complimented on their work.

Thursday, March 27 from 10 to 4 o'clock the Woman's Benevolent society of the First Baptist church will meet in the church parlors. Luncheon at 12.15. All ladies of the church are cordially invited to attend and assist in the sewing and other business of the society.

The Calumet club officers have been nominated by the committee appointed for that purpose. The nominations are as follows: president, Charles S. Tenney; vice-president, Dr. Irving T. Cutter; secretary Edgar M. Young; treasurer, George W. Annin; directors for three years, Edwin C. Starr, Harry W. Campbell and George H. Eaton.

A pleasing rendering of Manney's cantata "The Resurrection" by a choir of 12 trained voices, was given at the Sunday morning service of the Unitarian church, yesterday. It was an Easter concert of exceptional character and beauty of production. The regular quartet was assisted by Miss Cora Forbes, Mrs. Arthur Williams, Mrs. Arthur Whitney, Mrs. Joel Metcalf, Mrs. O. E. Stevens, Mr. S. H. Lochman, Mr. Herbert Metcalf, and Dr. J. Churchill Hindes. The organ selections were "Resurrection Morn" by Johnston and Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus."

At the First Baptist church an excellent Easter concert was given at 7 o'clock last evening. A very fine program was prepared. The soloists were Miss Lucille Brown, soprano; Miss Della C. Hoover, violinist, and Mr. J. W. Hoffman, tenor, all of N. E. Conservatory of Music. A special quartet rendered several selections. It was a most enjoyable concert, and a fitting climax to the Easter day services. A large number of the parish and their friends attended, and the exercises were a treat for music lovers. Miss Hoover and Miss Brown were exceptionally fine.

Hot Water a Curative Agent.

The action of hot water on the body is the simplest and most effective curative agent we have. Pain due to neuritis, sciatica, rheumatism or injury are relieved and the first stages of a cold are so greatly relieved that the cold will not progress further. Such a bath is in no way similar to the Turkish bath. A cold bath need not be taken after a hot bath and people living in the temperate zone will be greatly benefited by a really hot bath every other day.

Sales, $250,000 Tolls, $36

THIS is the most remarkable incident of its kind that we have heard of in the course of a demonstration of selling by telephone—sales totalling $250,000 at an expenditure of $36 for telephone tolls.

By permission we are enabled to say that the selling was done by MR. GEORGE R. KELLY of George R. Kelly & Co. of 104 Hanover St., Boston, New England selling agents of the American Window Glass Company of Pittsburgh.

One of our salesmen called upon Mr. Kelley to demonstrate our new toll service selling plans, only to find that already he was employing advanced methods along this line. Said he:

"We anticipated a rise in the price of window glass around January 1, and wanted to give our customers the benefit of current quotations.

"There wasn't time to make personal visits to the trade, letters wouldn't be satisfactory, so we made our calls by telephone.

"During the first ten days in December we made toll calls to widely separated points in New England, at a cost of about $36, and booked orders aggregating $250,000."

If any New England house can show greater results from selling by telephone, we would be glad to learn of them.

Business men interested in progressive ideas for the extension of trade are invited to send for our booklet entitled "Modern Methods of Money-Making," and for samples of our "Telephone Passes."

In Greater Boston, call Fort Hill 7600 and ask the Contract Department for details. Outside of Greater Boston, call the Local Manager.

MADDEN CASE IN COURT APRIL 1ST

Attorney Golden Filed Petition for Review of Evidence this Morning

This morning Bernard J. Golden filed with Judge Johnson a petition to have the court review the action of Chief Engineer Frank E. Tracy in removing Lieutenant Edward J. Madden of hose company three from the fire department.

The petition is returnable on April 1, and it is understood that all the interested parties have agreed to submit all facts in the case to the court on that date. The law under which Attorney Golden files his petition permits the court to either order the reinstatement of Madden or to reaffirm the decision of the chief engineer. Following is a copy of the Golden petition:—

Commonwealth of Massachusetts
Fourth District court of Woburn.
Middlesex ss.

Edward J. Madden, Petitioner vs
Frank E. Tracy

Chief Engineer of the Woburn fire department respondent, to the Honorable the Justice of the fourth district court of Woburn Respectfully represents your petitioner Edward J. Madden.

That petitioner was upon a notice sent him by said chief of the Woburn fire department on the 20th day of February A. D. 1913 removed from the said position by the said chief, and the following is a copy of said notice.

Woburn, February 20, 1913.
Edward J. Madden,
Dear Sir:

In accordance with the provision of the city charter, I hereby notify you that you are removed from the service of the Woburn fire department, the cause being for the good of the service.

Yours respectfully,
Frank E. Tracy,
Chief of Department.

That your petitioner on March 1 1913, asked for a hearing upon said charges under chapter 314 acts of 1904 as amended by chapter 243 of the acts of 1905, and that in pursuance of said request your petitioner was granted a hearing on Thursday March 14, 1913, upon said charges before the said respondent and after having received and heard witnesses upon said charges the said repondent in a communication sent to your petitioner on Saturday, March 22 1913 affirmed his order of removal made February 20, 1913.

That your petitioner is aggrieved at said action of the respondent in removing him from the said position, and says that the order of removal was made by the respondent contrary to the law as is given in Chapter 314, Acts of 1904, as amended by Chapter 243, acts of 1905, and was without proper cause or in bad faith.

Whereof your petitioner in accordance with the provisions of chapter 624, acts of 1911, respectfully prays that your Honorable court may review the action of said respondent in removing your petitioner from the position as afore-mentioned and that witnesses thereto be heard by your said court.

Edward J. Madden,
Petitioner
By his attorney
B. J. Golden.

After a consultation with attorney Golden, Judge Johnson ordered that Chief Tracy be served with notice of the petition and of the day upon which the same is returnable. City Solicitor J. Fred Maloney will represent Chief Tracy when the case is heard.

WOBURN POLICE CAPTURE LITHUANIAN

Man Wanted for Assault by Salem Police Taken into Custody Yesterday

Chief of Police McDermott and Patrolman Hickey went to a boarding house in Main street, North Woburn yesterday afternoon at three o'clock and took Alexander Dawidowicz into custody, later turning him over to the Salem police. He is wanted in Salem for assault with intent to kill last Sunday. He is unmarried, 32 years of age, and was employed at the patent leather factory of Harry W. Clark.

The assault was a cutting affair in which Dawidowicz who is a Lithuanian and a fellow countryman slashed a man badly about the face and body. A PLEASING MUSICAL RECITAL

Some Special Features of an Exceptionally Fine Program

A rare musical treat was enjoyed by the many friends of Miss Marion Althea Burt of this city, at her recital last evening in Concert hall. Miss Burt was assisted by Miss Beatrice Holbrook pianist of Boston. Miss Burt played solos by Haydn, Martini, Francoeur, Alard, Beethoven and Sarasate, and with Miss Holbrook the sonata for violin and piano by Edmund Severn of New York City. Miss Holbrook played solos by Gebhard, Chopin, Tschaikowsky and Liszt. The sonata by Severn has not bee played before in Greater Bosto and these two young ladies deserve great credit for bringing it out. This work is of the modern romantic school and has muchcharm and originality. Miss Burt and Miss Holbrook brought to its interpretation, a keen understanding of its many beauties and complete control of its great technical difficulties. A second hearing of this interesting work would undoubtedly unfold many more beauties. The violin solos of Miss Burt gave her opportunity to display her beautiful tone and emotional playing to great advantage, the Spanish dance being particularly pleasing to the audience, but the group by the old masters was also much enjoyed. Miss Burt has every reason to look forward to a great future. Miss Holbrook, who is Heinrich Gebhard's first assistant, played his Gavotte and the Chopin numbers with unusual delicacy and finish, while the beautiful Meditations by Tschaikowsky was rendered with remarkable breadth and feeling. Her final number the great Polonaise by Liszt was given with tremendous fire and brilliancy. Taken all together, this concert was one of the most notable ever given in Woburn and we hope to have another opportunity of hearing the classics so beautifully rendered. We must also mention the fine accompaniments played by Miss Vivian Burt.

At Ninth Annual Ball of Telephone Operators Club Last Evening

All "trunk lines" centered at Lyceum hall last evening, the occasion being the ninth annual concert and ball of the local telephone operators. One hundred anf fifty couples attended the merry party and danced the evening hours away to the notes of the Crescent orchestra. Prominent among the guests were His Honor Mayor William H. Favors in the shape of chickens and bunnies with attached cards bearing Easter greetings were showered upon the dancers from the galleries just before the intermission, the feature making a laughing and novel divertisement.

The party was remarkable for the profusion of tasteful costumes worn. The dance was handled by the young women of the switchboard, and in this they displayed the skill of veterans. The line was open to a general good time and there was no break in the current of generous hospitality dispensed. Miss May Nelligan made a very gracious mistress of ceremonies. DUST, DUST, AND THEN SOME "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return." It looks as if the scriptural declaration was finding fulfilment right here and now. There is a rumor that the JOURNAL'S mildly drawn plea yesterday for relief from the dust plague has pierced the outer cuticle of the highway department, and there is an assurance that ere many hours the watering carts will be in operation.

But at the hour of going to press no rumble of the water wagon has reached the editorial sanctum, and as the scribe looks out upon the street he sees suffering humanity enveloped in a swirl of dust particles, their faces and clothing gray with accumulations of real estate. Storekeepers are still grumbling over the conditions, as they see the dust clouds borne into their places of business every time the doors are opened. This is no joke, no exaggeration. Dealers in provisions, vegetables and fruit are powerless to prevent the deterioration of their stock and if the highway department officials could hear the complaints they would wake up to their duty.

There is a still more serious aspect of this question. Authorities agree that the dust of the street is heavily charged with the germs of disease. And that the inhalation of street dust is provocative of infection, and a menace to public health. The spread of infantile paralysis is directly traceable it is claimed by many to street dust. Who can tell what damage has already been done in our community by the inaction of the officials?

Why is it that municipal departments are so slow to discern the pressing needs of the moment? Here is the highway department at a time of year when no special work is in hand. There are plenty of carts, and horses, and the latter are eating their heads off in the city stables. There is plenty of water, in spite of the leaks in the worn-out mains. There are plenty of men attached to the department, and some of them are attached by salaries reaching at least $20 per week—for what?—and here is the public choked with dust, and stocks of merchandise being ruined, to say nothing of the surface of the highways being blown off and wasted, and not a move by anybody with authority until they are prodded into taking notice through the columns of the press.

They would be no less efficient if they had been run over by the road roller or strained through the stone crusher, than they are in their Rip Ven Winkle sleep of inactivity.

Water, water everywhere and not a drop to—sprinkle. is the cry of a choking, gasping and stifling public.

P. S.—Te Deum Laudamus! We stop the press to announce that a watering cart has just passed the JOURNAL office and it looks like rain too.

FLYERS CAUSE FEAR

Aviators From Continent Fly in Darkness Over England.

British Government Is Providing "Sky Guns" to Repel These Aerial Trespassers Who Appear During Night.

London.—A popular pastime nowadays with continental aviators would seem to be flying trips by night over England. Daring air pilots in Germany or France leave their moorings at dusk, speed over the channel, and then circle over British cities and forts, flashing their lights to mystify and alarm the people below them. With the first indications of dawn the adventure comes to an end. The prowling birdman heads for home, houses his machine before the sun is well up, and leaves the officials of England to report his incursion to the war office in London.

Reports of these night visits became so general, and were at the same time so disconcerting, that the government finally took official action and passed a bill prohibiting the passage of aircraft over certain specified areas. Aircraft violating this regulation will be fired on and otherwise warned away.

The bill was introduced into the house of commons by Colonel Seeley, secretary of war, and it passed through all its stages at one sitting, without discussion. It went to the lords the day before recess and passed that house just as hurriedly.

How the measure is to be enforced has aroused considerable interested speculation. The bill authorizes the proper officers, after giving a prescribed warning, to fire at any aircraft infringing this law, and to use any and every means to prevent infractions.

The government is providing "sky guns" to repel these aerial trespassers, and it will also have the services of the naval aeroplanes and hydroplanes and the flying fleet of the army, which consists of about a dozen aeroplanes and three small airships.

Experts have very grave doubts whether these precautions will be sufficient to prevent the midnight visits.

What gave rise to the action of the government were reliable reports, in some cases from army officers, that aircraft had been seen over Dover, Sheerness, Portsmouth and Liverpool, and on at least two occasions as far west as Cardiff, always at night. The first visits were paid in October and they have continued up to the present time.

At first there was an inclination to make light of them, or to ascribe the moving lights and the noise of the propeller to some airship privately owned in England. But investigation showed that this could not be, and now the government places the blame on privately owned foreign airships.

Some people, however, discard this assumption, and declare that at least one of the aerial visitors came from Borkum, the German fortress nearest the English coast. From Borkum it would be a very simple matter for a modern airship to pass over the North sea and even right across England, as in the case of the ship that flew over Cardiff, and be back at her base before morning.

PAYS DEBT OF GRATITUDE

Lawyer, Whose Life Was Saved Forty Years Ago by Defendant's Father, Reciprocates.

Kansas City, Mo.—The trial of former State Senator Ernest D. Martin for alleged misuse of the mails in the promotion of an electric railway has one romantic feature of which judge, jury and spectators are in ignorance. By the side of the accused man in the federal court there sits daily a keen-eyed, stout, gray-haired man, with a "fighter's jaw," his chief counsel. That man is Jacob I. Shepherd of Fort Scott, Kan., and he is paying a debt of gratitude of 40 years' standing.

It was 40 years ago that Dr. Solon Martin of Marshall, Mo., while driving along a country road came upon a tent where a woman sat beside a sick child.

"Do you know where we can find a doctor?" 'asked the woman. "My son is dying."

"I am a physician," said Dr. Martin. "We'll do what we can. But you'll have to get him out of this tent and into a house, where he can have constant care," he added after an examination of the child.

"We're driving through the country to Kansas," said the woman. "We have no house and no means."

"I'll take care of the boy," said Doctor Martin. "You go ahead, and we'll send him to you well in a month or so."

The boy was taken to the home of the physician and kept until he had recovered. Then he was sent to his parents, who were making themselves a home in Kansas.

Shortly after the former state senator had been charged with misusing the mails he received a letter bearing a Fort Scott postmark.

"Forty years ago," the letter ran, "your father put me under a great obligation which I could not fully repay during his lifetime. I beg of you permit me now to discharge that debt by acting as your counsel in the present matter."

The letter was signed "J. I. Shepherd."

SAVING LEADS TO WEALTH

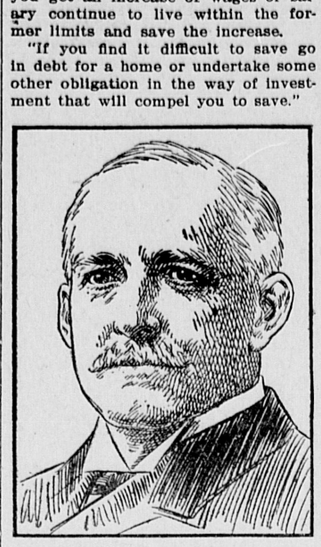

Henry E. Huntington, Ship Builder, Asserts Young Men Should Invest to Compel Thrift.

Los Angeles.—Henry E. Huntington, of New York and Los Angeles, who at the age of sixty-three is retiring from business as rapidly as possible, but whose fortune of forty or fifty million dollars will keep right on working for him, said that the habit of saving paves the road to wealth.

Mr. Huntington believes that this is an age of great opportunity for young men and this is his recipe for success:

"Save a little every week. When you get an increase of wages or salary continue to live within the former limits and save the increase.

"If you find it difficult to save go in debt for a home or undertake some other obligation in the way of investment that will compel you to save."

Henry E. Huntington.

Mr. Huntington declares he has already practically retired from business.

"I shall give little personal attention to my investments here, nor to those in the east, which are practically as large as my interests here," said he. "For illustration, I scarcely bother my head even now about the ship building plant at Newport News. Altogether I have about 6,000 employes in my eastern enterprises, but when I am in New York I do not spend more than an hour a day in my office."

Mr. Huntington's famous paintings, rare objects of art and almost priceless volumes have all been bought by himself and in New York, either as offered for sale there or brought over under options subject to his approval when he saw them. He has never depended on agents, and he will not in Europe if the buying fever seizes him.

SAYS FUNERAL WAS HASTY

Editor Wants Own Obsequies to Be Lively Affair, With Grave Away From the River.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Rev. D. S. Phelan, militant editor of the Western Watchman, commenting on the burial of Bishop Hogan of Kansas City, in a recent issue of his publication, terms the prelate's interment as "hasty" and the music attendant as "of the emergency order." The editor expressed a hope that his funeral will be a public one, and that it shall be conducted without quiet dispatch. He leaves these instructions.

"When we are gone we want a public funeral. We want to be laid out long enough for all those whom we have ever offended to come and see for themselves that we are dead. We want an office for the dead, but not too hurried. We want a priest to sing our requiem who knows how to sing. We would like the beautiful chant of the church to linger in our ears.

"We want to be borne to the tomb by horses, good, spirited horses, who will feel that they are bearing a friend to his last home, but we do not want to go too close to the river."

MAN LIVES IN REFRIGERATOR

Kansas City Citizen Has Novel Winter Habitation in Shape of a Nice Warm Ice Box.

Kansas City, Mo.—J. H. Brown, former manager of a local amusement park, is living in an ice box here this winter. The refrigerator had been used for beer and other liquors at the park pavilion.

When the park was abandoned and the site plotted for a residence district Brown bought a lot. He also purchased the refrigerator and converted it into a temporary dwelling by cutting windows in it. He set up a stove and will remain in his novel habitation until he can build a house.

"My refrigerator is nice and warm," he said.

ALL DEAF-MUTES AT FUNERAL

Prayers, Eulogies and Hymns Are Translated in Sign Language in New York.

New York.—Thirty persons, all deaf and dumb, made an unusual funeral gathering at services in Brooklyn over the body of Henry Myers, a wealthy retired baker, who was deaf and dumb and who had done much in behalf of others similarly afflicted. All of the services, including the prayers, eulogy and hymns, were translated to the mourners in the deaf and dumb sign language.

OLD STEAMER OSAGE

Cargo of Salt Yields Good Profit to Boat Owner.

Craft Goes Upstream in Flood, but the Crew Has to Dig Into the River Bank in Order to Turn Around.

Clinton, Mo.—How a steamboat once navigated the waters of the Osage river, delivered a cargo of salt at Suns Point, Kan., and made a good profit on the deal is told here by Richard Fuqua, a carpenter, who was the boat's carpenter on the trip and for several years after. Now the once navigable Osage river is a prize sought by water power men and promoters, and Kansas, instead of importing salt, is exporting it.

The steamboat was itself named the Osage. The hull was laid and launched at Linn Creek in the winter of 1856-7 by the owners, who were residents of Linn Creek. The hull was towed to St. Louis, where the boat was finished. It was 130 feet long, 22 feet wide, and when loaded to its capacity of 200 tons drew nearly three feet of water.

It was pronounced the finest little boat afloat in its day, with a cabin capacity of seventy-five passengers, double engines, double boilers and side wheels. It was sold to Captain Lambert, of New York, an experienced boat man, who later traded it to Maj. R. H. Melton of Warsaw, Mo., for Benton county land, the consideration being $22,000.

Major Melton placed Elijah Melton, his brother, in charge as clerk, and the Osage made regular trips for eight months in the year from St. Louis up the Osage river, often as far as Papinsville, in Bates county, Missouri, but more frequently going to Osceola, St. Clair county.

The Civil war had destroyed the boating service on the Osage river, and salt was so scarce that a pound would sell at times for $1. Major Melton found plenty of salt at St. Louis in 1867, which had come from Michigan down the Mississippi. He knew if he could get it to the western counties of Missouri the people would pay a handsome profit for it. With George Crawford, an Osage river pilot, the boat was loaded to its capacity with salt in barrels and sacks, and the voyage began.

At Osceola the news came that heavy rains for a week at the headwaters of the Osage in Kansas would keep the river at high water mark; and Crawford, the daring Osage river pilot, said he would try for Suns Point, or failing, he could stop at Bell View, a few miles below.

Suns Point was reached at four o'clock on the afternoon of the following day, and the river bank was full, but very narrow. It was so full that the presence of the boat forced the water out of its banks on to the low land. In an hour the water began to fall, and all hands rolled off the salt. Everybody who would work was hired to help. The unloading continued all night without interruption until four o'clock in the morning.

It was then observed that the narrow stream was not wide enough by ten feet to turn the boat around. Every available tool was put into use by deckhands and the bank of the river was dug down low enough to allow the stern of the boat to back into it, and by the aid of ropes and capstan the turn was made.

The unloading was completed, and at five o'clock the race for deep water began. The wood supply was running low when a woodyard was seen in the distance on the bank, some thirty miles below Suns Point. No time was lost in tying up and appropriating all the wood in the yard, and the little steamer was on her way to escape the shallow water. The mouth of the Osage below Jefferson City was reached before noon the following day.

Major Melton left his brother in charge of the salt at Suns Point, and in a week he had sold the last of his boatload of salt and was returning with $27,000, representing the profit of the trip.

GIVES BLOOD TO SAVE FOE

Yonkers Contractor Volunteers to Undergo Transfusion for Iron Manufacturer, Healing Strife.

Yonkers, N. Y.—The broken friendship of James J. Lynch, a contractor, and Thomas Morris, Jr., an iron manufacturer, is mended because of a sacrifice of blood by Lynch which has saved Morris' life.

Weak with a wasting illness, Morris' condition was serious. His physician sent word from the sickroom that a transfusion of blood from a healthy person was needed to bring about the patient's recovery, and he appealed to iron manufacturer's friends. None responded. Lynch, however, learning of the appeal, said he would forget a business disagreement that had made him and Morris enemies.

It was not until Lynch appeared at Morris's bedside and bared his wrist for an incision in a vein that Morris knew who had volunteered. Lynch stood the operation successfully and both men will recover.

GARIBALDI IS IN U. S.

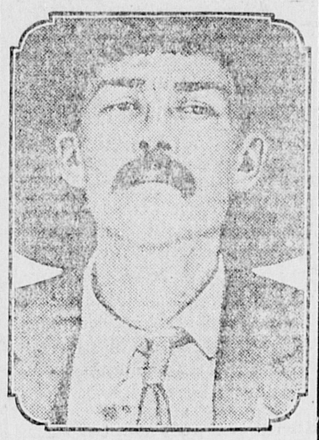

Six Republics Quietly Wondering What He Intends to Do Next.

True Soldier of Fortune—Has Risked Life in Half Dozen Wars and Escaped—Fought With Bulgaria—Gen. Orozco's Exploits.

New York.—Some folks say there is no such thing as luck. Tom Carter stepped off a two-inch curb the other day—and died. Gen. Joseph Garibaldi risked his neck in six wars and was never scratched. What's the answer?

Garibaldi is in town just now. Coincidentally, the rumor comes from the south that the revolutionary pot is on the fire in six South American republics. That may have something to do with Garibaldi's presence here and it may not. In any event, Garibaldi is one of the free lances of fortune one reads about and rarely sees. He has just returned from the war in Bulgaria, where he had an independent command. Before that he was Madero's chief of staff in Mexico—having fought his way to that position by metaphorically tweaking the nose of Bandit Orozco, the most dangerous foe to established order—any established order—that Mexico holds. Before that he sat in a black cell in Porto Cabella for seven months, at Gen. Castro's order, while he filed at his manacles with the bit of tin that had once been the top of a can of beans. And before that——

But that's the story that must be taken up item by item. Garibaldi is the grandson of the great Garibaldi, the liberator. Fighting runs in the Garibaldi blood. No doubt the Garibaldis are in earnest in their wish to free the world from the bonds of tyranny. There is little question that none of the Garibaldis likes any of the ruling families, and that all the ruling families would be grateful if some one would push the Garibaldis off a dock into particularly deep water. But mostly this Garibaldi fights because he likes fighting. Incidentally he has been rich from time to time. Money never lasted long. Also, when the map of the world seems sure of surreptitious alteration Garibaldi is one of those whose whereabouts are pegged by various secret police. The map is gradually changing color these days. Garibaldi offered to land 20,000 Italians in Tripoli at their own expense, armed and equipped and guaranteed fighting men. The Italian government refused the offer. The government needed men mighty badly, but it didn't care for any Garibaldis. He took 600 Greeks from New York to the war in the east at their own cost. Now he's back in New York. What pot's on the fire?

He's only a youngster in years—a scant thirty-three. But he has been at war for the past seventeen years.

Between times he has filled in with diplomatic and political missions. He has an eye for revolution like a hawk in the sky. Just after the ill-fated Madero raised his banner of revolt against Porfirio Diaz, Garibaldi appeared with eight comrades on the border and offered his services to Orozco, the bandit leader.

"I'll have none of you," growled Orozco. "You're too clean."

That's an insult to a soldier on the desert. But the eight started a revolution of their own—against Diaz, against Madero, against Orozco. Soon they were strong enough to make terms. Garibaldi took Juarez, and Madero made him his chief of staff.

"Back Felix Diaz and Huerta against a wall," Garibaldi advised. "Kill them now—to prevent the deaths of hundreds later on."

But Madero would not. He might have saved himself and his administration if he had taken the soldier's advice instead of listening to the dictates of his own gentle heart. Then Garibaldi went on to Tripoli and Bulgaria and where not—and now he's back in town.

Six republics wonder why.

Man's Superiority Early Shown.

Rude sculpture dating back, scientific authorities believe, at least 200,000 years, show that primitive man made representations of other creatures at a stage of human development when the conditions of existence were little in advance of those prevailing among the higher mammals of that period. But no other denizen of the earth manifested the slightest desire or ability to make images of anything.

DIFFER AS TO HEIR'S BRIDE

Alexandra and Mary Disagree Over Wife for Prince of Wales—Ban on German Princess.

London.—The engagement of the kaiser's only daughter, Princess Victoria Louise, to the son of the duke of Cumberland came as a great relief to Queen Mary, who has always dreaded that a marriage should be arranged for political reasons between the princess and the prince of Wales.

Typically English as the queen is, she would prefer her oldest son to marry an English girl if there were one of equal rank to be found within this country, but as this is not the case, she knows, of course, that the prince of Wales will eventually have to marry some foreign princess.

She has become quite resigned to this idea, but she still draws the line on German princesses, and hopes that the future king of England will eventually marry one of the czar's young daughters. On this point, however, she meets with strong opposition from Queen Alexandra, who maintains that it would be fatal to the best interests of coming royal generations to allow a union of two young people who are not only as closely related as are the prince of Wales and a daughter of the czar, but whose fathers are exact doubles of one another physically as well as mentally, and both very far from being robust. Queen

Queen Mary.

Alexandra also fears that her young Russian grandnieces may have inherited a strain of the melancholy of their beautiful and lovely mother.

As the young prince of Wales is of a very shy and rather effeminate disposition, Queen Alexandra maintains that the proper wife for him must be a strong, vivacious and spirited princess, and her favorite candidate is the oldest daughter of the king and queen of Italy, in whose veins flows the vigorous and healthy blood of the Montenegrin princes, who, although now of royal rank, are only a few generations removed from strong peasant ancestors.

Queen Mary's principal objection to the Italian princess favored by Queen Alexandra is that England's future queen ought to be a Protestant by birth.

ITS AGE IS TWO CENTURIES

Eliot School, Boston, Mass., Celebrates 200th Birthday—Has Occupied Four Buildings on Site.

Boston.—The Eliot Grammar school of Boston held exercises in celebration of the rounding out of the second century of its existence. The school was founded in 1712, when the sturdy fathers of colonial Boston voted to establish a school at the north end of the town to accommodate the growing population in that section. One year later the little edifice was completed and its doors thrown open. The school is the oldest elementary school in the city and the second oldest free school of any kind.

The original building lasted through the period of the revolution and was not torn down until 1792. The second building lasted until 1837 and the third persisted until 1860, when the present edifice was erected. All have occupied the same site, which is within a stone's throw of Christ's church, where Paul Revere's lanterns were hung.

Many famous men received their elementary education at the old Eliot school, among them Edward Everett, the famous statesman and orator, and Rev. Samuel S. Smith, author of "America." The last quarter of a century has seen great changes in the section of the city where the school is located, and today 90 per cent. of the pupils are the children of Italian and Jewish immigrants.

DREAMS HE'S ON VOLCANO

Man Uses Warmer in Bed and the Illusion Is Shattered on Arrival of Firemen.

Chicago.—All his life J. B. Greiner, 631 Lake avenue, Wilmette, has been troubled with cold feet. Finally he purchased an electric pad foot warmer. One night recently was the first time he had occasion to use it. Wrapping it carefully around his frigid feet, Greiner drifted off into pleasant dreams.

Warmth suffused his whole system. He was in a bathing suit, dabbling in the tropical waters of the gulf. He walked barefoot on warm, white sand. He swam in warm water far out into the gulf to a tiny speck in the distance. It was an island, the peak of a volcano.

The lava was warm and soothing to his former chilled feet. He sat on the edge of the crater and dabbled his feet in the seething water within.

"Wom!" "Oh-h-h!" "Ouch!"

A terrific shriek arose in the night and the echo reverberated. Flash! Just like that disappeared the warm vision. But some of it was real. Greiner could smell the crater's smoke.

Outside a clanging announced a fire department answering a call. Scorched feet within told Grenier that heat somewhere was real. Then a half-clad volunteer fireman of the Wilmette department burst into the room.

Ten minutes later that part of the bed and house that had caught fire from the foot warmer had been saved from further ruin, and Grenier soothed his burns with oil.

"Cold feet again," he mused disconsolately; "I might have known that dream of warmth was too good to be true."

MAN INJURED; SAVES LIMITED

Flagman Hurt in Wreck Stops Train Just in Time to Avoid Serious Accident.

Princeton, N. J.—Regardless of painful injuries he suffered a few moments before, when he had been thrown from the caboose of a wrecked freight train, Flagman John Schrenck limped back down the track and planted torpedoes on the rails to warn southbound Pennsylvania trains. The limited, which passes the point where the wreck of the freight occurred at a speed of 70 miles an hour, was laden with hundreds of New Yorkers bound for Washington. It was running on the passenger track across which lay one of the overturned freight cars. Schrenck had barely time to plant a torpedo when the train thundered by. It was brought to a stop less than 100 feet of the wreck.

FLYER SETS NEW AIR RECORD

Aviator Gilpatrick, With Feminine Passenger, Reaches 5,009 Feet Above Los Angeles.

Los Angeles, Cal.—With Miss Margaret Stahl of Jersey City, N. J., as a passenger in his De Perdussin monoplane, John Guy Gilpatrick, the youngest aviator in the world, again broke the American passenger carrying altitude record.

Starting from Fairfax park, the machine reached its highest altitude of 5,009 feet directly over the heart of Los Angeles.

The record, however, will not be considered official, because Gilpatrick's previous record of 4,660 feet was not exceeded by 500 feet, as required by the rules of the International Aeronautical federation.

GOING SOME

The college man made uncertainly for his bed, murmuring incoherently:

"I—I'm sick! I'm sick, Larry!" He fell limply at full length, and groaned "Call the race off!"

Glass snatched the missive from his employer's nerveless fingers, and read with bulging eyes, as follows:

"J. Wallingford Speed, Flying Heart Ranch, Kidder, N. M.:

"Don't tip off. Am in jail Omaha Looks like ten days.

"CULVER COVINGTON."

The trainer uttered a cry like that of a wounded animal.

"Call it off, Larry," moaned the Hope of the Flying Heart. "I've been poisoned!"

"Poisoned, eh?" said the fat man tremulously. "Poisoned! Nix! Not with me!" He walked firmly across the room, flung back the lid of Speed's athletic trunk, and began to paw through it feverishly. One after another he selected three heavy sweaters, then laid strong hands upon his protege and jerked him to his feet. "Sick, eh? Here, get into these!"

"What do you mean, Lawrence?" inquired his victim.

"If you get sick, I die." Glass opened the first sweater, and half-smothered his protege with it. "Hurry up! You're going into training!"

CHAPTER XI.

THAT was a terrible hour for J. Wallingford Speed. As for Larry, once he had grasped the full significance of the telegram, he became a different person. Some fierce electric charge wrought a chemical alteration in his every fiber; he became a domineering, iron-willed autocrat, obsessed by the one idea of his own preservation, and not hesitating to use physical force when force became necessary to lessen his peril.

Repeatedly Speed folded his arms over his stomach, rocked in the throes of anguish, and wailed that he was perishing of cramps; the trainer only snorted with derision. When he refused to don the clothes selected for him, Glass fell upon him like a raging grizzly.

"You won't, eh?" We'll see!"

Then Speed took refuge in anger, but the other cried:

"Never mind the hysterics, Bo. You're going to run off some blubber to-day."

"But I have to go riding!"

"Not a chance!"

"I tell you I'll run when I come back," maintained the youth, almost tearfully beseeching. "They're waiting for me."

"Let 'em gallop—you can run alongside."

"With all these sweaters? I'd have a sunstroke."

"It's the best thing for you. I never thought of that."

As Glass forced his protege toward the house, the other young people appeared clad for their excursion; their horses were tethered to the porch. And it was an ideal day for a ride—warm, bright, and inviting.

"We are ready!" called Jean gayly.

"What in the world—" Helen paused at sight of the swathed figure. "Are you cold, Mr. Speed?"

"Climb on your horses and get a start," panted the burly trainer; "he's goin' to race you ten miles."

"I'm going to do nothing of the sort. I'm going to—"

But Glass jerked him violently, crying:

"And no talkin' to gals, neither. You're trainin'. Now, get a move!"

Speed halted stubbornly.

"Hit her up, Wally! G'wan, now—faster! No loafing, Bo, or I'll wallop you!" Nor did he cease until they both paused from exhaustion. Even then he would not allow his charge to do more than regain his breath before urging him onward.

"See here," Wally stormed at last, "what's the use? I can't—"

"What's the use? That's the use!" Glass pointed to the north, where a lone horseman was watching them from a knoll. "D'you know who that is?"

The rider was small and stoop shouldered.

"Willie!"

"That's who."

"He's following us!"

With knees trembling beneath him Speed jogged feebly on down the road, Glass puffing at his heels.

When, after covering five miles, they finally returned to the Flying Heart, it was with difficulty that they could drag one foot after another. Wally Speed was drenched with perspiration, and Glass resembled nothing so much as a steaming pudding; rivulets of sweat ran down his neck, his face was purple, his lips swollen.

"Y-you'll have—to run alone—this afternoon," panted the tormentor.

"This afternoon? Haven't I run enough for—one day?" the victim pleaded. "Glass, old man, I—I'm all in, I tell you; I'm ready to die."

"Got to—fry off some more—leaf-lard," declared the trainer with vulgarity. He lumbered into the cook-house, radiating heat waves, puffing like a traction-engine, while his companion staggered to the gymnasium,

"D' You Know Who That Is?"

and sank into a chair. A moment later he appeared with two bottles of beer, one glued to his lips. Both were evidently ice cold, judging from the fog that covered them.

Speed rose with a cry.

"Gee! That looks good!"

But the other, thrusting him aside without removing the neck of the bottle from his lips, gurgled:

"No booze, Wally! You're trainin'!"

"But I'm thirsty!" shouted the athlete, laying hands upon the full bottle, and trying to wrench it free.

"Have a little sense. If you're thirsty hit the sink." Glass still maintained his hold, mumbling indistinctly: "Water's the worst thing in the world. Wait! I'll get you some."

He stepped into the bunk-room, to return an instant later with a cup half full. "Rinse out your mouth, and don't swallow it all."

"All! There isn't that much. Ugh! It's lukewarm. I want a bucket of ice-water—ice-water!"

"Nothing doing! I won't stand to have your epictetus chilled."

"My what?"

"Never mind now. Off with them clothes, and get under that shower. I guess it'll feel pretty good to-day."

Speed obeyed instructions sullenly, while his trainer, reclining in the cosy-corner, uncorked the second bottle. From behind the blanket curtains where the barrel stood, the former demanded:

"What did you mean by saying I'd have to run again this afternoon?"

"Starts!" said Glass, shortly.

"Starts?"

"Fast work. We been loafing so far; you got to get some ginger."

"Rats! What's the use?"

"No use at all. You couldn't outrun a steam-roller, but if you won't duck out, I've got to do my best. I'd as lief die of a gunshot-wound as starve to death in the desert."

"Do you suppose we could run away?"

"Could we!" Glass propped himself eagerly upon one elbow. "Leave it to me."

"No!" Wally resumed rubbing himself down. "I can't leave without looking like a quitter. Fresno would get her sure."

"What's the difference if you're astraddle of a cloud with a gold guitar in your lap?"

"Oh, they won't kill us."

"I tell you these cow-persons is desp'rate. If you stay here and run that race next Saturday, she'll tiptoe up on Sunday and put a rose in your hand, sure. I can see her now, all in black. Take it from me, Wally, we ain't goin' to have no luck in this thing."

"My dear fellow, the simplest way out of the difficulty is for me to injure myself—"

"Here!" Glass hopped to his feet and dove through the blankets. "None of that! Have a little regard for me. If you go lame it's my curtain."

All that day the trainer stayed close to his charge, never allowing him out of his sight, and when, late in the afternoon, Speed rebelled at the espionage, Glass merely shrugged his fat shoulders.

"But I want to be alone—with her. Can't you see?"

"I can, but I won't. Go as far as you like. I'll close my eyes."

"Or I'll close them for you!" The lad scowled; his companion laughed mirthlessly.

"Don't start nothin' like that—I'd ruin you. Gals is bad for a man in trainin' anyhow."

"I suppose I'm not to see her—"

"You can see her, but I want to hear what you say to her. No emotion till after this race, Wally."

"You're an idiot! This whole affair is preposterous—ridiculous."

"And yet it don't make us laugh, does it?" Glass mocked.

"If these cowboys make me run that race, they'll be sorry—mark my words, they'll be sorry."

Speed lighted a cigarette and inhaled deeply, but only once. The other lunged at him with a cry and snatched it. "Give me that cigarette!"

"I've had enough of this foolishness," Wally stormed. "You are discharged!"

"I wish I was."

"You are!"

"Not!"

"I say you are fired!" Glass stared at him. "Oh, I mean it! I won't be bullied."

"Very well." Glass rose ponderously. "I'll wise up that queen of yours, Mr. Speed."

"You aren't going to talk to Miss Blake? Wait!" Speed wilted miserably. "She mustn't know. I—I hire you over again."

"Suit yourself."

"You see, don't you? My love for Helen is the only serious thing I ever experienced," said the boy. "I—can't lose her. You've got to help me out."

And so it was agreed.

That evening, when the clock struck nine, J. Wallingford Speed was ready and willing to drag himself off to bed, in spite of the knowledge that Fresno was waiting to take his place in the hammock. He was racked by a thousand pains, his muscles were sore, his back lame. He was consumed by a thirst which Glass stoutly refused to let him quench, and possessed by a fearful longing for a smoke. When he dozed off, regardless of the snores from the bunk-house adjoining, Berkeley Fresno's musical tenor was sounding in his ears.

It seemed to Speed that he had barely closed his eyes when he felt a rough hand shaking him, and heard his trainer's voice calling, in a half-whisper: "Come on, Cull! Get up!"

When he turned over it was only to be shaken into complete wakefulness.

"Hurry up, it's daylight!"

"Where?"

"Come, now, you got to run five miles before breakfast!"

Speed sat up with a groan. "If I run five miles," he said, "I won't want any breakfast," and he laid himself down again gratefully—he was very sore—whereat his companion fairly dragged him out of bed. As yet the room was black, although the windows were grayed by the first faint streaks of dawn. From the adjoining room came a chorus of distress: snores of every size, volume, and degree of intensity, from the last harrowing gasp of strangulation to the bold trumpetings of a bull moose. There were long-drawn sighs, groans of torture, rumbling blasts. Speed shuddered.

"They sound like a troop of trained sea-lions," he said.

"Don't wake 'em up. Here!" Glass yawned widely, and tossed a bundle of sweaters at his companion.

"Ugh! These clothes are all wet and cold, and—it feels like blood!"

"Nothin' but the mornin' dew."

"It's perspiration."

"Well, a little sweat won't hurt you."

"Nasty word." Speed yawned in turn. "Perspiration! I can't wear wet clothes," and would have crept back into his bed.

This time Glass deposited him upon a stool beside the table, and then lighted a candle, by the sickly glare of which he selected a pair of running-shoes.

"Why didn't you leave me alone?" grumbled the younger man. "The only pleasure I get is in sleep—I forget things then."

"Yes," retorted the former, sarcastically, "and you also seem to forget that these are our last days among the living. Saturday the big thing comes off."

"Forget! I dreamed about it!" The boy sighed heavily. It was the hour in which hope reaches its lowest ebb and vitality is weakest. He was very cold and very miserable.

"You ain't got no edge on me," the other acknowledged, mournfully. "I'm too young to die, and that's a bet."

Suddenly the pandemonium in the bunk-house was pierced by the brazen jangle of an alarm-clock, whereat a sleepy voice cried:

"Cloudy, kill that ——— clock!"

"The Indian uttered some indistinguishable epithet, and the next instant there came a crash as the offending timepiece was hurled violently against the wall.

In silence Glass shoved his unsteady victim ahead of him out into the dawn. In the east the sun was rising amid a riotous splendor. At any other time, under any other circumstances, Speed could not have restrained his admiration, for the whole world was a glorious sparkling panoply of color. But to the stiff and wearied Eastern lad it was all cruelly mocking. When he halted listlessly to view its beauties he was goaded forward, ever forward, faster and faster, until finally, amid protests and sighs and complaining joints, he broke into a heavy, flat-footed jog-trot that jolted the artistic sense entirely out of him.

Packing Food in Ferns.

In Germany the use of ferns is coming into more and more favor for packing food which is transported either short or long distances. The practice became common in England before it gained equal vogue in Germany, and the results are said to be excellent, especially in shipping fresh fruit, butter, fish and other food products which require unusual care.

MOOSE DISCUSS NEW HOME

Several Available Sites Under Consideration by Special Committee

Woburn Lodge 1214 Loyal Order of Moose held a regular meeting last evening. There was a large gathering of members. The proposed Moose Home was discussed at considerable length, but nothing definite was done.

There is a standing committee on this matter, and several prospective well adapted sites are under consideration.

The committee will look further into the advantages of the various sites and report later.

National Director A. W. Hayden and National Secretary William J. Reid attended and spoke briefly. It is planned to have a large class initiation at the meeting which takes place on next Monday night.

The decorations were in the form of long streamers of Japanese lanterns hung from the chandeliers to the stage. The platform of the stage was banked with a mass of Easter lilies and tulips in full bloom.

About 30 couples attended and a most enjoyable evening was passed. Two favor dances were included in the program.

HEALTH BOARD MEET TODAY

Important Business will be Action on Resignation of Clerk Hall

The board of health is scheduled to hold its regular meeting this afternoon at 4.30 o'clock. Action on the resignation of Major Henry C. Hall who has been clerk of the board for more than six years will be in order, as the resignation takes effect on March 31, and unless Major Hall should reconsider his determination to retire a clerk must be selected for the next meeting.

The duties of clerk of the board of health are of a varied nature and require intimate knowledge with the health laws, most of the laws being in the Public statutes. The retiring clerk has familiarized himself with all the health laws and regulations that affect the local health department, and it will be difficult for the board to elect a successor to him who will have so complete a grasp upon the duties of the office. The position comes under the civil service laws, but as there is no eligible list the board can name a temporary clerk, who will, in all probability be recognized by the Civil service commission as a provisional civil service appointee.

SAVAGE AND KERRIGAN WIN POOL GAME

Defeat Haley and Cogan in Montvale Tournament by Close Score

With the close of the Lenten season the tournament pool games which have been temporarily abandoned at the rooms of Div. 18, A.O.H. Montvale were renewed, with Thomas Haley and William Cogan lined up against Hugh Savage and William Kerrigan.

Savage and Kerrigan won 100 balls to 96, and as the score shows the players were in grand shape after the lay off, and the game was a hot battle from beginning to end.

In the first frame Savage and Kerrigan started off like dead sure winners scoring 12 to 3 for their opponents, but the Haley-Cogan element stuck, and got the long end of the second frame and by pocketing 11 balls in the third took the lead 23 to 22. The end of the fourth frame showed the score even up, 30 for each team, and it was anybody's contest.

But in the next frame the Savage Kerrigan combine went after the game and took a commanding lead putting away the whole fifteen balls and making the score 45 to 30. They held their advantage without much trouble, and gradually increased their lead until the ninth and tenth frames when Haley and Cogan made a net game of six balls. The shooting by each player was excellent all the way through, and the game was a beauty from a spectators viewpoint.

A much delayed but long promised rally by Haley and Cogan came off in the twelfth frame, and Cogan exhibition of pool. He made a run of 10 balls, some of the shots being cleanly made from difficult angles, and his clever work put his team in the running again, the score at the end of this frame standing 92 to 88 in favor of Savage and Kerrigan. The next frame was a nerve wrecker, Haley and Cogan getting the long end and making their total 96 to 99 for the enemy. Savage and Kerrigan scored the winning ball in the fourteenth.

Kerrigan in the fifth frame got a hand for some nice work, making a run of twelve, including three neat corner pocket doubles. He fell down on a hard corner drive. Savage, the Gelatine wonder, shone in the ninth, by a series of nifty shots. Haley and Cogan made a big hit by a swell rally in the twelfth frame, both contributing some handsome pool shooting. Tonight it is uncertain who the opposing teams will be, as the game drawn for this evening cannot be played owing to the illness of one of the players. If possible one of the other unplayed matches will be substituted. The score of last night's game by frames:—

When Antelope Was Plentiful.

Transcontinental travelers, who nowadays in their journey through the west seldom see any game larger than a prairie dog or jack rabbit, will be interested in this item reprinted from the Rocky Mountain Herald of some fifty years ago: "Passengers report that antelope have never been seen so numerous as now. Herds of antelope larger than any flock of sheep in the world are frequently spoken of."

MONTVALE

Mr. and Mrs. McMahon of 11 Thorn street, have returned from a visit to Washington, D. C.

A high spirited horse owned by Thomas Lynch, grocer, driven by John McCall became frightened yesterday on Perry street, and ran away. The wagon became wedged between two trees on the roadside and the animal came to a stop. The wagon was badly damaged, the front wheels being rendered practically useless. The high wind was the cause of the runaway. while McCall was taking orders the wind dissarranged the blanket on the horse and the animal dashed madly down the street. The house was uninjured.

The next, and last neighborhood meeting, will be held Thursday evening at the home of Thomas T. Sidelinker, on Woburn street.

Modern Astronomy.

The popular idea of the astronomer, says a writer in the World's Work, as one who spends his time in sleeping by day and peering through the small end of a telescope by night, must be dismissed. "The greater part of the modern astronomer's time," says the article, "is spent in studying photographs," often with a microscope. "Paradoxical as it may seem, an astronomer today gazes more often through a telescope."

MOTION PICTURES IN SCHOOLS

Superintendent George I. Clapp submitted a report to the school board at its regular meeting last evening in which he briefly touched upon the most prominent features of the recent convention of school superintendents held in Philadelphia. Mayor Henchey presided and the committeemen present were Messrs Clark, Crosby, Brown, Linscott and Maguire.

Mr. Clapp said that the most significant matter discussed was the revision of the course of study in the upper grammar grades and in the high school. The convention was unanimous in the opinion that present conditions demanded a revision of the course of study, and the adoption of agricultural, trade, commercial, domestic science and part time courses. The part time course means that the school time of the pupil is divided between working and studying. The superintendent stated that it could not be expected that Woburn handicapped as it is financially would be able to accept at once all the different improved studies, but he felt that something should be done in response to the public demand for a revision of the course of study.

The recommendation of the state board of education that legislation be enacted that will equalize educational opportunities, was explained by Superintendent Clapp and if the bill which is now before the general court passes Woburn will profit materially.

One plan is to have the state assess each city and town according to the average number of pupils, and another plan is to base the assessment on the average number of pupils combined with the financial resources of a community. By the former plan Woburn would be assessed $11491, and in the redistribution of funds would receive $23,411.07. If the other plan by which financial resources are to be considered is adopted the Woburn assessment would be the same, but in the redistribution of money would be awarded $38,278.

Superintendent Clapp also reported that he had investigated the probable cost of purchasing and installing a motion picture machine and he found that the minimum amount was $300.

This sum will cover the cost of purchase and wiring in two schools, and also pay for necessary equipment. The machine is so simple that it can be operated by anybody with a license, and a booth is not necessary. The report was tabled until the next meeting when the city council will be asked to appropriate funds.

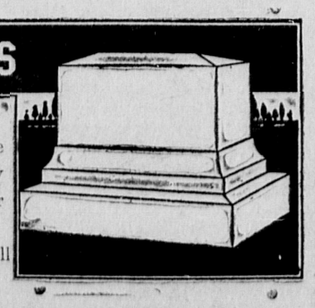

The committee on buildings and hygiene was authorized to confer with the board of public works for the purpose of having automobile warning signs placed on Main street, near the Lawrence, Cummings, Hanson, Wyman and Rumford schools, and at the Cedar street school in Montvale.

A recommendation from the superintendent that Clark's "General Science" and Carhart's and Chute's "Physics" be adopted at the high school was referred to the committee on text books and course of study. It was voted to purchase 38 copies of Hudson's new edition of Shakespeare's "Mac-

ST. CHARLES C. T. A. S. MINSTREL SHOW

Two-Night Show will Open in Lyceum Hall this Evening

The St. Charles C. T. A. boys' annual minstrel show long since became a fixture in local entertainment history. The society has many a success to its credit, but this season's offering bids fair to rival anything in the past that the club has done.

This year it will be a two-night show, the first performance being this evening in Lyceum hall. Tomorrow night it will be repeated and dancing will follow the second show. For many years the St. Charles society has pre-empted March 17 for its annual one-night entertainment, but this year the date fell in Holy week and a change was made, which has its advantages for it allows a second performance.

In the way of talent billed below there are several who have already won their spurs in the walks of minstrelsy, and in addition there are others who are ambitions to shine in this line. Rehearsals indicate that the show of 1913 will be a record one for attendance and quality. The program:—

LADIES NIGHT AT TOWANDA

A Very Successful Function, and Excellent Entertainment

The popularity of the Towanda club was attested last evening when in spite of the disagreeable weather conditions two hundred and fifty guests gathered at the clubhouse, the occasion being the annual ladies' night of the club.

The entertiinment committee for 1913, of which Roland Dow is chairman, made its debut and won golden opinions upon the success attending its efforts. The talent last evening is known as the Brooke trio, and comprises: Arthur Brooke, flute, and Ludwig Nast, 'cello, both of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and Miss Ethel Harding, piano.

The offering by these talented artists was of a superior order, and the program a well-balanced group of compositions of standard quality. In concerted and solo numbers, artistic interpretation was a prominent characteristic. Miss Harding's solo numbers for the piano were brilliant examples of finished technique, but it was in her ensemble work that the artist showed her sympathetic and intelligent appreciation of the sentiment of the composition. As an accompanist, Miss Harding has few if any superiors.

It was the consensus of opinion that Towanda has never had a better musical entertainment than that of last evening, and it is doubtful if better has ever been presented before a Woburn audience. The program:—

Trio—Opus 63. four movements	Weber
'Cello solos—Transcription of Southern songs	Strube
Scherzo	Von Goens
Duet for 'Cello and Flute—Souvenir Di Rigi	Doppler
Piano solo—Tarantella	Liszt
Trio—Adagio	Kuhalan
Valser Marchen	Schutte
Flute solo—Souvenir De	L'Opera
	De Jong
Trio—(a) Dream of Love	Liszt
(b) Scherzo	Bohm
(c) Allegro giusto	Bohm

George H. Newhall fell into Cavity Resulting from Heavy Rain

George H. Newhall, a civil war veteran of advanced years who resides with his daughter, Mrs. J. Albert Dickinson at 1 Johnson street was the victim of a serious and unusual accident at 1 o'clock this afternoon. He sustained a severe shock and many bruises. Medical aid was summoned, Dr. C. Guy Lane responding. Mr. Newhall was later removed to his home.

The cause of the accident lay in the washing away of the earth beneath the sidewalk surface by the heavy rain. The hole was about four feet across and six feet deep.

RAILROAD COMMISSION HEARS PROTESTS

Woburn not Represented at Hearing on Congestion at Sullivan Square Terminal

The Massachusetts railroad commission met yesterday morning at 10.30 o'clock to hear petitioners from Somerville, Medford and Woburn, for better accomodations by the Boston elevated company for suburban passengers at the Sullivan square terminal.

Upon order of Alderman Blake the Woburn city council at its last meeting in February adopted an order asking for the hearing, but yesterday not a single Woburn representative attended.

There was a fair attendance from Medford, Malden and Somerville, and the speakers all protested against the inadequate provision for residents of suburban cities and towns at the terminal.

The commission took the matter under advisement, and announced that a conference would be held with the Elevated railway officials on April 8.

GENTLEMEN

Answer truthfully. Is there any necessity which causes you more frequent annoyance than shaving? You know well it can't be avoided, and you also know better still how much valuable time you frequently have to waste in order to get shaved. Why not have an emergency razor and shave yourself when time is precious.

Mark Cross Safety Razors 25c.

Think of it! A safety razor for 25c. Why any man should let the act of shaving bother him now, with all the various safety razors, it is hard to understand. If you have never tried shaving, don't wait until you are in an awful hurry some day to try a 25c. safety razor, but buy one now and try it at your convenience and you will amaze yourself with the pleasing results. WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 1913.

Of the one hundred and thirteen honor students at Wellesley college, thirty-two, an unprecedented number, are from New England, and one, Miss Eleanor F. Fowle is from Woburn. The highest honors are accorded to fifty-two of the young women, and again Woburn is represented. These pupils are selected as the Durant honor students, twenty-nine being seniors and twenty-three juniors. Of these ten seniors and seven juniors are from New England, and Miss Fowle is included in the seven. Truly, Woburn has reason to feel proud of its schools and the young men and women who have been developed here to win honors and high rank in the higher institutions of learning elsewhere. Coming into competition as they do, with those from all over the United States, and from all schools, this is a distinct credit to the Woburn schools.

o-o-o

The school committee is seriously considering the installation of motion picture machines in several school buildings. This invention is rapidly growing in favor as an adjunct of the school. By its aid the pupils are given a realistic idea of the subject treated in the text book, and the impression is more lasting than that received in any other way. Just so rapidly as financial conditions shall permit the work of installation should go until every school building in Woburn is so equipped.

o-o-o

In permitting Mrs. Elizabeth R. White of the Anti-Cigarette league permission to visit the public schools, the school committe took a commendable step. The crusade against cigarette smoking by the youth of our land is worthy the support of every parent. This deleterious habit exists to an alarming extent among young men of school age, and Mrs. White in appealing to the pupils direct is striking directly at the root of the evil.

Superintendent Clapp stated that the school appropriation by the city council was $5,667.31 less than the estimate submitted, and that it would be impossible to pay for summer repairs with the money available. HEALTH BOARD FAILS TO MEET

Special Session to be Held next Monday Afternoon to choose Clerk

The board of health did not meet yesterday afternoon as scheduled. The meeting was abandoned by agreement, and the present intention is to hold a special session on next Monday afternoon, at which a successor to Clerk Hall will be chosen. The resignation of Clerk Hall takes effect on next Tuesday.

There is much unfinished business with which the retiring clerk is familiar, and it is his desire, and also the desire of the members of the board to have all unfinished items disposed of if possible, before the new clerk assumes his duties.

The only announced aspirant to the position held for the past six years by Major Hall is William E. Goode of 28 North Warren street. He is now employed at the jewelry store of Smith and Varney, and rumor has it that he stands an excellent chance to land the berth.

DRAW FOR BRIDES

Cowboy Brothers Wed Sisters After Courtship by Mail.

All Started by Pictures Sent by the Boys From the Canadian Northwest to Their Sister in Brussels.

New York.—Introduced by mail, paired by a draw of straws, and wedded by the same ceremony, by the same pastor, in the same church and on the same night, Messrs. and Mesdames Gaston and George Pootmans, newly wed brothers and sisters, respectively, who arrived on the Red Star liner Vaderland from Antwerp, told friends who came to the pier to meet them that they had had quite enough of romance for four and they were going back to Regina, Canada, and go into the cattle-raising business. Up to last week the brides and bridegrooms had never seen each other, although they felt that they had established somewhat of an intimacy through the mails.

The brothers came over from Brussels three years ago and worked as cowboys on a cattle ranch in Saskatchewan, Canada.

Before they had ridden the range long they had their pictures taken in their western garb and mailed back to their sister, Millie, in Brussels.

Now, Miss Millie Pootmans had two dear friends in Brussels. Their names were Georgette and Lea Terwagne. Nothing was more natural, therefore than that she should exhibit the pictures of her brothers in their pioneer roles to the friends.

"Let's write to them just for fun," offered Miss Georgette, after she had perused the pictures in company with her sister Lea for a bit.

The bargain was struck. The return mail brought two letters in the same delicately perfumed envelope, addressed to the "Pootmans Brothers." The next east-bound mail carried letters to the sisters.

The pairs had been introduced by Miss Millie Pootmans, the sister of the cowboys, and so all parties to the transaction felt that the proceeding was sanctioned by the strictest rules of etiquette. Besides, it was such great fun. It was, for a fact.

A few weeks ago the cowboys decided to take a little vacation and "drop back home." Before boarding the train for New York, where they had engaged passage, Gaston called his brother to one side and suggested that he might have other company on the homeward trip.

"That's nothing to me," returned the other. "I have had similar thoughts myself."

"But which one are you going to take?" asked the other.

"Whichever one will accept me," was Gaston's reply.

After more of this sort of parley the boys agreed to leave their fates to straws. The one that drew the long straw was to propose to Miss Georgette and the other was to seek the hand of Miss Lea. As it happened Gaston drew the long straw and that is one reason why he is the husband of Miss Georgette. The other said at the pier that he was eminently satisfied with having drawn the shorter straw.

The wedding was arranged for in short order upon the arrival of the cowboys on the other side and the two brides declared themselves highly pleased at the pier.

The Pootmases are going to establish ranches of their own upon their return to the Canadian province. Gaston Pootmans is twenty-eight years old. His brother is three years his junior. Gaston's wife is twenty, and her sister two years younger.

TRACING A SON OF NAPOLEON

Investigators Believe One Buried in an Old Cemetery at San Francisco.

San Francisco, Cal.—A meeting held in the old Laurel Hill cemetery to protest against the removal of its dead has revived a controversy as to whether a son of the first Napoleon lies in the ancient burial ground. Dr W. F. McNutt has begun an investigation to ascertain the facts. He says he is in communication with an old jeweler living in Sacramento who knew Gordon, the reputed son of the French emperor. Through this jeweler an effort will be made to determine whether this Gordon was the person who Professor Fournier of Vienna affirms was the son of Napoleon by an English woman named Gordon.

Professor Fournier has written to McNutt that this son of the little Corsican whom history has slighted was a jeweler, and that, after leaving his birthplace at St. Helena, he wandered to San Francisco, where he practiced his craft.

Under Real Estate Laws.

A man's interest in real estate under the laws of the United States extends from the middle of the earth to the blue empyrean. But if a man neglects to enclose his property, there is no jury in the country likely to convict another man of trespass for taking a short cut across one corner of it. And, by the same token, under existing laws, a property owner would have to enclose his share of the sky before he could hope to convict an aviator on a charge of trespassing.

THE MURDERED KING OF GREECE

Georgios I, King of Greece, who was recently assassinated, was not, as might have been supposed, a Greek. He was the second son of King Christian IX of the House of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glucksburg, king of Denmark. His given name was Wilhelm. He was born December 24, 1845, and on March 31, 1863, he was elected King of the Hellenes, under the title of Georgios I, by the Greek National assembly. His wife was Olga, niece of the late Czar Alexander II of Russia. He is succeeded by his eldest son, Konstantios, born August 2, 1868.

The royal family of Denmark is in many ways remarkable. The eldest son of Christian IX is now Frederick VIII, king of Denmark, Wilhelm, as above noted, became king of Greece. Alexandra, next younger than Frederick, was the wife of Edward VII of England, and is now Queen Dowager. Marie Dagmar, fourth child, married Alexander III of Russia, becoming the Empress Maria-Feodorovna. Princess Thyra and Prince Waldemar married into collateral branches of royal families. In addition to the Danish lines thus grafted upon the thrones of England, Greece, and Russia, a grandson, Karl, son of the present king of Denmark, became in 1905, Haakon VII, King of Norway.

The relationships of the royal families of Europe are very intricate and not generally well understood in their political significance. Such books as the Statesman's Year-book, and Whitaker's Almanac are invaluable in unravelling the tangle. They also contain a vast store of political and statistical information.

SOME NEW BOOKS ON THE BALKAN WAR

Two new books, the first fruits of the Balkan war, will be on our new-book shelves this week. They are from the pens of actual eye-witnesses of the hostilities, but from opposite points of view.

With the Victorious Bulgarians, by Lieutenant Hermengild Wagner, special correspondent of the London Daily Mail, is said to "form by far the most brilliant piece of journalistic work done in this war, and one of the best performed in any war."

The Balkan War, by Philip Gibbs and Bernard Grant, offers a contrast to the foregoing, inasmuch as one of the authors was attached to the Turkish army, and was thus able to supply information less easy of access.

The death has just occurred of Mr. William Hale White. He was better known by his pseudonym of Mark Rutherford, under which his books appeared.

COAL MINER'S RISE TO POWER

Joseph Cook Becomes Leader of Liberal Party in Australia by Big Majority Over Sir John Forrest.

Melbourne.—Joseph Cook has been elected leader of the liberal party in Australia, with a substantial majority over Sir John Forrest and Mr. Irvine at the federal liberal caucus.

Mr. Deakin's resignation was accepted with profound expressions of regret and acknowledgments of his great services to Australia and the empire. The party gladly accepted the ex-leared's offer to assist in the referendum platform campaign, for the reason that, although the protectionists are disappointed at Sir John Forrest's defeat, no third party can be formed at the present juncture. The labor party anticipates that Mr. Cook's selection improves the chances of capturing seats in Victoria and South Australia.

Mr. Cook was at one time a working miner. He was born at Silverdale, Staffordshire, England, in 1860, and when twenty-five years of age emigrated to Australia, and obtained work in the Lithgow coalfields. Two years later he was appointed general secretary of the Miners' association and was returned to the New South Wales parliament as a labor member in 1891. He has been the recognized leader of the free trade section.

FREED ON MYTHICAL PAROLE

Sheriff Took Some One's Word for It on Way to Prison and Turned His Man Loose.

Santa Fe, N. M.—Octaviano Telles, convicted in 1909 of complicity in the murder of a man in Valencia county, in 1890, and who has been at liberty for more than three years under the impression that he had been granted a parole by the governor, has begun serving a sentence of three years in the state penitentiary. The fact that a parole was never granted Teles was discovered recently by Governor McDonald, and he ordered the man's arrest and incarceration.

After the murder Telles left the Territory and remained away for fifteen years. Suspicion had strongly attached to him. He returned in 1909 and was tried and convicted. In custody of the sheriff he started for the prison here. When the train reached Albuquerque the sheriff was advised by some man, whose name is not mentioned, that he was going to the capital for a parole. In a few hours the sheriff was advised that the parole was granted and Telles was allowed to go back to his farm.

HANGS HEAD DOWN 2 HOURS

In Odd Position Woodchopper Fires Revolver and Aid Finally Comes.

Newton, N. J.—Hanging head down with his leg caught in the crotch of a tree twenty feet above the ground, John Finnan, a farm hand, spent two hours of agony. The leg which was caught in the tree was broken.

Finnan had chopped down a tree for firewood, but in falling its branches caught in those of another tree. In an effort by Finnan to get the tree free it fell and his leg was caught and broken.

Finnan managed to reach his revolver and he fired its contents to attract attention.

The man who first responded had to call help and then a block and fall had to be rigged in the tree above Finnan and his weight placed on it before the leg could be freed.

The trunk of the tree was not large enough for a third man to work aloft, so one had to do all the climbing and rigging. Meanwhile Finnan's position was eased as much as possible by another man standing below him and holding up on his shoulders. When finally lowered Finnan was in a faint and he remained unconscious for hours, but will recover.

$35,000 for Boy Refused.

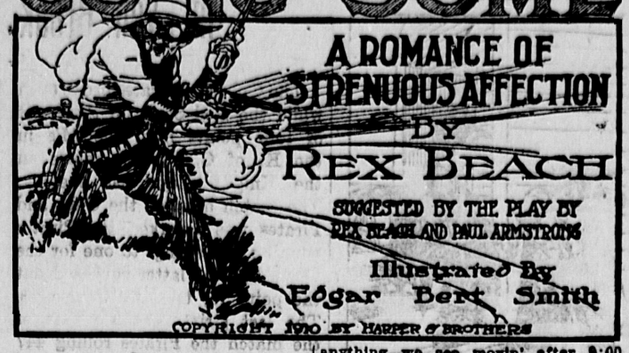

St. Louis, Mo.—Mr. and Mrs. Julius Baron, 4423 Evans avenue, although parents of 11 children, have declined an offer of $35,000, made by a childless society woman, for permission to adopt their youngest son, Arthur, 15 years old, a musical prodigy. The woman assured Mrs. Baron that, if the boy was given to her in legal adoption, she would give him her family name and take him to Europe for education. She wept when the offer was refused.

FAMOUS HOTEL IS CLOSED

Tontine, New Haven, Yale Men's Banquet Headquarters, to Be Razed.

New Haven, Conn.—The Tontine hotel, for years the headquarters for Yale class reunions, was closed recently after an existence of nearly a century. It will be demolished to make way for a new $2,000,000 post office. The hotel contained a ball room, made famous by Governor Buckingham, Connecticut's Civil war governor, who led a grand march there at his inaugural. Chauncey M Depew and other distinguished Yale graduates used to make it their headquarters when here for Yale events. George White had been proprietor for a quarter of a century.

GOING SOME

CHAPTER XII.

IT WAS usually a procedure not alone of difficulty but of diplomacy as well, to rout out the ranch-hands of the Flying Heart without engendering hostile relations that might bear fruit during the day. This morning Still Bill Stover had more than his customary share of trouble, for they seemed pessimistic.

Carara, for instance, breathed a Spanish oath as he combed his hair, and when the foreman inquired the reason, replied:

"I don' sleep good. I been t'ink mebbe I lose my saddle on this foot race."

Cloudy, whose toilet was much less intricate, grunted from the shadows:

"I thought I heard that phonograph all night."

"It was the Natif Son singin' to his gal," explained one of the hands. "He's gettin' on my nerves, too. If he wasn't a friend of the boss, I'd sure take a surcingle and abate him considerable."

"Vat you t'ank? I dream' Mr Speed is ron avay an' broke his leg," volunteered Murphy, the Swede, whose name New Mexico had shortened from Bjorth Kjelliser.

"Run away?"

"Ya-as! I dream' he's out for little ron ven piece of noosepaper blow up in his face an' mak' him ron avay, yust same as horse. He snort an' yump, an' ron till he step in prairie-dog hole and broke his leg."

"Strange!" said Willie.

"What?"

"My rest was fitful and disturbed and peopled by strange fancies a whole lot. I dreamp' he throwed the race!"

A chorus of oaths from the bunks.

"What did you do?" inquired Stover.

"I woke up, all of a tremble, with a gun in each hand."

"Well, I'm the last person in the world to be superstitious," Still Bill observed, "but I've had sim'lar visions lately."

"Maybe it's a om-en."

"What is a om-en?" Carara inquired.

"A om-en," explained Willie, "is a kind of a nut. Salted om-ens is served at swell restarawnts with the soup."

In the midst of it Joy, the cook, appeared in the doorway, and spoke in his gentle, ingratiating tones:

"Morning, gel'mun. I see 'im again."

"No savvy who; stlange man! I go down to spling-house for bucket water; see 'im lide 'way. Velly stlange!"

"I bet it's Gallagher."

"Vat you tank he vants?" queried Murphy.

"He's layin' to get a shot at our runner," declared Stover, while Mr Cloudy, forgetting his Indian reserve explained in classic English his own theory of the nocturnal visits.

"Do you remember Humpy Joe? Well, they didn't cripple him, but he lost. I don't think Gallagher would injure Mr. Speed, but—he might—bribe him."

"Caramba!" exclaimed the Mexican.

"God 'lmighty!" Willie cried, in shocked accents.

"I believe you're right, but"—Stover

"I See 'Im Lide 'way. Velly Stlange."

meditated briefly before announcing with determination—"we'll do a little night-ridin' ourselves. Willie, you watch this young feller daytimes, and the rest of us'll take turns at night. An' don't lose sight of the fat man, neither—he might carry notes. If you don't like the looks of things—you know what cards to draw."

"Sixes," murmured the near-sighted cow-man. "Don't worry."

"If you see anything suspicious, burn it up. And we'll take a shot at anything we see movin' after 9:00 p. m."

Then Berkeley Fresno came hurriedly into the bunk-house with a very cheery "Good-morning! I'm glad I found you up and doing," he said blithely. "I thought of something in my sleep." It was evident that the speaker had been in more than ordinary haste to make his discovery known, for underneath his coat he still wore his pajama shirt, and his hair was unbrushed.

"What is it?"

"Your man Speed isn't taking care of himself."

"What did I tell you?" said Willie to his companions.

"It seems to me that in justice to you boys he shouldn't act this way," Fresno ran on. "Now, for instance, the water in his shower-bath is tepid."

There was an instant's silence before Stover inquired, with ominous restraint:

"Who's been monkeying with it?"

"It's warm!"

"Oh!" It was a sigh of relief.

"A man can't get in shape taking warm shower-baths. Warm water weakens a person."

"Mebbe you-all will listen to me next time!" again cried Willie, triumphantly. "I said at the start that a bath never helped nobody. When they're hot they saps a man's courage, and when they're cold they—"

Four Cowboys Were Staggering Beneath Dripping Gunny-Sacks.

"No, no! You don't understand! For an athlete the bath ought to be cold—the colder the better. It's the shock that hardens a fellow."

"Has he weakened himself much?" inquired the foreman.

"Undoubtedly, but—"

"What?"

"If we only had some ice—"

"We got ice; plenty of it. We got a load from the railroad yesterday."

"Then our only chance to save him is to fill the barrel quickly. We must freeze him, and freeze him well, before it is too late! By Jove! I'm glad I thought of it!"

Stover turned to his men. "Four of you-all hustle up a couple hundred pounds of that ice pronto! Crack it, an' fill the bar'l." There was a scramble for the door.

"And there's something else, too," went on Berkeley. "He's being fed wrong for his last days of training. the idea af a man eating lamb-chops, fried eggs, oatmeal, and all that debilitating stuff! Those girls overload his stomach. Why, he ought to have something to make him strong—fierce!"

"Name it," said Willie, shortly.

"Something like—like—bear meat."

"We ain't got no bear." Willie looked chagrined.

"This ain't their habitat," added Stover apologetically.

"Well, he ought to have meat, and it ought to be wild—raw, if possible."

"Their ain't nothin' wilder 'n a long horn. We can git him a steer."

"You are sure the meat isn't too tender?"

"It's tougher 'n a night in jail."

"Good! The rarer it is the better. Some raw eggs and a good strong vegetable—"

"Onions?"

"Fine! We'll save him yet!"

"We'll get the grub."

"And he'll eat it!" Willie nodded firmly.

Stover issued another order, this time to Carara.

"You 'n Cloudy butcher the wildest four-year-old you can find. If you can't get close enough to rope him, shoot him, and bring in a hind quarter. It's got to be here in time for breakfast."

"Si, Senor!" The Mexican picked up his lariat; the Indian took a Winchester from an upper bunk and filled it with cartridges.

"Of course, he'll have to eat out aere; they spoil him up at the house."

"Sure thing!"

"I'd hate to see him lose; it would be a terrible blow to Miss Blake." Fresno shook his head doubtfully.

"What about us?"

"Oh, you can stand it—but she's a girl. Ah, well," the speaker sighed, "I hope nothing occurs between now and Saturday to prevent his running."

"It won't," Stover grimly assured the Californian. "Nothin' whatever is goin' to occur."

"He was speaking yesterday about the possibility of some business engagement—"

The small man in glasses interrupted. "Nothin' but death shall take him from us, Mr. Fresno."

"If I think of anything else," offered Berkeley, kindly, "I'll tell you."

"We wish you would."

Fresno returned to the house, humming cheerily. It was still an hour until his breakfast-time, but he had accomplished much. In the midst of his meditation he came upon Miss Blake emerging upon the rear porch.

"Good-morning!" he cried. She started a trifle guiltily. "What are you doing at this hour?"

"Oh, I just love the morning air," she answered.

"Same here! 'Honesty goes to bed early, and industry rises betimes.' That's me!"

"Then you have been working?"

Fresno nodded. He was looking at four cowboys who were entering the gymnasium, staggering beneath dripping gunny-sacks. Then he turned his gaze searchingly upon the girl.

"Were you looking for Speed?" he asked accusingly.

"The idea!" Miss Blake flushed faintly.

"If you are, he has gone for a run. I dearly love to see him get up early and run, he enjoys it so."

"I have been baking a cake," said Helen, displaying the traces of her occupation upon her hands, arms, and apron, while Fresno, at sight of the blue apron tied at her throat and waist, felt that he himself was as dough in her hands. "I had a dreadful time to make it rise."

"If I were a cake I would rise at your lightest word."

"The cook said it wouldn't be fit to eat," declared Helen.

"I should love to eat your cooking."

"Once in a while, perhaps, but not every day."

"Every day—always and always. You know what I mean, Miss Blake—Helen!" The young man bent a lover's gaze upon his companion until he detected her eyes fastened with startled inquiry upon his toilet. Remembering, he buttoned his coat, but ran on. "This is the first chance I've had to see you alone since Speed arrived. There's something I want to ask you."

"I—I know what it is," stammered Helen. "You want me to let you sing again. Please do. I love morning music—and your voice is so tender."

"Life," said Berkeley, "is one sweet—"

"What is going on here?" demanded a voice behind them, and Mrs. Keap came out upon the porch, eying the pair suspiciously. It was evident that she, like Fresno, had dressed hurriedly.

"Mr. Fresno is going to sing to us," explained the younger girl, quickly.

"Really?"

"I am like the bird that greets the morn with song," laughed the tenor, awkwardly.

"What are you going to sing?" demanded the chaperon, still suspiciously.

"Dearie."

"Don't you know any other song?"

"Oh, yes, but they are all sad."

"I'm getting a trifle tired of 'Dearie,' let's have one of the others." Mrs. Keap turned her eyes anxiously toward the training-quarters, and it was patent that she had not counted upon this encounter. Noting her lack of ease, Fresno said hopefully:

"If you are going for a walk, I'll sing for you at some other time."

"Is Mr. Speed up yet?"

"Up and gone. He'll be back soon."

Then Mrs. Keap sank into the hammock, and with something like resignation, said:

BRIDAL PAIR ON LONG HIKE

Young Man and Girl to Test Difference in Effects of Vegetables and Meat as Food.

New York.—A walking honeymoon to last for five years, is the plan of Hubert G. A. Hassler, aged twenty years, and Mabel V. Broadie, fifteen years old, who were married in the bride's home in New Brunswick, N. J. Hassler in khaki and the bride in "hiking" dress came to New York to start on their long ramble from the city hall.

They declared that they held a contract under which an athletic association will pay each of them $5,000 upon their return to the city hall in five years with vouchers showing that Hassler has stuck strictly to a vegetable diet and his wife to a meat diet throughout the trip.

They expect that the long test will decide reasonably well the merits of meat and vegetable food as a basis for physical endurance. Proof that they comply with the conditions imposed will be furnished by the vouchers to be signed by witnesses whenever they eat. These will be pasted in scrapbooks and forwarded to the athletic association. The couple will not be allowed to sell anything or beg, according to the terms of the contract.

No definite itinerary is announced by the couple for their five years' walk, but it is suggested to cover all sections of the country.

Pirates and Cubs in Even Break

The Cubs and Pirates broke even while the Red Sox won three out of four points from the M's in the K. of C. bowling games on the Knight alleys last evening. The match between the Cubs and Pirates was a corker, the Pirates winning two strings to one for the Cubs, but the latter squeezed out the point for total by three pins. PARKER AND ANDREWS FAVOR EQUAL SUFFRAGE

Yesterday in the Massachusetts legislature, Representatives Parker and Andrews were recorded in the affirmative on a roll call vote taken on woman suffrage. The measure was defeated, a two-thirds vote being necessary to amend the constitution so that the privilege of voting can be granted to women. There was a substantial majority in favor of equal suffrage, the supporters of the bill falling 11 votes short of the required two-thirds.

Toll Uses in Sales Campaigns

SUCH testimonials as the following from the J. E. SOPER COMPANY, wholesalers of grain and feed at 206 Chamber of Commerce, Boston, furnish unimpeachable testimony of the value of the telephone, especially the toll lines, in sales campaigns.

We quote a paragraph of a letter to the Company from this concern:

"We find that the telephone takes the place, in a large degree, of men on the road, and that our business is done in a much more satisfactory way by having a man sell our goods from the office, as he then knows everything a salesman should know concerning the quality, location and other features of the goods, whereas a man on the road does not always have his information and is frequently induced to guess it, which does not work at all."

We would not suggest this rule in every case. The advantages of face-to-face salesmanship and the magnetism of a personality, coupled with the importance of showing many lines of goods, are not to be depreciated. On standard lines, however, once the salesman's personality is established, the telephone is an efficient auxiliary, and especially helpful to the salesman in making advance appointment.

ST. CHARLES MINSTRELS A GRAND SUCCESS

Last Evening's Performance was a Revelation, and won Heartiest Approval

WILL REPEAT TONIGHT

All that the JOURNAL prophesied concerning the St. Charles C. T. A. S. minstrel show, and more, was fulfilled in the opening performance last evening. The St. Charles boys, and the young women of its loyal auxiliary made good. From the rise of the curtain until the closing note of the finale there was something doing. The show was chock-a-block with action and graceful action at that. And it was a musical show as well. The selections were up-to-date, rhythmical and melodious. They were sung with snap and expression.

The end men could not only sing, but they could dance, and dance they did as if they enjoyed it. The soloists were exceptionally good, and their efforts met with hearty approval, and won encore after encore. The young lady vocalists were buried beneath a wealth of floral tributes, while the end men were remembered with tokens from the fruit and vegetable kingdom that caught the house in great shape.

Back of the individual work was the chorus, one of the best ever produced in a local minstrel entertainment here. It was alive, and eager, and industrious. This was especially true of the young women menbers of the chorus. It was a delight to watch them as they entered heartily into the spirit of the song, and swung their bodies in unison to the tempo of the measure. And right here the JOURNAL feels that Frank J. McDermott of Boston, under whose direction the show was produced, deserves a word of congratulation if his head is not already turned by the many he received last evening. McDermott with his expressive face and his baton, was an inspiration, and to his every movement came the quick response from vocal chords or agile limbs. It was a great show, and the crowd that filled Lyceum hall, enjoyed every minute of the three hours that marked its duration.

The stage setting was very pretty and represented the lobby of a summer hotel, in which the chorus was assembled. After the entrance and introduction of Interlocutor Al. Jones, there arrived the tambo artists, fourteen in number, their appearance being from the front of the house. With a rattling good tambo-overture arranged by the director, the show was duly launched.

Following a spirited opening chorus was the detailed program printed below. Between the individual numbers was sandwiched a group of stories local in their application, all of which got instant recognition. In part I a guerite McCarthy as the soloist with supporting group of six young women. Miss McCarthy scored a hit, and the sketch had to be repeated.

Of the solo numbers in part I it may be said they were sung in good taste and excellent tempo. Miss LaCasse made a very pleasing impression with "Then I'll stop loving you." Miss Lux won a merited recall with "I will love you till the stars cease to shine" taking the climax of the song very effectively. Mr. Aylward's "Good bye Rose" was a favorite from the opening line. Mr. Aylward sang with characteristic care and finish and was loudly applauded. A pretty feature of this number, was the support given by the chorus, in the closing words of the verse, and supplemented Mr. Aylward's excellent work splendidly. Miss Lyon's solo "Last night was the end of the world" was rendered with intelligent appreciation of the sentiment, and the singer was at her best. She was obliged to respond to a recall. Miss Goode sang "Come back to me" with much feeling and delicacy of expression. It was a very pleasing number for every lover of music, and Miss Goode was justly entitled to the applause she received.

Part II was given over to novelties all of which were fresh, and bright and capitally executed. "The Irish Colleens" introduced Miss Josie Lynch in "Be sure he's Irish." Miss Lynch's voice is light, but she handled it effectively, and in her action gave a very pretty stage picture. Her support was strong, and in the dance which closed the number, Miss Lynch and her assistants set the house on fire with enthusiasm, and several encores were insisted upon.

A singing and dancing specialty with Miss [illegible] and Mr. Aylward in the vocal part of "I'd like to call you on the telephone," assisted by a double sexette of summer girls and summer men proved very attractive.

One of the hits of the show, in which were many good things, was the burlesque ballet of "The Snappy Automobilists" led by Miss Stephen Toland, who was arch and graceful, assisted by eight young men in feminine "shorts," Their dance was a revelation, and it seemed as if the audience would never tire of the fun they produced.

Incidental to the work of local talent was one imported number, in which Tommie Lanagan of Boston gave impersonations of Scotch characters, with songs, and monologue. Tommie is very clever and his work was very artistic and true to life. His representation of a Scotch school boy was simply a triumph. His entire act was a stellar feature.

The show closed with a pretty number that thrilled with national airs, representative costumes, characteristic dances, and graceful evolutions, Mr. Aylward appearing as the soloist.

The show will be repeated this evening, and it is safe to predict a crowded house, and a duplication of last night's success. After this evening's performance there will be general dancing until 2 a. m. Following is the program:

WORTHY OF EMULATION

Lowell, the Spindle city, was incorporated 77 years ago, and its Board of Trade and Merchant's association intend to make the city a Mecca for buyers from nearby cities and towns. In short the anniversary observance is intended to spread far and wide the fame of Lowell. On April 1 the day is to be set apart as "Lowell day, and the city is to be made to shine with the glamor of Lowell-made goods. Not only is it proposed to make the city known as a trade center, but its civic importance, and its history will not be forgotten. Exercises commemorative of the founding of the city are to be held in all the public schools, and silver medals will be awarded in each school for the best essays on Lowell's history, rise and progress.

This sounds good, and suggests that some such plan might be used to advantage in our own city. Concentrated effort along the line of booming the city in such legitimate channels would certainly be followed by satisfactory results. In union there is strength, and if the business men of our city would recognize for once the force of united action accomplishment would be of easy attainment. Lowell is setting all of its neighbors a good example. Which community will be wise enough to emulate it?

The JOURNAL tenders the use of its columns, and pledges its most earnest efforts in helping along such a movement. A long pull, and a strong pull, and a pull all together is the slogan. Let's have a "Woburn day."

ARM SAVED BY OPERATION

Delicate Surgery at St. Elizabeth's on Limb of Joseph Weiss

Joseph F. Weiss of 100 Baldwin avenue, North Woburn whose left arm from the wrist to the shoulder was terribly scalded at the chemical works last April is almost completely recovered from an operation performed at St. Elizabeth's hopital, Boston, necessitated by the severe injuries he received at the time of the scalding. Mr. Weiss is a foreman at the Merrimac chemical works, and as hreturned to his work. He is employed as a chemical expert, is the father of 10 children and is a brother in law of Thomas Urquhart, chief of police in Arlington. He was mixing nitrate of soda with lead, and testing it when the accident happened. The liquid blew all over him but he was most severely scalded on the left side. Dr. J. P. Bixby sent him to the Massachusetts General hospital and after a short stay he returned home but the arm still bothered him and he went back.

Henry Howard, vice president at the Chemical works sent Mr. Weiss to St. Elizabeth hospital where the operation which was one of the most unusual, delicate and successful surgical performance known to the medical fraternity was performed resulting in not only saving the arm, but leaving it as strong as ever.

The record of the case at the hospital follows:

"W. A. Brooks, Jr., M. D., Edward J. O'Brien, M. D., assistant. Case of Joseph F. Weiss.

"The arm was so contracted that the forearm was completely flexed upon the arm. The scar tissue and contracted tendons were dissected out and after the ends of the separated tendons were sutured together a monstrous skin graft was done.

"A flap of skin was dissected from the abdominal wall and the man's arm was then sutured to the skin flap. The arm was left attached to the man's abdomen for 11 days, at which time the skin had grown on the arm.

"The skin was then cut so that the arm was free to be moved. After this 16 more skin grafts were made during the period of three months, all of which resulted in a favorable manner. The man now has a good arm and will be able to use it as well as before he received the severe burns.

Mr. Weiss tells the story of his experience since the scalding in the following words:

"The best of it is," said Mr. Weiss, "that my arm bids fair to be as well as ever, although I will have to go on the slab at least once more for minor operations."

"They grew my arm to my side at the elbow. When it was nourished and getting well they cut it away. At least 25 of Boston's foremost surgeons have examined me at the St. Elizabeth hospital while my arm was coming back to health. They say I am a lucky man."

"I was mixing nitrate of soda with lead and testing it at a temperature of 350 degrees fahrenheit one day in April last year, when it blew all over me. I threw my left arm across my eyes and dropped.

"My face and right arm were but little burned, but the inside of my left arm, covering my face, was scalded from wrist to shoulder. Dr. J. P. Bixby sent me to the Massachusetts General hospital. After 10 days I returned home but complications set in and I went back for six days. It didn't work out. The flesh began to fall off in cakes and the arm seemed destroyed to the very bones.

"Vice-President Henry Howard of the chemical works then sent me to the St. Elizabeth hospital, where Dr. W. A. Brooks with his assistant, Dr. E. J. O'Brien, conceived the idea that saved my arm. Dr. Brooks said he didn't know if I would have a sound limb but we'd hope for the best, and I went under the ether and heard tinkling bells and the singing of birds.

When I awakened they had cut the flesh away from the arm,severed the cords and refastened them and covered the demolished portion of the arm with a sheet of skin lifted from my side. It was all sewed up so that my arm was not only fastened on naturally at the shoulder, but artificially at the elbow for a distance of many inches. When my arm and left side had grown together, in about two weeks, I took ether once more and they cut my arm free from my side and somehow closed the gaps.

Believe me, I was pretty well hacked up, but I was coming. Fourteen pieces of skin were cut out of one shoulder and 13 from the the other to be fastened into the wounds.

"See this wrist. Well, a patch of skin two inches long was cut from my leg for this, and the balance was taken from the body of a healthy woman patient, from whose injury it was necessary to remove some skin surface. I am now well to the extent that I can superintend work, and I have nothing but praise for all who participated. They do me the honor to say that my health and courage was of some assistance, but I hand that over to my wife, who nursed and cared for me as few men were ever babied in their own household. It is all working out fine. I would go through it again for just a hundred billion dollars."

On a Needle Point.

Indirectly Pasteur solved the famous mediaeval problem: "How many angels can stand on the point of a needle?" Sir W. Crookes said that, altering the word "angels" to "devils," he had found that, of one of the deadliest diseases that had ever scourged mankind, 500 of the maleficent microbes—veritable devils—could, without overcrowding, find a place on the point of the finest needle.

BRAVE DANGERS ON COAST

Men Who Keep the Wolf Rock Lighthouse Undergo Hardships During the Winter.

London.—The recent loss by drowning of one of the light keepers from the Wolf Rock lighthouse has recalled many stories of the hardships and dangers undergone this winter by men who kept vigil on the rock-bound Cornish coast.

The Longship Rock lighthouse, just of Land's End, has a storeroom dug out of the solid rock, which forms the foundation of the lighthouse. While the keeper was visiting the cellar one morning he looked out of the trap-door and saw a huge wave coming. He had barely time to close the door before it was assaulted by thousands of tons of water.

The thunder of the wave and the terrifying noises created in the rock cavern by the rushing waters caused such a nervous shock to the imprisoned keeper that his hair is said to have turned white during the few minutes of his imprisonment.

Probably the most remarkable adventure fell to the lot of Engineer Douglass of the famous Eddystone light. When he was building the Bishops Rock light he tripped and fell from the top of the tower 80 feet above the rocky base. Before he had time to reach the rock a great wave covered it, and when the horrified workmen looked down they saw him swimming unharmed toward the rock.

BOY OF 18 WILL BE PH. D.

Norbert Wiener, Son of Professor at University, Already Signs Himself A. B. and A. M.

Cambridge, Mass.—Norbert Wiener, son of a professor in Slavic languages at Harvard, soon will be able to sign himself a doctor of philosophy at the age of eighteen.

He has just completed his course in the graduate school, and will receive his degree of Ph. D. next June, the youngest man ever to attain that honor here.

Wiener entered Tufts college at eleven years of age, obtained his degree of A. B., within three years, added the degree of A. M. at Cornell in another year, and then entered Harvard, where he has been a university scholar, specializing in philosophy and mathematics. He plans to engage in teaching.

DENIED HIS OWN INVENTION

German Prince Invents Aeroplane, but Is Forbidden to Fly by Father and the Emperor.

Berlin.—Prince Frederick Sigismund of Prussia, cousin of the German emperor, is the inventor and builder of a successful aeroplane, but he has been forbidden by both his father and the emperor from going aloft in it.

When his machine flies the prince stands on the ground and watches his paid assistant reap the sensations of success that rightfully should be his.

Piloted by Aeronaut Krieger, the former chief chauffeur of the emperor the prince's flying machine was put through its paces in the air for the first time. Krieger made several rounds of the Bornstedter flying field and then proceeded overland to Potsdam and returned.

TO RAZE HUGE SAND DUNES

Sand Mounds at Miller, Ind., Now Used as Landscape for "Movies," to Be Leveled by Railroad.

Chicago.—The celebrated sand dunes at Miller, Ind., which have been the scene of more moving picture dramas than any other one spot in the middle west, and which were also the scene of the most exciting moments in the history of Chicago's car barn bandits, are to disappear.

The Chicago, Lake Shore & Eastern Railroad company has bought the dunes because it wants to extend its switch yards from Gary to Miller. The railroad plans to sell the sand and level the dunes.

The dunes served the moving picture people for mountains, and many a "Wild West drama" has been enacted in their shallow valleys.

Great Writer Not Musical.

Macaulay was entirely insensible to the charms of music. He wrote from Windsor castle on January 14, 1851: "At table I was between the duchess of Norfolk and a foreign woman who could hardly speak English intelligibly. I got on as well as I could. The band covered the talk with a succession of sonorous tunes. 'The Campbells Are Coming' was one." And Macaulay's biographer, Sir George Otto Trevelyan, supplies the following instructive footnote: "This is the only authentic instance on record of Macaulay's having known one tune from another."

"BURIER" IS VICTIM OF JOKE

Reports That Father-in-Law Is Dead, but Latter Refuses to Be Embalmed—Apologies Follow.

Minneapolis.—When an undertaker went to the house of John P. Desmond to make arrangements for that gentleman's funeral he found Mr. Desmond sitting on the front porch enjoying the sun. The undertaker thought he was seeing ghosts and nearly fainted. As a result C. P. Landey, Desmond's son-in-law, was given a 90-day sentence in the workhouse on a vagrancy charge.

Landy appeared at the undertaking parlors and after notifying him that his father-in-law was dead, ordered him to go to the house at once and prepare the body for burial. Incidentally he borrowed 20 cents for car fare.

When the undertaker arrived at the house he observed an old gentleman sitting on the porch.

"What do you want here?" the latter asked.

"Mr. Desmond is dead and I'm going to embalm him," answered the undertaker.

"You are, are you?" shouted Desmond. "I'm dead, am I? and who told you all of this?"

The undertaker apologized and made his explanation.

"Wait till I catch that son-in-law of mine," said Desmond.

The police caught him first and he was arraigned in municipal court later; the workhouse sentence followed.

URGES WOMEN FOR POLICE

Inez Milholland, Girl Suffragist, Tells Plan for Overcoming Social Evil.

New York.—Miss Inez Milholland, suffrage leader and social worker, who drove back the rioters in the Washington parade with her lance, expressed hearty approval of the idea advanced by Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, that women should be put on the police force to deal with delinquency among girls.

"Women," she said, "become hardened finally in the life of the streets and then it takes a woman to get back of this with an appeal to the heart of the woman."

Miss Inez Milholland.

Miss Milholland urged the formation of a colony where the women arrested could be rebuilt morally and physically.

HUSBAND TRICKS AN ADMIRER

Demands $400 of Convent in Name of Man of Whom He Was Jealous—Police Arrest Him.

Rome.—The personal columns of the Giornale d'Italia recently contained an impassioned appeal by a man who implored a woman to write to him at the address, "Alexander, 60 Poste Restante." The message aroused the suspicions of a jealous husband, who determined to punish its author. He accordingly wrote a threatening letter to the superior general of the Servants of Mary, stating that unless the sum of $400 were sent to "Alexander, 60 Poste Restante," the church and convent would be blown up by dynamite. This missive was promptly communicated to the police, who set a trap at the central postoffice for the supposed desperado. The latter turned out to be a nervous young man, who almost fainted when he was arrested. He was released later, with a warning against paying court to other men's wives.

WOMAN FEARS END OF WORLD

Gift to Boy Leads Minneapolis Detectives to Discover Man and Wife Feeding Money to Flames.

Minneapolis, Minn.—When Claude Parlo, a delivery boy, delivered a $3 bill of groceries at the residence of John Patros, Mrs. Patros handed him $71 in $1 bills and insisted that he keep the money.

When three detectives, to whom Parlo had told the story of the gift, went to the Patros residence they found Mrs. Patros sitting in front of a coal stove feeding $1 bills into the fire. Her husband sat beside her and watched the money burn.

"The world is coming to an end March 19," said Mrs. Patros, as she peeled off the greenbacks and put them on the coals. "There is no use in having any money."

KILL ONLY BUFFALO

Hunters Slay Cow Running With a Stockman's Herd.

Declared to Be the Last Wild Bison of All the Millions That Once Roamed at Will in South Dakota.

Guthrie, Okla.—"Just about a year ago my ranch partner, Phil Ellison, helped kill the last range buffalo in South Dakota," said Emmert Anderson, a stalwart former Oklahoman, who came here to visit his parents. Anderson and Ellison have a cattle ranch at Rattlesnake Butte, and get their mail at the little postoffice town of Dupree, which is 100 miles northeast of Pierre.

"This buffalo was a cow," said Anderson, "and about fourteen years old. She was a full blood, and the last of millions that once roamed that country. Her presence had been known for a long time, and the cowboys protected her. For the last five or six years she had kept with the herd of a cattle man named Simon Lutz.

"About 14 years ago three wild buffalo came from the north and were seen on the Lutz range. One of the cows dropped a calf, and this calf shortly became the only wild buffalo in that part of South Dakota, as its mother and her two companions were killed by hunters.

"After this cow began going with the Lutz herd, she grew more or less acquainted with Lutz, and would not stampede when he came in sight, though he was never able to get close to her. The moment a stranger appeared, however, the cow broke for the hills and remained in hiding until he disappeared, but she could outrun the fleetest horse, and nobody ever succeeded in roping her.

"About a year ago 'Chuck' Hall, a butcher at Faith, S. D.; Ed Carr, and Phil Ellison outfitted and started after the cow. They got sight of her in a day or two, and gradually drew closer to where she was grazing. Carr stalked her from behind a hill when the wind was favorable. Peering over the ridge, Carr saw the cow not more than a hundred yards distant. His first shot merely wounded her, and she charged viciously upon him. A second shot brought her down. Hall has her head mounted in his butcher shop at Faith.

"On this same hunt, and in the same locality where the buffalo cow was found, these hunters made another kill that added a trophy to their expedition.

"For nine years there had been an 'outlaw' steer of giant size ranging the country. His color was solid white and he could be seen for miles on a bright, sunshiny day. His horns were of phenomenal size and breadth. He carried the brand of the old Turkey Track ranch, once one of the most widely known outfits in the west, and whose headquarters were far down in the Texas Panhandle, where the battle between buffalo hunters and a big war party of Comanche Indians took place in the early '70s.

"The most persistent effort extending through a period of years failed to get this old steer to the railroad when cattle shipments were made. He would drift in for miles, but seemed to have a kind of uncanny intuition of final danger, and at night would sneak away from the herd and return to his old freedom. Usually a steer will stay with the herd to the end.

"Hall and his companions shot the old fellow and his horns are hanging in the butcher shop at Faith. He had been a moving landmark for years in that part of South Dakota, and, like the buffalo cow, was perhaps the last of his kind, as the old Turkey Track ranch is gone, and cattle no longer are brought up the trail from the Panhandle country to the north."

LOVES MAN WHO BEAT HER

Girl in Chicago Court Convicts Him on Testimony, Then Tries to Free Him.

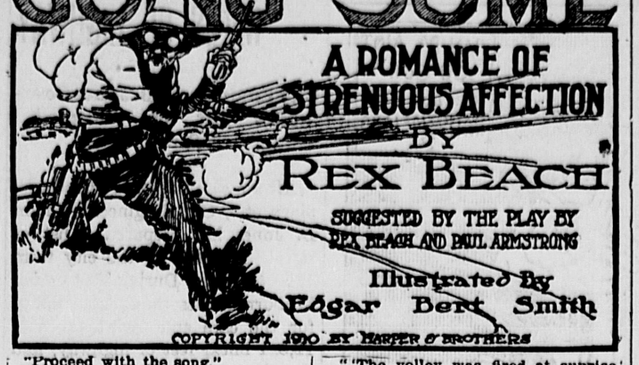

Chicago.—After Fred Wagner was fined $100 and costs by Municipal Judge Mahoney for beating her, Miss Marie Sholda put her arms around his neck and with tears streaming down her face begged the judge to release him. "I love him, judge, and I'll pay his fine if I can if you'll only let him go," the girl sobbed. "Please let him go." Judge Mahoney didn't see the matter in that light. The girl's face was cut and bruised. She testified that she had met Wagner in Milwaukee and had come to Chicago with him on his promise to marry her. She said she woke up in the night at the Haymarket hotel in West Madison street and Wagner was beating her with a shoe. He jumped from a second-story window when she screamed and broke his right leg. He denied he tried to take her money, $550.

FRENCH CAVE-DWELLER DIES

Hermit, Aged Seventy-Six, Is Found Dead in a Grotto in Which He Lived.

Paris.—A man of seventy-eight named Leleu, who had lived as a hermit for 27 years in a grotto near Arcysur-Cure, Department of the Yonne, has been found dead in the grotto, his head covered with wounds. It is suggested that the old man, who was known as "the troglodyte" (cave dweller), may have received his injuries by falling from his grotto on to the rocks below.

GOING SOME

"Proceed with the song."

* * * * * * *

Along the road toward the ranch buildings plodded two dusty pedestrians, one a blond youth bundled thickly in sweaters, the other a fat man who rolled heavily, and paused now and then to mop his purple face. Both were dripping as if from an immersion, while the air about the latter vibrated with heat waves. They both stumbled as they walked, and it was only by the strongest effort of will that they propelled themselves. As they neared the corner of the big, low lying ranch-house, already reflecting the hot glare of the morning sun, a man's clear tenor voice came to them

"The volley was fired at sunrise,
Just at the break of day"—

"Did you get that?" one of the two exclaimed hoarsely. "They're practicing a death-march, and it's ours."

"And as the echoes lingered,
His soul had passed away."

"That's you, Wally!" wheezed the trainer.

"Into the arms of his Maker,
There to learn his fate"—

"Here, what are you singing about?" angrily protested Speed, as he rounded into view.

"Oh, it's Mr. Speed!"

"Good-morning!" chorused Helen and the chaperon.

"Welcome to our city!" Fresno greeted.

Glass tottered to the steps. "Them songs," he puffed, "is bad for a man when he's trainin'; they get him all worked up."

"We had no idea you would be back so soon," apologized Helen.

"Soon!" Speed measured the distance to a wicker chair, gave it up, and sank beside his trainer. "We left yesterday! We've run miles and miles and miles!"

"You can't be in very good shape," volunteered the singer.

"Oh, is that so?" Glass retorted. "I say he's great. He got my goat—and I'm some runner."

"And I'd be obliged to you if you'd cut out those deeply appealing songs." Speed glowered at his rival.

It was Helen who hastened to smooth things.

"It's all my fault. I asked Mr. Fresno to sing something new."

"Bah! That was written by William Cromwell."

"No more of them battle-hymns," Glass ordered. "They don't do Mr. Speed no good."

"All I want is a drink," panted that youthful athlete, and Helen rose quickly, saying that she would bring ice-water.

"But the trainer barked sharply: "Nix! I've told you that twenty times, Wally. It 'll put hob-nails in your liver." He rose with difficulty, swaying upon his feet, and where he had sat was a large, irregular shaped, sweat-dampened area. "Come on! Don't get chilled."

"I'd give twenty dollars for a good chill!" exclaimed the overheated college man longingly.

"I would like to see you a moment, Mr. Speed." Roberta rose from the hammock.

"Oh, and I've forgotten my—" Helen checked her words with a startled glance toward the kitchen. "It will be burned to a crisp." She hastened down the porch, and Fresno followed, while Speed looked after them.

"He must be an awful nuisance to a nice girl. Think of a fat, sandy-haired husband in a five-room flat with pink wall-paper and a colored janitor. Run along, Muldoon," to Glass, "I'll be with you in a moment."

When the trainer had waddled out of hearing, Mrs. Keap inquired, eagerly:

"Have you heard from Culver?"

"Didn't you know about it?" Speed swallowed.

Roberta shook her dark head.

"He's in—he's detained at Omaha for ten days. I fixed it."

The overwrought widow dropped back into the hammock, crying weakly:

"Oh, you dear, good boy!"

"Yes, I'm all of that. I—I suppose I'd be missed if—anything happened to me!"

"How ever did you manage it?"

"Never mind the details. It took some ingenuity."

Mrs. Keap wrung her hands. "I was so terribly frightened! You see, Jack will be back to-morrow, and I—was afraid—"

There was a call from Glass from the training-quarters.

"How can I ever do enough for you! You have averted a tragedy!"

"Don't let Helen know, that's all. If she thought I'd been the head yeller—"

"I won't breathe a word, and I hope you win the race for her sake."

Mrs. Keap pressed the hand of her deliverer, who trudged his lonely way toward the gymnasium, where Glass was saying:

"The volley was fired at sunrise. That means Saturday, Bo."

"Larry, you're the best crape-hanger of your weight in the world."

Larry bent a look of open disgust upon his employer.

"And you're a good runner, you are," said he. "Why, I beat you this morning."

The younger man glanced up hopefully. "Couldn't you beat this cook?"

"You're the only man in this world I can outrun.

"'A tear, a sigh, a last "good-bye."'"

"Shut up!"

As Glass consented to do this, the speaker mused, bitterly, "'Early to bed and early to rise.' I wish I had the night-watchman who wrote those words."

"Didn't you never see the sun rise before?"

"Certainly not. I don't stay up that late."

"Well, ain't it beautiful!" The stout

"He's Detained at Omaha for Ten Days."

man turned admiring eyes to the eastward, and his husky voice softened. "All them colors and tints and shades and stuff! And New York on the other end!"

"I'm too tired to see beauty in anything."

As if mindful of a neglected duty, Glass turned upon him. "What are you waiting for? Get those dog-beds off your back." He seized the slack of a sweater and gave it a jerk.

"Don't be so rough; I'll come. You might care to remember you're working for me."

"I am working"—Glass dragged his protege about the room regardless of complaints that were muffled by the thickness of the sweaters—"for my life, and I'll be out of a job Saturday. Now, get under that shower!"

CHAPTER XIII.

DO you know, Larry, I'm beginning to like these warm showers; they rest me." As he spoke, Wally took his place beneath the barrel and pulled the cord that connected with the nozzle. The next instant he uttered a piercing shriek and leaped from beneath the apparatus, upsetting Glass, who rose in time to fling his charge back into the deluge.

"Let me out!" yelled the athlete, and made another dash, at which his guardian bellowed:

"Stand still or I'll wallop you! What's got into you, anyhow?"

The heads of Stover and Willie, thrust through the door, nodded with gratification.

"It's got him livened up considerable," quoth the former. "Listen to that!"

It seemed that a battle must be in progress behind the screen, for, mingled with the gasping screams of the athlete and the hoarse commands of the trainer, came sounds of physical contact. The barrel rocked upon its scaffold, the curtains swayed and flapped violently.

"Stand still!"

"It's—it's as c-c-cold as ice!"

"Nix! You're overheated, that's all."

"Ow-w-w! Ooo-h-h! I'm dying!"

"It'll do you good."

"He's certainly trainin' him some," said Stover.

"Larry, I've got a cramp!"

"It did harden him," acknowledged Willie.

"What's wrong with you, anyhow?" demanded Glass.

"It's not me, it's the w-w-water!"

Evidently Speed made a frantic lunge here and escaped, for the flow of water ceased.

"It froze d-d-during the night. Oh-h! I'm cold!"

"Cold, eh? Get onto that rubbing-board; I'll warm you."

An instant later the cowmen heard the sounds of a violent slapping mingled with groans.

"Go easy, I say! I'll be black and blue all—look out!—not so much in one spot! Ow!"

"Turn over!"

"He's spankin' him," said Stover admiringly.

Again the spatting arose, this time like the sound of a musketry fusillade, during which Berkeley Fresno entered by the other door.

"Don't be so brutal," wailed the patient to his masseur.

"I'm pretty near through. There! Now get up and dress," ordered the trainer, who pushing his way out through the blankets, halted at sight of the onlookers.

"How is he?" demanded Stover.

"He—he's trained to the minute. I'm doin' my share, gents."

"Sounds that way," acknowledged Stover's companion. "Say, does it look like we'd win?"

"Well, he just breezed a mile in forty, with his mouth open."

"A mile?" Fresno queried.

"A mile?" Fresno queried.

"Yes, a regular mile—seven thousand five hundred and thirty feet."

"Is 'forty' good?" queried Willie.

"Good? Why, Salvator never worked no faster. Here he is now—look for yourselves."

Speed appeared, partly clad, and glowing with a rich salmon pink.

"Good morning," said Fresno politely. "I came in to see how you liked the cold water."

"So that was one of your California jokes, eh? Well, I'll—"

Speed moved ominously in the direction of the tenor, but Willie checked him.

"We put the ice in that bar'l, Mr. Speed."

"You!"

Willie and Stover nodded.

"Then let me tell you I expect to have pneumonia from that bath." The young man coughed hollowly. "That's the way I caught it once before, and it

"Stand Still or I'll Wallop You!"

wouldn't surprise me a bit if I'd be too sick to run by Saturday."

"Oh, no; you don't get pneumony but once."

"And, besides," Fresno added, "it wouldn't have time to show up by Saturday."

"Get that ice-chest out of my room, that's all; it makes the air damp."

"No indeed!" said Still Bill. "We're goin' to see that you use it reg'lar." Then of Glass he inquired: "What do you do to him next?"

"I give him a nerve treatment. A jack-rabbit jumped at him this morning and he bolted to the outside fence." Larry forced his employer to a seat, then, securing a firm hold of the flesh, began to discourse learnedly upon anatomy and hygiene, the while his victim writhed. It was evident that the cattlemen were intensely interested. "Well, sir, when I first got him his sloven was in terrible shape," said Larry. "In fact, I never saw such a—"

"What was in terrible shape?" ventured the tenor.

"His sloven."

"Sloven! Is that a locality or a beverage?"

Glass glowered at the cause of the interruption. "It's a nerve-center, of course!" Then to the others, he ran on, glibly: "The treatment was simple, but it took time. You see, I had to first trace his bedildo to its source, like this." He thrust a finger into Wally's back and plowed a furrow upward. "You see?" He paused, triumphantly. "A fore-shortened bedildo! It ain't well yet."

"Can a man run fast with one of them?" inquired Willie.

"Certainly, cer-tain-ly—provided, of course, that the percentage of spelldiffer in the blood offsets it."

Both cowboys came closer now, and hung eagerly upon every word.

"And—does it do—that?" they questioned, while Fresno suggested that it was not easy to tell without bleeding the patient.

"No, no! You can hear the spell-differ." Glass motioned to Willie. "Put your ear to his chest. Hear anything?"

(To be Continued.)

Good Word for the Spider.

Even those little weather prophet spiders that build their nests on the grass are of great value. It is claimed that if many of such webs are seen in the morning on the lawn, it will not rain, as these spiders know enough not to build them when it is about to rain. These same spiders capture hundreds of flies, and they are especially valuable in catching mosquitoes. The webs are harmless, as are the spiders, and should never be destroyed.

Strive to Banish Fear.

Fear is aging. It dries the blood, unstrings the nerves, palsies the thought. Courage keeps the soul young.

LAST LECTURE IN THE COURSE

Ernest Harold Bayne will Speak on "Our Wild Animal Neighbors"

This is to be the subject of the next and final lecture of the season to be given under the auspices of the Burbeen Free Lecture Fund in Lyceum hall next Monday evening. The lecturer will be Ernest Bayne, one of the foremost speakers on the American lecture platform.

In his lecture, Mr. Bayne will tell of his personal experiences with many of the most interesting of our furred and feathered friends. Some of the stories are pathetic, others very amusing, and all of them put the audience in close sympathy with the timid wild things, whose portraits are thrown upon the screen.

The lecture is of the highest class and full of interest. Mr. Bayne gives his own personal views on the subject, based on years of experience, gained by close study in natural haunts and associations. Many colored slides will be used to illustrate the lecture, which will be fully as interesting, if not more so, than any given this year. The public should appreciate the efforts put forth by the committee in charge to place before it the best talent which is procurable.

WOBURN HAS 68 MILES OF HIGHWAY

City Engineer W. B. Jones Compiles list of Accepted Streets

After a careful review of records, plans etc., City Engineer William B. Jones has prepared a list of streets accepted by the city from 1898 to 1913. During that period Woburn has assumed responsibility for the care and maintenance of 12,321 linear feet of highway, and the city engineer finds by consulting the list of accepted streets up F. Johnson Esq., that they city now owns approximately 68 miles of public thoroughfare. He does not include Hart street in his summary as it is not yet completed, although accepted. The total number of streets is 173, and 174 if Hart street is counted.

The city engineer prepared the list in response to numerous inquiries from citizens, and from authorities of other municipalities for information as to the exact mileage of accepted streets in this city. Mr. Jones confessed that prior to the examination of records he has made, shared the general impression that Woburn had between 75 and 80 miles of accepted highway.

His list includes only the legally accepted streets, and makes no reference to several miles of courts and private ways where the city assumes a certain amount of responsibility, and expends money every year for maintenance. Appended is a list of streets accepted since 1898 and the total length of the same.

RUMFORD HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION MEETING

Valuable Gift to the Association from E. C. Converse

The annual meeting of the Rumford Historical association was held in the old birthplace of the Count in North Woburn last night and was largely attended, with Judge E. F. Johnson presiding.

The annual reports of the various officers were submitted showing the association to be in a healthy condition, the old homestead having received much needed repairs which has put it into excellent condition with a substantial sum remaining in the treasury.

The necrology report showed five deaths in 1911 and five in 1912.

A framed picture of the Countess of Rumford taken from the Illustrated News of January 8, 1853, was presented to the association by Arthur W. Whitcher.

During the past year the association has received one of its most valued gifts through the generosity of Mr. Edmund C. Converse of Greenwich, Conn., an eminent banker of New York City, who, upwards of two years ago acquired by purchase, the portrait of Count Rumford by Thomas Gainsborough R. A.

It is said that Gainsborough painted only three Americans, a curious circumstance concerning which is that all three were named Benjamin, viz: Benjamin Rush, Benjamin Franklin, and Benjamin Thompson,(Court Rumford).

The gift of Mr. Converse to the association is a beautiful album containing a photograph facsimile of the Gainsborough portrait together with photograph facsimilies of an autograph letter from Rumford to his publishers concerning the publication of an essay on the heating of liquids, and a photo copy of the Bavarian Patent of Nobility approved by King George III, all of the originals being in the possession of Mr. Converse. The donor is a native born and bred Bostonian and traces many of his ancestors back to the early Converse and Thompson families.

It was but a short time ago that Mr. Converse gave to Harvard $125,000 to endow a professorship of banking in the graduate school of business administration, one of the newest of Harvard's departments.

At the election of officers Judge Johnson declined further service as president of the association, he being the third to hold that office since the association was incorporated in 1877.

The officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, William R. Cutter; vice presidents, Rev. Charles Anderson, Hon. Josiah Pierce of London England, Hon. E. F. Johnson, L. Waldo Thompson, Hon. E. E. Thompson, Hon. W. F. Davis; recording clerk, A. R. Linscott, the only surviving charter member of the association; treasurer, S. A. Thompson; corresponding secretary, M. Littlefield; library committee, Miss Marian T. Hosmer, W. R. Cutter, N. S. Watson, S. A. Thompson, Hon. A. S. Wood; directors, Hon. E. F. Johnson, Hon. Josiah Pierce, Hon. E. E. Thompson, Rev. Chas. Anderson, W. R. Cutter, L. F. Baldwin, A. R. Linscott, Hon. A. S. Wood, S. A. Thompson, N. S. Watson, Miss M. T. Hosmer.

Eight new members were elected to the association after which the new president, Mr. William R. Cutter read an interesting and exhaustive paper on the life and letters of the Countess of Rumford the only child of the Count born in this country, which is of especial value to all those tracing their lineage to the family of Thompson in Woburn.

Extracts from an essay by Dr. Ephraim Cutter were read by the secretary, and several pamphlets including "General Gage's Spies," by Jerome Carter Hosmer were among other gifts made to the association. The late Rev. Dr. William S. Barnes who died the past year was one of the most influential members at the foundation of the association and made his only visit to the old house, May 23, 1906.

LEAVES FOR GERMANY TOMORROW

Herr Ludwig Kropp has been in Woburn for Six Weeks

Ludwig Kropp of Frankenthall, Germany, who has been in this city for the past six weeks, installing some imported machinery at the Merrimac Chemical Works in North Woburn, leaves tomorrow for his home in Germany. Herr Kropp is a highly educated gentleman, an expert machinist, and the work that he has done in connection with the installation of the new machinery, has been watched with interest by local machinists who have wondered at his accomplishments and the ability which this German expert has shown. The new machinery is for the production of acids by mechanical process, and is a wonderful piece of mechanism. It was purchased by the representative of the Chemical works who is always on the lookout for the latest and best in up-to-date improvements in machinery and devices.

BOY SCOUT COUNCIL ORGANIZES

Local Branch of Order Secures Efficient Executive Staff

Last night the Woburn council of the Boy Scouts of America held its first meeting at the Public library for the purpose of effecting a permanent organization, and electing officers. In spite of the unfavorable weather fifteen of the twenty-two members were present, and took hold of the work with a spirit of earnestness that augurs well for the future of the organization. G. H. Evans was elected chairman, and Dr. F. O. West was appointed secretary. The first business to come before the meeting was the adoption of a constitution. The model provided by the National council was followed closely, such modifications being adopted as local conditions seemed to require. The official name of the council is noted above, and its membership is twenty-five. The officers are a president, two vice presidents, a secretary, a treasurer, and a scout commissioner. There are several standing committees, of which the Court of Honor is of peculiar interest. The Scout Commissioner, who has general charge of the Scout Masters and their various troops, is chairman of the Court of Honor. The duty of the Court of Honor is:

(a) To administer the tests and oaths of membership in the Boy Scouts of America.

(b) To administer the tests for all other honors and rewards.

(c) To pass final judgments on appeals from scout masters' decisions.

The following officers were elected: President, George H. Evans: first vice president, A. H. Linscott; second vice president, G. I. Clapp; secretary, Dr. F. O. West; treasurer, O. M. Bean; scout commissioner, G. L. Hosmer; two elective members of the executive committee, A. W. Parker and J. A. Provest. Four appointments to the Court of Honor are to be announced later.

The constitution will be immediately forwarded to National headquarters, with a request for approval and a charter. This will undoubtedly be granted at once as the procedure of organization has been regular.

How to become a Scout

Any boy over twelve years old may become a scout. He must obtain the consent of his parents, pass the requirements for a "Tenderfoot," and take the scout oath. Those wishing to become scouts should apply to the scout commissioner. The commissioner, Mr. Hosmer, will meet applicants on Tuesday evenings at the library between 7 and 8 o'clock.

Troops may be formed in connection with any organization such as a Boys' club, Sunday school, or public school. Boys desiring to form a troop should find some man who is willing to be their Scout master. He must be over 21 years old. There can be no troop without a Scout master. Troops may also be formed independently of any other organization, provided they can obtain the use of a room for a meeting place, and find a man who will serve as Scout master.

The cost to the boy scout will be twenty-five cents for the handbook, a few cents for his badge, and the weekly dues if the troop votes to have them. Some troops have dues of five cents per week.

The Scout law, scout oath, and motto, together with other information, were published in the Library corner of the JOURNAL in the issue of March 12.

AUTO FIRE TRUCK IN DEMONSTRATION

Practical Illustration of Up-to-date Apparatus given to City Officials

Today was Demonstration day in the fire department. At 9 this morning there glided noiselessly into the city a handsome auto combination hose and chemical truck, the product of the O. F. Kress and Son company of Lawrence. This was the truck that had been on exhibition at the recent Motor truck show in Boston.

To meet it was assembled a group of city officials, comprising Mayor William H. Henchey, Chief Engineer Frank E. Tracy, City Clerk B. F. McHugh, City Solicitor J. Fred Maloney, City Messenger Francis Bellew and several members of the fire department. The machine was inspected by the officials, its merits being explained by the company's demonstrator.

The trial trip was made about 10 o'clock from the municipal building, the route chosen being to the neighborhood of Cambridge street at the west side. The run from the starting point to Alderman Ellis Marshall's house on Cambridge street was covered in 4 1-2 minutes. It is estimated that the machine could easily run from the center to the farthest boundary line in 5 minutes a fact that carries with it the assurance of availability.

The city officials mentioned, and a number of fire department members, 15 in all, were passengers, and the machine carried the load easily. The machine is equipped with a 40 gallon chemical tank, and 1500 feet of hose. The test was in every way very satisfactory and impressed everyone, who saw it and witnessed its working, as an admirable adjunct of fire department equipment.

The name of William F. Goode has been mentioned in connection with the vacancy caused by the resignation of Major Henry C. Hall for 6 years the efficient clerk of the Board of Health. ANXIOUS FRIENDS AWAIT NEWS

Families Represented in the Stricken West Victims of Suspense

Woburn shares in the sympathy which is being felt everywhere with the communities which have been devastated by tornado and flood, and the city shares also in the anxiety felt by all those who have relatives and friends in the stricken sections.

Harold B. Pushee, a graduate of Woburn high school, held the position of chemist for the Goodyear Tire company at Akron, O., which is within the flooded zone. Young Mr. Pushee is the son of Alderman Francis M. Pushee of Winn street, and married Miss May Greenleaf of this city formerly an attache of the public library. Mr. Pushee wrote to his father Sunday saying it was raining heavily in Akron. Since that time no word has been received from him. Mr. Pushee senior intended starting for Akron today, but found that he could not buy a ticket beyond Cleveland, owing to washed-out roads. He has telegraphed to his son but has received no response.

Harry Grothe, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Grothe, and a pupular member of the Towanda club, is in the drug business at Fort Wayne, Ind. No word has come from him as yet.

Dr. Charles P. Pollard, nephew of Miss Mary F. Pollard of this city, a graduate of the local high school, and the first major of the High school battalion, is a successful physician in Omaha, Neb. His friends are most anxious to hear whether he escaped injury in the terrible havoc wrought by the storm in that city.

Miss Mary B. Grimes, who is a teacher in the Indianapolis high school, telegraphed yesterday to her father, A. B. Grimes, that she was safe and in no danger. She added that so far as Indianapolis is concerned the newspaper accounts have been exaggerated.

WHITHER ARE WE DRIFTING

Not long ago an esteemed citizen of Woburn, expressing his regret that President Taft had vetoed the Webb bill (which prohibited the transportation of liquor into "dry" states for purposes of sale therein) on the ground that it would be found to be unconstitutional, showed some irritation that the constitution should be in the way of a law that Congress passed. His feeling of annoyance is characteristic of the time. The Constitution may be somewhat too rigid to suit many people but there it is and we think this esteemed citizen himself, if he should carefully read the constitution of the United States, or of Massachusetts, would applaud the wisdom of the fathers not only for the frame of government which they built but for the bills of rights which they imbedded in the very foundation stones of the government. The constitution of nation and state may not always suit the popular impulse of the moment and it is better that a change conflicting with the constitution be not made until popular impulse crystalizes into a settled purpose which will amend the constitution than not to have a constitution at all. No doubt the woman suffragists today are wishing that the vote of the Massachusetts legislature could directly settle the question of woman suffrage without the difficult task of securing a constitutional amendment, but we do not hear them attacking our constitution. What they are striving for is the necessary legislative votes to submit the question of the amendment to the people. They want no "straw vote" law and in this they seem to us to be wise. The straw vote scheme is a cheap trick and is not worth wasting time over. What the woman suffragists want is a real test, a real referendum that will legally mean something.

And now that we are speaking on constitutional matters, let us see what the spirit of the time is trying to do with the press. Right here in our little city the amazing proposition met the unanimous indorsement of the city council that the press should not discuss policies which the august and all-sufficient council had under consideration. The rulers once chosen by the people are by that token immune from criticism during their term of office, and the sole function of the common people is to pay in their taxes to the city treasury and leave the rest to the chosen rulers. And in Indiana, during this very month, the spirit of the time has crystalized into an act passed by the legislature, which restricts the rights of newspapers to discuss the character of candidates for office and also the character of pending legislation. The Indianapolis News says of this act: "If Boss Tweed were alive he could announce himself this year as a candidate for mayor of Indianapolis without the slightest fear that the newspapers would revive unpleasant memories. Had Benedict Arnold been a candidate for office such a law as this would have made it criminal for any newspaper to call attention to his treason. It is indeed an amazing performance. The effort is not simply to chain the press but to stifle public opinion which makes itself felt through the press. The prosecuting attorney is to have the power to say what the papers may or may not print."

And now let us humbly thank God for the constitution of the United States and glorify the wisdom of its makers. Here it is and on our knees we modestly commend it to all our citizens especially to the august city council: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances." (Art. I Bill of Rights). And let us also quote from the constitution of the grand old Commonwealth: "All power residing originally in the people, and being derived from them, the several magistrates and officers of government, vested with authority, whether legislative, executive or judicial, are their substitutes and agents and are at all times accountable to them." (Art. V). And again: "The liberty of the press is essential to the security of freedom in a state; it ought not, therefore, to be restrained in this commonwealth." (Art. XVI). And once more: "The people have a right, in an orderly and peaceable manner, to assemble to consult upon the common good; give instructions to their representatives, and to request of the legislative body, by the way of addresses, petitions, or remonstrances, redress of the wrongs done them, and of the grievances they suffer." (Art. XIX).

ST. CHARLES REPEATS MUSICAL SUCCESS

Closing Night of Minstrel Show a Winner—Dance follows

The St. Charles C. T. A. S. minstrel show was repeated last evening, and the participating organizations are to be credited with a second triumph. The corps of young artists played with the confidence born of experience, and every detail was marked by smoothness.

The individual and chorus work was even better than on the opening night. Lyceum hall was again crowded with an audience full of appreciative enthusiasm. Encores were demanded over and over again everybody wore a smile, and was as merry as the peal of a marriage bell.

As the assembled chorus was singing the final number of the program and previous to the fall of the curtain, Miss Annie Crieghton stepped to the front of the stage and with a few direct and well chosen words, presented a handsome heavy leather music portfolio to the director of the show, Mr. Frank J. McDermott. The latter was completely and happily surprised, but replied briefly and periinently. Immediately following the show an informal reception was tendered him, in front of the stage, several old, and many of his recently acquired local friends, crowding forward and congratulating him on his distinct success.

After the show was over, the boys of the society cleared the hall in a twinkling, and fully 300 couples danced until two a. m. a fitting ending to one of the best shows ever given in Woburn.

Rumford Centenary To Be Observed

Paper Read by Wm. R. Cutter at the Annual Meeting of the Rumford Historial Society

INTERESTING DATA

It is proposed in the year 1914, by the members of the Rumford Historical association of Woburn, to celebrate the hundredth anniversary of the death of Count Rumford, who died in a suburb of Paris, France, August 21, 1814. The celebration was suggested by a member, and a committee of the association was appointeed to formulate a plan for its proper observance. You have been so good, Mr. Editor, as to publish about the time of the last annual meeting, certain letters written by the Count's daughter Sarah, to certain friends and acquaintances of hers in this vicinity, that I am encouraged to offer my production to you, thinking you may be willing to favor me by its publication. In an endeavor to connect and discover the relationship of these persons to the Countess Rumford, we have enlarged our article to cover all the relatives of the Count, her father.

My subject is an attempt to show who and what persons are the near relatives of the Count Rumford in this country. That he had a number of such is true, and when the centennial of any great man is observed, it is customary first to find the record of his descendants, and in the place of these to find those next related by blood. As to his descendants the case is rendered rather hopeless by the fact that his only child was an unmarried daughter. It has been intimated that there are other descendants of his in Europe, but as these persons are at such a distance from this country, it is not considered worth while to pay them any attention. Our next refuge is in the children and grandchildren of the brothers and sisters of his father and mother, and the services of the local genealogist are called in, to work upon such data as can be readily collected.

As Count Rumford has been dead nearly a hundred years, it is not too soon to begin this record, and, in the course of a century enough relatives have been accumulated in that time to make quite a company. So I have called upon Mr. Arthur G. Loring, the expert genealogist, to aid me in my research. The Thompson part of the subject has been already quite fully covered by the painstaking work of the Rev. Leander Thompson, in his "Thompson Memorial," published under the auspices of the Thompson Family Association. The Simonds part is largely based on our own original work. We are convinced that light is shed on this part by an extension of our inquiries to persons now living among us, whose information has been valuable on points hitherto obscure. We do not doubt that in such volumes as Sewall's "History of Woburn," and Judge Johnson's publications, some information is given, which is not found in our sketch of the Simonds family, but enough has been presented in our sketch to show all that we have attempted.

We have only one other word of apology. We have not brought every line down to its latest generation, because almost any one can trace backwards their line to their grandparents.

THE WALKER ANCESTRY OF SARAH, COUNTESS RUMFORD

The Walker ancestry of Sarah, Countess Rumford, may be traced to Samuel Walker of Woburn; a publication entitled "Samuel Walker of Woburn, Mass., and some of his Descendants," published in the "New England Historical and Genealogical Register," vol. 57, p. 350, covering the field of the subject. This with the aid furnished by Bouton's "History of Concord" and Walker's "Burbeen Family," furnishes many interesting particulars, the substance of which is given here.

(4) Timothy Walker, son of (3) Samuel, was born in Woburn, July 27, 1705, died in a somewhat sudden manner at Concord, N. H., September 1, 1782, in his seventy-eighth year, after having been for fifty-two years the minister of that town. He had distinguished himself by his usefulness and the length of his services as the first settled minister of that town. He had built the present house, now occupied by his descendant, Joseph Burbeen Walker, in 1733, or 1734. Dr. Nathaniel Bouton (1799-1878) in his excellent history of Concord, says: "He was remembered by a few aged people, as of full middling stature and size, nor corpulent, but portly in form and of dignified manner. Blue eyes, and light complexion. Temper naturally quick, but well restrained and governed. Exact and precise in all his transactions. Not talkative, but agreeable in social intercourse, occasionally facetious. Wore a large powdered wig, a three-cornered cocked hat, short clothes, and shoes with large buckles. As a preacher he was instructive and practical, and calm and moderate in his delivery. His style was good for the period, perspicuous and didactic, with but few illustrations, but well supported with quotations from Scripture. His theological views were orthodox, according to existing standards. He called himself a moderate Calvinist. Was not partial to ministers of the 'New Light' order, and warned his people against their influence. He was highly conservative as to innovations and new measures. He died in a somewhat unexpected manner September 1, 1782, in his seventy-eighth year, and the fifty-second of his ministry. He was universally respected, and to his people he was a great loss.

He was married on November 12, 1730, to Sarah, daughter of James and Mary (Lowden-George) Burbeen of Woburn. She was born June 17, 1701.

The excellent little book on the Burbeen family preserves some very valuable traditions of members of the Walker family concerning this worthy pastor. It appears that after he was ordained, that, on the 23d of November, 1730, having set out for Woburn, he arrived there on the 24th, and, after spending a few days visiting his friends, he and his bride, on December 1, 1730, mounted their horses and set out for their new settlement at Concord, then called Penny Cook. They lodged the first night at their brother Samuel Walker's at Wilmington, and on the second night at Nutfield (now Londonderry) and on December 3, 1730, Mrs. Walker, with five other women (wives of the settlers), were the first women to arrive permanently in Penny Cook. They were then in the wilderness thirty miles beyond any white inhabitants. During two Indian wars they were obliged to take refuge within garrisons, to secure themselves from being killed by the Indians. Mrs. Walker enjoyed the esteem and respect of all her husband's parishioners. She died at Concord, N. H., February 19, 1778, and her monument is to be seen in Concord Burying ground, beside that of her husband. (Burbeen Family, p. 14).

EVER READY FOR FIRES

ELABORATE PRECAUTIONS TAKEN AT GOVERNMENT POSTS.

Uncle Sam Furnishes an Excellent Example to the Country in This Respect—Few Losses by Conflagrations in the Army.

Perhaps the low percentage of fires in the army is directly due to the fact that guard duty is never suspended.

In daylight and dark, during peace or in time of war, armed sentries walk their posts scattered everywhere over the garrisons. Falling asleep while on guard is a serious offence. Therefore the guards are always alert. Never is a sentry mounted on a post without a caution to look out for fires.

One of the first charges in a guard's general orders is one in which he is cautioned to keep a sharp watch for fire. His first duty, in case a building is occupied by humanity, is to warn the occupants. Next he turns in a general alarm. And when fire call is blown by the trumpeter at the main guard house every male member of the garrison, except the guard, is compelled to hurry to the scene of the fire, no matter where he is, and no matter how he is dressed.

It is not necessary that a man should be in regulation uniform to respond to a fire call. Military fires do not wait for antagonists in full dress parade costumes, any more than city fires procrastinate while the members of the department make careful toilets.

Once a week, sometimes oftener, in every military garrison, large or small, throughout the country, and there are several hundred at home and in our possessions, a fire drill is held. Not a soul save the commanding officer is advised of what hour of the day or night or on what day of the week a fire call will be blown. As fires do not give warning of their coming, writes Monroe Woolley in Insurance Engineering, it is obviously advantageous that a fire drill should be as uncertain.

When the fire call goes, either for drill or for a fight for life and property, the soldiers rush out of their quarters, leave their posts in the company kitchens, and on the drill grounds, picking up fire buckets and fire axes as they go in the race for the fire station. Some may be hatless, some coatless and others shirtless. But it is an honor to be among the first to take hold of the fire equipment.

All the officers dash for the fire house, too, and the highest ranking officer present assumes the duties of fire chief. A run is made with chemical engines and hand drawn hose carts and hook and ladder trucks for a building designated as the scene of the fire. When the equipment is out for a fire drill the men take advantage of the occasion and play water on the windows of buildings, giving them a good cleaning.

The amount of fire fighting apparatus furnished the posts by the government for their protection is regulated, of course, entirely by the size and needs of each post.

Confirmed for Rheumatism.

Rev. Joshua Kimber, in his "Reminiscences," tells the following anecdote of the late Bishop Horatio Potter:

He had been journeying up the east bank of the Hudson river, stopping for confirmation each day at adjoining parishes. When he reached Poughkeepsie he saw a woman at the rail waiting for confirmation whose face he was sure he recognized and was somewhat familiar with. He was also certain that she had been confirmed within the week at another place. The bishop whispered to her to remain after service, and said:

"My dear madam, what do you mean by coming for confirmation? I am sure I confirmed you on Monday at such a place. Did I not?"

She said: "You certainly did. I have been following you up the river and have been confirmed every day this week."

He, astonished, said: "Why do you do that?"

Whereupon she replied: "Because I heard it was good for rheumatism."

Prussian War Centennial.

The year 1913 marks a notable passage in the history of Prussia. A hundred years ago Prussia rose against Napoleon, who was already weakened by the retreat from Moscow, and, with the help of Austrians, and also a very large body of Russians, they managed to drive the French army over the frontier, after defeating it in the tremendous two days struggle at Leipzig.

Many are the centennial celebrations that are arranged for this year, and, as a conclusion, it is hoped that the czar will visit the battlefield of Leipzig at the end of the year in company with the kaiser. The Russian cooperation at Leipzig, it should be explained, was particularly strong, and at least 22,000 Russian troops were killed in the fight.

Just the Time.

Husband (casually)—I see they are embalming pet dogs now.

Wife (interestedly)—Oh, isn't that lovely! That's what I'll have done to Fido.

Hubby (enthusiastically)—Just the thing! Give him to me and I'll have it done today.

FOX LIVES UP TO ITS NAME

Many Are the Ruses Employed by Reynard in Making Successful Escapes From the Hounds.

The reputation of a north of England pack was suffering, and the huntsmen were baffled over and over again by a certain fox, which they always lost at exactly the same spot. He gave them a grand run to the side of the wood, and then disappeared, leaving no clew as to where he had holed.

At last the head huntsman hid himself before the meet at this particular place. As usual, Reynard worked off his old trick, and this is how he did it. By the side of the wood ran a rail fence, and he coolly mounted it, walked along the top for a short distance, jumped upon a large tree which was hollow half-way up, and, creeping inside, was safe. The hounds, of course, lost the scent when he left the ground.

As in this case, the two following instances were watched, and the fox tried his best move once too often.

Number one was always lost just on the top of a hill, and it was proved that he did not descend the other side. On the hilltop there was a hollow, and he would run, with the hounds not far off, up the bank, and then quietly lay himself flat down in the bottom of this hollow. Right over him ran the hounds and galloped the horses. When they pulled up over the crest the scent was finished. After they had all passed him, foxy simply crept out and went back on his old track!

The other one used to trick the hounds at the top of a steep precipice, with a face of rock over which no hound would go—but Reynard did. He stretched out his legs and slid down the rock with his face to it, as a man would, until his hind legs rested on a narrow ledge. He let himself down carefully, walked along the ledge and entered a crevice at the end. From this place he apparently had no way of escape, for the rock was too steep to negotiate in either direction.

It was found, however, that he had a back door on the side of the hill—a tunnel running between the two openings. Had he entered the hole on the hillside he would have been caught, but his front door was safe, because no one could see it from the top of the precipice.—Exchange.

China Is Now Awake.

A water plant that has been feared as a pest is to be turned into a valuable commercial product of Indo-China, if anything comes of the suggestion to the Saigon Chamber of Commerce by M. Perrot, the French investigator. The plant, Ecchornis crassipes—popularly known as Luc Bink—invaded Cambodia ten years ago from Java or the Philippines, and has grown so rapidly as to fill ponds and lakes in a short time. A single stalk is reported to have spread over a water surface of 700 square yards in a few months. It has caused no little alarm as a menace to navigation, and a considerable sum seems to have been already expended in attempts to destroy it. Its strong fiber, however, has been found by M. Perrot to be useful for textile purposes. From 100 pounds of green stalks he obtained nine pounds of fiber, and a fifth-inch yarn or cord from this supported a weight of 100 pounds. The cord can be woven into matting or canvas. This can be dyed any color, and is suitable as a substitute for woven cane in furniture, but is expected to be especially valuable for rice sacks. Such sacks, equal to jute, can be made lighter than jute by treating with chrome alum.

Wilhelm's Idea of Golf.

The German emperor's knowledge of golf is by no means extensive. His generosity, however, made him lend a ready ear to the request of Sir Frank Lascelles for a grant of land for the purpose of a golf course.

"So you want ground for your golf club, sir Frank?" he said. "We haven't got nice grass meadows round Berlin like you have in England, but I'll give you a bit of the Grunewald."

Now, the grunewald is a pine forest near the capital, and a favorite Sunday resort of the people of Berlin. The ambassador thought it out for a moment, and then answered, somewhat doubtfully:

"Ah, sire, I am afraid there would be too many trees."

"Trees!" exclaimed his majesty. "All the better to keep the sun off when you are playing in the summer."

Hired to Stick.

The jury, after long deliberation, seemed unable to agree in a perfectly clear case. The judge, thoroughly exasperated at the delay, said:

"I discharge this jury."

One sensitive juror, indignant at what he considered a rebuke, faced the judge.

"You can't discharge me," he said with a tone of conviction.

"And why not?" inquired the judge in surprise.

"Because," announced the juror, pointing to the lawyer for the defense, "I was hired by that man there!"—Ladies' Home Journal.

Explained.

"What is this civil service business that they are always talking about?" asked the Boob. "What good does it do?"

"It's like this," replied the Cheerful Idiot. "If you have a job and you are not under civil service, they can fire you any time they want to. But if they have a job under civil service they can't fire you unless they want to."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

"Heart's poundin' like a calf's at a brandin'."

"Which proves it!" proudly asserted the trainer. "Barrin' accidents, Mr. Speed will be in the pink of condition by Saturday."

The cowmen beamed benignantly.

"That's fine!"

"We are sure pleased, and we've got something for you, Mr. Speed. Come on, Mr. Fresno, and give us a hand. We'll bring it in."

"It's a present!" exclaimed the athlete, brightly, when the three had gone out. "They seem more friendly this morning."

"Yes!" Glass laughed, mirthlessly. "They think you're going to win."

"Well, how do you know I can't win? You never saw this cook run."

"I don't have to; I've seen you."

"Just the same, I'm in pretty good shape. Maybe I could run if I really tried."

"Send yourself along, kid. It won't harm you none." The speaker fanned himself, and took a seat in the cosey-corner.

"Ah! Here they come, bearing gifts." Speed rose in pleased expectancy. "I wonder what it can be?"

The three who had just left re-entered the room, carrying a trayload of thick railroad crockery.

"We've brought your breakfast to you," explained Stover. "We'd like you to eat alone till after the race." Still Bill began to whittle what appeared to be a blood-rare piece of flesh, while Willie awkwardly arranged the dishes.

"You want me to eat as well as sleep here?"

"Exactly."

"Oh, I can't do that! I'm sorry, but—"

"Don't make us insist." Willie looked up from his tray, and Glass raised a moist hand and said:

"Don't make 'em insist."

With fascinated stare Speed drew nearer to Stover and examined the meat bone.

"Why—why, that's raw!" he exclaimed.

"Does look rar'," agreed the foreman.

"Then take it out and build a fire under it. I'll consent to eat here, but I won't turn cannibal, even to please you."

"I'm sorry." Stover did not interrupt his carving.

"Your diet ain't been right," explained Willie. "You ain't wild enough to suit us."

"Is this a joke?"

"We ain't never joked with you yit, have we?"

"No. But—"

"This breakfast goes as she lays!" Glass broke abruptly into smothered merriment. "When I laugh nowadays it's a funny joke," he giggled.

That grown men could be so stupid was unbelievable, and Wally, seeing himself the object of a senseless prank, was roused to anger.

"Lawrence, get my coat," said he. "I've been bullied enough; I'm going up to the house." When Stover only continued whittling methodically, he burst out: "Stop honing that shinbone! If you like it you can eat it! I'm going now to swallow a stack of hot cakes with maple syrup!"

"Mr. Speed," Willie impaled him with a steady glare, "you'll eat what we tell you to, and nothin' else! If we say 'grass,' grass it'll be. You're goin' to beat one Skinner if it takes a human life. And if that life happens to be yours, you got nobody but yourself to blame."

"Indeed!"

"You heard me! I've been set to ride herd on you daytimes, the other boys 'll guard you nights. We been double-crossed once—it won't happen again."

"You intend to make me eat this disgusting stuff, whether I want to or not?" Even yet the youth could not convince himself that this was other than a joke.

"No." Willie shook his head. "We just aim to make you want to eat it."

Then Larry Glass made his fatal mistake.

"Say, why don't you let Mr. Speed buy you a new phonograph, and call the race off?" he inquired.

Stover, stricken dumb, paused, knife in hand; Willie stared as if bereft of motion. Then the former spoke slowly. "Looks like we'd ought to smoke up this fat party, Will."

Willie nodded, and Glass realized that the little man's steel-blue eyes were riveted balefully upon him.

"I've had a hunch it would come to that," the near-sighted one replied. "Every time I look at him I see a bleedin' bullet hole in his abominable region, about here." He laid a finger upon his stomach, and Glass felt a darting pain at precisely the same spot.

"That's where you hit the gambler at Ogden," he heard Stover say—it might have been from a great distance—"but I aim for the bridge of the nose."

"The belly ain't so sudden as the eye-socket, but it's more lingerin,' and a heap painfuller," explained the gun man, and Speed was moved to sympathy.

"Heart's Pounding Like a Calf's at Brandin'."

"Larry only wanted to please you—eh, Larry?" he said, nervously, but Glass made no reply. His distended orbs were frozen upon Willie. It was doubtful if he even heard.

"Our honor ain't for sale," Still Bill declared.

Here Berkeley Fresno spoke. "Of course not. And you mustn't think that Speed is trying to get out of the race. He wants to run! And if anything happened to prevent his running he'd be broken-hearted, I know he would!"

Willie's hypnotic eye left the trainer's abdomen and traveled slowly to Speed.

"What could happen?" questioned he.

"N-nothing that I know of."

"You don't aim to leave?"

"Certainly not."

"Oh, you fellows take it too seriously," Fresno offered carelessly. "He might have to."

Willie's upper lip drew back, showing his yellow teeth.

"They don't sell no railroad tickets before Saturday, and the walkin' is bad. There's your breakfast, Mr. Speed. When you've et your fill, you better rest. And don't talk to them ladies, neither; it spoils your train of thought!"

CHAPTER XIV.

NOW that the possibility of escape from the Flying Heart was cut off, the young man felt agonizing regret that he had not yielded to his trainer's earlier importunities and taken refuge in flight while there was yet time. Everything was too latenow. Even if he made a clean breast of the whole affair to Jean, or to her brother when he arrived, what good would that do? De doubted Jack's ability to save him, in the light of what had just passed; for men like Willie cared nothing for the orders of the person whose pay roll they chanced to grace. And Willie was not alone, either; the rest of the crew were equally desperate. What heed would these nomads pay to Jack Chapin's commands, once they learned the truth?

There were still, however, two days of grace, and to youth two days is an eternity. Therefore, he closed his eyes and trusted to the unexpected. How the unexpected could get past that grim, watchful sentry just outside the door he could not imagine, but when the breakfast-bell reminded him of his hunger, he banished his fears for the sake of the edibles his custodians had served.

"Don't you want anything to eat?" he inquired, when Larry made no move to depart for the cookhouse.

"No."

"Not hungry, eh?"

"I'm hungry enough to eat a plush cushion, but—"

"What?"

"Mary!"

"Mariedetta?"

"Sure. She's been chasin' me again. If somebody don't side track that Cuban, I'll have to lick Carara." He sighed. "I told you we'd ought to tin can it out of here. Now it's too late."

It was perhaps a half-hour later that Helen Blake came tripping into the gymnasium, radiant, sparkling, her crisp white dress touched here and there with blue that matched her eyes, in her hands a sunshade, a novel, and a mysterious little bundle.

"We were so sorry to lose you at breakfast," she began.

Wally led her to the cosey-corner, and seated himself beside her.

"I suppose it is a part of this horrid training. I would never have mentioned that foot race if I had dreamed it would be like this."

Here at least was a soul that sympathized.

"The only hardship is not to see you," he declared softly.

Miss Blake dropped her eyes.

"I thought you might like to go walking; it's a gorgeous morning. You see, I've brought a book to read to you while you rest—you must be tired after your run."

"I am, and I will. This is awfully good of you, Miss Blake." Speed rose, overwhelmed with joy, but the look of Glass was not to be passed up. "I—I'm afraid it's impossible, however."

The blue eyes flew open in astonishment. "Why?" the girl questioned.

"They won't let me. I—I'm supposed to keep to myself."

"They? Who?"

"Glass."

Miss Blake turned indignantly upon Larry. "Do you mean to say Mr. Speed can't go walking with me?"

"I never said nothing of the sort," declared the trainer. "He can go if he wants to."

"Just the same, I—oughtn't to do it. There is a strict routine—"

A lift of the brows and a courteous smile proclaimed Miss Blake's perfect indifference to the subject, just as Willie sauntered past the open window and spoke to Glass beneath his breath:

"Git her out!"

"I'm so sorry. May I show you a surprise I brought for you?" She unwrapped her parcel, and proudly displayed a pallid, anaemic cake garlanded with wild flowers.

Speed was honestly overcome.

"For me?"

"For you. It isn't even cold yet, see! I made it before breakfast, and it looks even better than the one I baked at school!"

"That's what I call fine," declared the youth. "By Jove! and I'm so fond of cake!"

"Have a care!" breathed Larry, rising nervously, but Speed paid no attention.

"Break it with your own hands, please. Besides, it's too hot to cut."

Miss Blake broke it with her own hands, during which operation the brown face of the man outside reappeared in the window. At sight of the cake he spoke sharply, and Lawrence lumbered swiftly across the floor and laid a heavy hand upon the cake.

"Mr. Speed!" he cried warningly.

"Here, take your foot off my angel-food!" fiercely ordered the youth. But the other was like adamant.

"Bo, you are about to contest for the honor of this ranch! That cake will make a bum of you!"

"Oh—h!" gasped the author of the delicacy.

"Stop before it is too late!" Glass held his hungry employer at a distance, striving to make known by a wink the necessity of his act.

"There is absolutely nothing in my cake to injure any one," Helen objected loyally, with lifted chin; whereupon the corpulent trainer turned to her and said:

"Cake would crab any athlete. Cake and gals is the limit."

"Really! I had no idea I was the least bit dangerous." Miss Blake, turning to her host, smiled frigidly. "I'm so sorry I intruded."

"Now don't say that!" Speed strove to detain her. "Please don't be offended—I just have to train!"

"Of course. And will you pardon me for interrupting your routine? You see, I had no idea I wasn't wanted."

"But you are, and I do want you! I—"

"Good-by!" She nodded pleasantly at the door, and left her lover staring after her.

When she had gone, he cried, in a trembling voice: "You're a fine yap, you are! She got up early to do something nice for me, and you insulted her! You wouldn't even let me sit and hold her hand!"

"No palm-readin'." Speed turned to behold his trainer ravenously devouring the cake, and dashed to its rescue.

"It's heavier than a frog full of buckshot. You won't like it, Cul."

"It's perfectly delicious!" came the choking answer.

"Then get back of them curtains. Willie 'd shoot on sight."

And that morning the prisoner idled about the premises, followed at a distance by his guard. He could not bear to read the future; anything seemed possible. Time and again he cursed that spirit of braggadocio, that thoughtless lack of moral scruple, which had led him into this predicament. He vowed that he was done with false pretenses; henceforth the strictest probity should be his. No more false poses. Praise won by dissimulation and deceit was empty, anyhow, and did he escape this once, henceforth the world should know J. Wallingford Speed for what he was—an average individual, with no uncommon gifts of mind or body, courage or ability.

(To be Continued.)

Point He Had Overlooked.

The story is told of a man who bought a gallon of gin to take home, and by way of a label wrote his name upon a pickup card which happened to be the seven of clubs, and tied it to the handle. His son, observing the jug, quietly remarked, "That's an awfully careless way to leave that liquor." "Why?" "Because some one might come along with the eight of clubs and take it."

Left Art Works to Country.

Detaille, the French military painter, desired, like the English artist Turner, that his country should possess his paintings, and such of his pictures as he possessed at the time of his death are to become public property. His house, containing his collection of uniforms, weapons, etc., is devoted to the purposes of a museum.

Feeling ran high over the game at Flanders' alleys last night between the Specials captained by "Deacon" Flanders and the Walnut hills, led by their old commander, "Buck" McCarthy. But the Specials seemed to have all the nerve or luck or what ever it may be called and certainly hung a dark one on their opponents. They took the first string by 12 pins, rolling 436. The next they took by a margin of 47 pins while the last was the closest of all winning out 399 to 394, just 5 pins lead. The total was theirs by 84 pins. For the Specials, Hogan was high with 103 and 277. For the "Come back" quintette Peterson was high with 114 and 279. The summary:

Annual Event to be Held at First Congregational Church this Evening

The First Congregational church of Winchester will be the scene of the annual March musical, one of the three special social functions held by the parish of the church each year, this evening at 8 o'clock. These musical treats are financed by the voluntary subscriptions of members of the congregation, and are without admission fees thus allowing people to hear the fine entertainment who ordinarily could not afford to, and at the same time, the fine program attracts music lovers from some distance.

This year's program is remarkably attractive and has been provided only at great financial expense, as well as of labor on the part of the committee in charge.

Music will be furnished by the Mahn quartet of the BostonSymphony orchestra: Frederick Mahn, first violin; Julius B. Theodorowicz, second violin; Valdemar Berliner, viola; Louis Nast, violincello. Mrs. Irene Osborne-Grant will be the piano accompanist.

Mrs. Woodside has no superior in the Scandinavian and Italian dialects. Her setting forth of the pathetic and humorous in life is particularly a masterpiece of dramatic art.

Following the last number of the program an informal reception will be held in the church parlors and a collation served.

The ushers for the occasion will be Messrs. Reeve Chipman, Gordon Parker, David J. Witmer, Arthur W. Hale, Robert E. Fay, William I. Palmer, Ralph E. Guillow, Walter L. Rice, Ralph B. Redfern, Kenneth P. Pond and Flavel Shurtleff.

Can We Help You?

(As We Helped This Man)

Herbert O. Russell is a farmer in North Hadley, Mass., who turned a threatened loss, not only to himself but to his neighbors, into a highly profitable business transaction by making judicious use of the telephone toll lines. He is the Mr. Blank of the following story which appeared in TELEPHONE TOPICS. We use his name by permission:

A HADLEY PASTORAL.

The fertile fields of old Hadley are especially adapted for raising tobacco and onions and especially onions, which are usually a very profitable crop. This year the crop was larger than ever before—bumper to the nth. Prices at once shrunk alarmingly until it came to be a grave question whether it was worth while to market the crop. Some farmers became discouraged and left the crop to rot in the fields. One gave the subject careful thought. While he was pondering the question his glance fell upon the telephone in his kitchen. Could that be the answer?

The next day he called on Manager Proctor for information. He secured full particulars about our toll facilities, then went home and planned a sales campaign by telephone. Each evening the family carefully studied the directories and made up a list of wholesale commission dealers in the large cities.

Early each morning Mr. Blank called them by telephone. Results were immediate and surprising. He made satisfactory terms in short order for the sale of his entire crop and before long he was shipping onions by the carload. After he disposed of his own crop, the commission merchants continued their demands for more onions, and Mr. Blank commenced buying his neighbors' crops which he sold at a good profit. As a result of his work he has sold twenty-one carloads of onions. It need not be added that he is extremely grateful for the resources of our telephone service.

Are you, Mr. Farmer or Business Man, confronted with a distribution problem of any kind? Let us help you, if we can. Call your Local Manager and see what he can suggest. In Greater Boston telephone (free of charge) to Fort Hill 7600, the Contract Department.

A certain man purchased a setting of eggs for $15, from which he hatched five cockerels and four pullets. He selected the best cockerel, put him with the four pullets into a Poultry Show, got first prize, and was offered $750 for the five birds.

You have the same chance. To be "at the top" is old fashioned now. The struggle of modern times is to "aviate," soar above the fellow at the top, knock him off his perch, and make a new high record.

To aviate in the poultry business you must have the goods. Get the best eggs you can buy—if only a few, three or four or more—and get them early so they will be fully matured for the Fall Shows.

S. C. White Orpingtons have captured the public heart all over the world. They have a record, point for point, that can't be beaten. Get your eggs from the best pen of the best breed that ever scratched for their living, and they will scratch for yours.

My pen of S. C. White Orpingtons took first at Boston, January 7, 1913. I can furnish eggs from this pen at 60 cents each, one or more as you may want, and baby chicks at 90 cents each. Others at 30 cents each for eggs and 45 cents each for chicks. Get them early and try your luck.

FLAG PRESENTED WITH IMPRESSIVE CEREMONY

Beautiful Gift from Woburn Lodge, 908 B. P. O. E. to W. H. S. Battalion Last Evening

LIEUT. GOV. WALSH SPEAKER

The Woburn High school battalion is the proud possessor of a beautiful silk American flag, the gift of Woburn lodge 908 B.P.O.E. From the peak of the staff flutter two streamers inscribed "High School Battalion, Woburn." A plate upon the staff gives the name of the donor, and the names of the mayor, chairman of the school committee, principal of the school, and that of the Exalted Ruler of Woburn lodge.

The ceremony of presentation took place last evening in the Armory of G Co. 5th regiment M. V. M. A. very large audience of interested friends gathered to witness the impressive exercises, and to applaud the exhibition drill of the natty cadets, and the loyal sentiments expressed by the several speakers.

The occasion was made notable by the presence of the Lieutenant Governor of the Commonwealth. Hon. David I. Walsh. Flanking the platform were the veterans of the civil war, members of Posts 33 and 161 G.A.R. members of Charles Bowers Winn Camp S. of V. and of Charles H. Moloy camp S.W.V. and members of W.R.C. 84, and 161. The patriotic societies were escorted to the Armory by a delegation of local Elks numbering 75 led by John J Costello, E.R. Charles C. Clarke himself a member of the donating lodge, and chairman of the subcommittee on military drill of the school board, was a most efficient and omnipresent master of ceremonies.

Upon the platform were among others: Mayor William H. Henchey Representatives J. H. Parker Jr., and Henry L. Andrews, Assistant justice John G.Maguire,Rev. Henry B. Williams D. D., Rev. Roy W. Magoun, Rev. Fred M. Estes, William W. Crosby chairman of the school board, Fred J. Brown, Samuel W. Mendum, ex-chairman of the school board, President Harry A. Jones of the city council, Aldermen Blake, Marshall, Ham, and Hogan, City Collector B. J. Golden, City Solicitor J. Fred Maloney, City Clerk B. F. McHugh, Principal George W. Low of the High school, Superintendent George I. Clapp, Major John M. Portal,Commissioner Fred F. Walker of the Department of animal industry.

After a group of selections by the battalion drum corps,the assembly was sounded, and the four companies were put through their paces in battalion formation. Major W. A. Walker, who is still weak from illness watched the work from his chair on the side lines, the evolutions being in charge of Capt. H. E. Lawson and Adjutant E. E. Silver Jr.

Then followed a series of company competitive drills in marching and manual of arms for the honor of being selected as the flag company. The contest was well fought out, and was watched with great interest. Each command had its friends in the large audience and applause was generously bestowed. The judges were Sergeants Philip Shea, Frank Shannon and Frank H. Kean of G Co. 5th regiment. Each company was commanded by its respective captain.

The judges' report, which was announced by MayorHenchey,awarded the coveted honor to Co. D Capt. W. E. Hooper commanding. Its record was 44 2-3 points. The other standings were: Co. B. Capt. R. Marshall 40; Co. A. Capt. H.E Lawson 38 1-3; Co. C. Capt. E. P. Cotton 35 1-3; The result was hailed with loud applause, and evidently accorded with the judgment of the spectators. The winning company from its captain to the smallest private in the rear rank was in excellent form, and presented a very soldierly appearance. Its step was of regulation length, the tempo was good, the movements snappy, and a general air of confidence marked every feature. In the manual of arms the movements were executed with admirable precision.

The prepared schedule of events was subjected to some changes owing to the late arrival of His Honor the Lieutenant Governor who had a speaking engagement in Cambridge, at a reunion of the parish with which Rev.J. F.Doherty formerly ofWoburn is connected.

To fill in the time, Mr. Clarke introduced the mayor, who took occasion, after a word of welcome to those present, and recognition of the excellent work of the battalion, to ask the aid of the people of Woburn in raising a fund to send to the stricken people of the Ohio Valley. The mayor referred to the great calamity very feelingly and urged all citizens to give as they could afford to the worthy cause, and named City Treasurer James McAvoy as receiving officer for the fund. He asked all local organizations and citizens generally to help the good work along as evidence of Woburn's sympathy. Short addresses of a congratulatory nature were made by Chairman Crosby and Samuel W. Mendum.

Lieutenant Governor Walsh was billed to arrive at 9 but it was 9.40 before he entered the armory accompanied by Dr. William H. Keleher. His entrance was the signal for an outburst of applause, the greeting taking the form of an ovation as he moved to the platform on the arm of Judge John G Maguire. He was welcomed in fitting words by Mayor Henchey. It was an impressive moment as the distinguished guest walked to his place on the platform, the vast audience was standing, the battalion presented arms, and the drums and cornets sounded a glad welcome, the applause of the audience swelling the chorus.

The stage was now set for te formal presentation of the flag. The battalion was in hollow square formation. Into the open space moved the official party, led by Master of Ceremonies Charles C. Clarke. It comprised: a guard of honor bearing the national emblem and comprising A. R. Linscott of post 33 G.A.R., W. F. Taylor of post 161 G.A.R. and Marcus H. Cotton, commander of the local Sons of Veterans. Following were Mayor Henchey and Lieut. Governor Walsh, and Chairman Crosby of the school committee.

Mr. Clarke opened the exercise saying to Chairman Crosby that reverences the flag, and has this evening given so emphatic he had been delegated by Woburn lodge 908 B.P.O.E. to present the new flag to the battalion. He said the Order of Elks was distinctively an American organization. The national emblem was the only flag known to it, and the only one used in its lodge rooms. It draped the altar upon which lay theHoly Bible, and it was the gift every initiate received when he was declared to be a member of the order. He urged the boys of the battalion to treasure, and love and respect it throughout their lives.

Chairman Crosby, accepted the gift in behalf of the school committee, and in turn transferred it to the Lieutenant Governor who spoke eloquently of its meaning and its lesson. He said in part: I am very much pleased as lieutenant governor to be here and join in this beautiful patriotic service. I am proud to belong to an order

MISS MARGARET SLATTERY

Perhaps there is no better known or more popular speaker to young people on themes related to the development of character than Miss Slattery. Her work in the Fitchburg Normal school, where each year hundreds of young people came directly under her touch, gave her a deep insight into their needs and aspirations. Her quick sympathy and real interest led to profound study of the problems of the young. She understands their life, and knows how to say the helpful word. Everywhere she is in demand on the platform of conventions and conferences. At present she is devoting her time wholly to such work, and to writing in the interest of character building. Such a book as her "Just Over the Hill" is an inspiration not to be lost.

It is a great privilege that our people may hear Miss Slattery on Sunday evening at the First Church where she is to give one of her inspiring addresses. People from neighboring towns have signified their purpose to attend the service, which cannot fail to be of great interest and profit. The chorus which gave the "Hymn of Praise" on Palm Sunday will lead the music. The service is at seven o'clock in the church auditorium.

THE LESSON OF THE FLAG

The lesson of the flag presented last evening to the High school battalion by Woburn lodge 908 B.P.O.E. and of the impressive exercises attending the presentation has a wide application.

To the schoolboy soldier it marked an important event in their educational experience. That they were honored in having the presence of the distinguished lieutenant governor of the Commonwealth, who found time from his busy life to come here and formally present the emblem is a fact in their life they never will forget.

From his eloquent words they must have learned the importance of keeping ever to the front a spirit of loyalty and devotion to the flag and country, and must have caught the inspiration which enabled him to tell the story so graphically. They must have felt an added responsibility in the custody of the silken emblem of the union of states, and of theri duty as citizens of the future in defending and meintaining it.

The act of the fraternal order in giving the flag had its significance as well. It was the best evidence that could be given of the strong foundations upon which the order is founded and the high ideals to which it aspires. No order that places the Bible upon its flag-draped altar, and bestows upon each and every initiate a miniature national emblem can be looked upon as a foe of good government and good citizenship.

The occasion was made especially impressive by the presence of the veterans of the civil war, and members of kindred patriotic societies. It was fitting that these veterans whose efforts helped to save the Union and the flag should be present as witnesses of the service. The guard of honor drawn from the ranks of the war veterans and their sons was a sermon in itself. It is to be hoped that the city officials present recognized the sentiment of the hour—that serving the public involves sacrifice, and is not an opportunity for self-exploitation or self interest.

One of the gratifying feature of the evening, besides the splendid work of the soldier boys, and the presence of distinguished officials, was the large attendance of citizens, who evinced much interest in the exercises. To each and every one of them was addressed every word that was uttered, and it is for them to exemplify in their daily life as citizens the lessons set forth. The lesson of service cannot be over learned. To quote Lieutenant Governor Walsh "Let every life seek to add something to the sum of human kindness."

LET WOBURN HELP

The appeal, voiced by Mayor Henchey at the Armory last evening, for concerted action in the matter of raising funds for the relief of the stricken people of the Ohio valley, should be promptly responded to by the people of this city.

As the mayor stated, whatever sums are contributed by residents of this city, they should be consolidated in one total, and sent forward as a Woburn contribution. With this view he wisely councelled that all organizations religious, social, and fraternal, and all people who are not connected with any society, should send their contributions, however small, to City Treasurer James McAvoy at the municipal building.

Woburn sympathizes in her heart with the unfortunate thousands in the devastated section, and it is confidently believed and hoped that this sympathy will crystallize into a substantial concontribution for their relief. "Mony a mickle maks a muckle" finds application. The mites of the individual added together will help in a measure to alleviate suffering that cannot be overestimated. God speed the work.

an evidence of its desire to foster devotion to the red, white and blue. It is fitting that this school should be thus remembered, for our schools are the bulwark of our national liberty. In them our children should learn the lesson of the flag, and upon their impressionable young minds should be stamped its history and its meaning.

The flag means much. I cannot describe its beauties in fitting terms. Words are incapable of giving full expression to its significance. It stands for love of country, the indissoluble union of the states, for patriotism, for loyalty, for sacrifice. These veterans, who bear it tonight, know better than we what it stands for. Their experience in the hour of storm and stress, has revealed to them the story of the emblem beyond the power of words to describe. They and their comrades in countless numbers throughout the North counted its preservation and its honor of greater worth than the endearments of home, family, wealth and position. They gave up all for it. They carried it through to victory in a spirit of devotion and loyalty, and the history of the world shows no counterpart of their sacrifice. Their faces tonight are bright with the thought that the flag they loved is to be placed in the hands of the youth of today who will form the citizenship of the future.

The flag stands for courage, the courage to defend principle, and high ideals of character. and it stands for a country where there exists, as no where else in the world, equality of opportunity. Many of you boys, possibly the majority of you, are the sons of men and women to whom much of opportunity has been denied, men and women who have sacrificed much that you might have a better chance in life's struggle than they had. To you I want to say that under this flag you have a chance to rise. No place is so exalted as to be outside the bounds of your ambition.

The flag stands too for government, a government of the people, for the people and by the people. Remember that the government, typified by this beautiful banner, is your friend. As your school and your college is your Alma Mater, so is the government your dear mother, your fond mother. Learn from the flag and from the sacrifices made by its defenders, to be good citizens, loyal citizens not of a pagan empire but of a Christian republic. Learn from the flag that life is best which serves to add a little more each day to the sum of human kindness.

As the Lieut. Governor finished the applause broke forth and continued for several minutes The flag was then handed to the color sergeant of Co. D. Cheers were given for the Lieutenant governor for Co. D., Chairman Crosby, Mr. Clarke, Military instructor Capt. Fred C. Kean, and Principal Low, and then the large audience slowly filed out, much elated over the successful service. Among the visitors from out of town were: Capt. R. J. Cogswell, Battalion adjutant E. F. Morrison and Senior lieutenant G. R. Cameron of the Lowell High school battalion.

The fatigue incident to the enforced delay of the lieutenant governor's arrival proved too great for several of the young cadets, who had to be assisted to the open air. They were: Capt. Elwyn P. Cotton of Co. C., Lievt. John G. Seaver, Co A, Privates Harold McGann Co. D. and Girard Parkin Co. B. and Musician Madsen.

The Roster of the battalion: Capt. Fred C. Kean, military instructor; Major, W. A. Walker; Adjutant, E. E. Silver, Jr.; Quartermaster, W. Looney; Sergeant Major, E. C. Wall; Q. M. Sergt, B. P. Winchester; Drum jajor, E. J. Connolly.

SERIOUS BRUSH FIRE AT RAG ROCK

The alarm from box 38 shortly after two o'clock this afternoon was for a serious brush fire at Rag Rock which at one time threatened to destroy some houses in the vicinity. The department arrived in the nick of time and succeeded in checking the spread of the flames before adjoining property was damaged.

Children playing in the locality were responsible for the fire and as a number of similar fires during the last few weeks have been set by young people it is expected that the police and fire officials will take measures to prevent any further occurrences.

While the firemen were fighting the Rag Rock blaze, box 47 was sounded for another brush fire, this time on Wood street, near the house of Ann Coakley, and before the apparatus arrived the dwelling was surrounded with flames. It looked certain that the house would be destroyed, but Hose 4 of Montvale and Hose 6, which had been sent from the Rag Rock fire, with the steamer and truck got to Wood street in good season, and saved the property.

(5) Judith, born December 24, 1744; married, firstly, Capt. Abiel Chandler, secondly, Nathaniel Rolfe.

[There were children of the Goss and Chandler families, and a list of them is duly presented in Bouton's "Concord, N. H.," p. 693.]

(5) Timothy Walker, son of (4) Timothy, born Concord, N. H., June 26, 1737, died May 5, 1822. Justice of the Court of common pleas from 1777 to 1809. He was a man of great influence in New Hampshire. He married one of the three daughters of Rev. Joseph Burbeen; namely, Susanna, born April 11, 1746, and died in Concord, N. H., September 28, 1828, in the eighty-third year of her age. Her children were fourteen in number:

(1) Sarah, born January 21, 1764.
(2) Charles, born September 25, 1765. (See beyond.)
(3) Paul, born April 14, 1767.
(4) Timothy, born February 2, 1769.
(5) Joseph, born June 21, 1771.
(6) Susan, born March 17, 1773.
(7) Esther, born April 17, 1775.
(8) Susanna, born January 4, 1777.
(9) Esther, born October 13, 1778.
(10) Betsey, born April 15, 1780.
(11) Joseph, born January 12, 1782.
(12) Bridget, born January 1, 1784.
(13) Polly, born March 22, 1786.
(14) Clarissa, born July 27, 1788.

Rev. Joseph Burbeen was a brother of Timothy Walker's mother. He married Esther Poole of Woburn, only daughter of Jonathan Poole, and granddaughter of Col. Eleazer Flagg. About the time when Joseph Burbeen became of age, he became attached to Miss Esther Poole, an only daughter of her parents, and whose mother was sole heiress of the wealthy Col. Flagg. The attachment was mutual, but the Pooles disapproved of the match, and wished to have their daughter married to Rev. Edward Jackson of Woburn, who had been settled about eight years previously to this period, as colleague to the Rev. John Fox. The young people fearing that severe measures would be taken to prevent their union, mounted their horses and galloped off to Hampton Falls, New Hampshire, where they were married on October 8, 1736. The Pooles upon hearing what had taken place, were much incensed, and would not suffer Mr. Burbeen to come to the house. However, not long afterwards, they began to relax in their resentment, and cordially received Mr. Burbeen as their son-in-law. Joseph Burbeen had some portion of his father's estate and was sole owner of the old Burbeen house and land adjoining, which he obtained partly by heirship and partly by purchase from the other heirs. He and his wife removed to the old Burbeen house, where they lived together till her death, March 28, 1776, aged fifty-nine years. Here Mr. Burbeen died June 7, 1794, aged eighty-two years, and was buried at his request, in the grave of his grandfather, John Burbeen.

Three daughters:

(1) Esther, married Capt. Jesse Wyman and Samuel Thompson, Esq., of Woburn. Three children.

(2) Bridget, married Master John Fowle of Woburn (schoolmaster), and died at the home of her sister, Mrs. Timothy Walker, in Concord, N. H., December 26, 1824, and was buried in the old North cemetery of that town. No children.

(3) Susanna, married Hon. Timothy Walker of Concord, N. H. (See above).

Joseph Burbeen was born March 3, 1712, and graduated from Harvard college in 1731. He studied theology and is said to have been a popular preacher, but was never ordained or settled. He preached occasionally; and mostly taught school. The few books he left were well chosen, and creditable to his taste. (Burbeen Family, pp. 15-18.)

Timothy Walker, a son of (5) Timothy Walker, Esq., married, firstly, December 31, 1804, Lydia, daughter of Samuel, Esq., and (his second wife) Lydia (Jones) Thompson of Woburn, born Woburn, January 31, 1771, died October 20, 1838, aged sixty-eight, at Concord, N. H. [Bouton's "Concord."]

(6) Charles Walker, son of (5) Timothy made some manuscript notes about 1830, which are exceedingly valuable concerning the history of the Burbeen family, and Woburn, as it was at that time. Many of the traditions he preserved would be lost and unknown, had he not taken pains to preserve them. Joseph Burbeen Walker, a relative of Charles, born June 12, 1822, Yale college, 1844, lawyer, residing at Concord, N. H., inherited a large number of the paintings and portraits left by the Countess Rumford. [Cf. Bouton's "Concord," p. 692].

(7) Sarah Walker, daughter of (4) Timothy, born at Concord, N. H., August 6, 1739, died there January 19, 1792; married, firstly, Col. Benjamin Rolfe of Concord, and, secondly, November, 1772, Benjamin Thompson, afterwards Count Rumford. Benjamin Rolfe, Esq., was the son of Henry Rolfe and his wife Hanna of Newbury. He was born July 8, 1710, and graduated at Harvard college 1727. He died December 21, 1771, in his sixty-second year. He was wealthy and left a large estate. He was a bachelor until about sixty years old, when he married Sarah, oldest daughter of Rev. Timothy Walker. Her age at the time of this marriage was about thirty. Her child by Rolfe was a son named Paul. Her second venture in the marriage line was to a man about fourteen years younger than herself, and by whom she had one child, a daughter, Sarah, born October 18, 1774. Count Rumford himself says of this marriage: "I married, or rather, I was married, at the age of nineteen. I espoused the widow of a Colonel Rolfe, daughter of the Rev. Mr. Walker, a highly respectable minister, and one of the first settlers of Rumford [Concord, N. H.] He was already connected with my family. He heartily approved of the choice of his daughter, and he himself united our destines. This excellent man became sincerely attached to me; he directed my studies, he formed my taste, and my position was in every respect the most agreeable that could possibly be imagined."

About 1772 Rumford having been appointed to the mastership of a school in Concord, N. H., it was thus that he became acquainted with his wife and her family. In May, 1775, his wife was confined by illness at Woburn, which had prevented her going home to Concord. Her age when married to him was thirty-three, and his nineteen. Rumford, at this period, was a person of a fine manly make and figure, nearly six feet in height, of handsome figure, bright blue eyes, and dark auburn hair (statement of Loammi Baldwin, his friend and contemporary). Owing to the influence and possible activity of his wife, Rumford soon shone in New Hampshire Colonial society, and at a military review at Dover, ten miles from Portsmouth, at which both were present, on the thirteenth of November, 1772, he attracted the attention of the royal governor. The result was the conferring of a major's commission on the future Count. This resulted unfortunately for him, in exciting feelings of jealousy and hostile criticism on the part of men, over whose heads he had been, as they thought, unjustly appointed, and so far as is known, he was at this time altogether devoid of military knowledge and experience. In the opinion of these enemies, he was from the outset, at heart a loyalist. The governor, too, was the last loyal governor of the province. Undoubtedly, too, his appointment was due to the power of feminine influence. His wife undoubtedly was a potent factor in the case. Her father and brother were staunch supporters of the American side in the Revolution, and it is likely that her notions afterwards were never again urged on one side or the other of the controversy. For a time, about 1773, Rumford became a gentleman farmer on his wife's estate. He had broad acres to till and employed many laborers. In August, 1774, he wrote: "I have been extremely busy this summer, or I should have given myself the pleasure of coming to see you." [Letter to his friend Loammi Baldwin]. Political troubles beginning at Concord, he secretly left, and his separation from Concord became perpetual. His wife and infant daughter were afterward with him at Woburn and Boston. But finding himself unsafe even at Woburn, he took leave of the country forever. After May, 1775, he never saw his wife again, and his daughter only in her early womanhood when she went to him in Europe.

Assigning the Cause.

"What an extraordinary curve your horse has in the spine," said a gentleman to an Irish farmer. "Can you account for it?" "By the powers, sir, and to be sure I am able. I have heard, sir, that before the beast was my property he was backed against another horse, your honor, who beat him hollow, and I daresay it's the reason that his back never got straight again."

Favored Negro Melodies.

Gladstone was not merely a rapt listener to the Christy minstrels when they were in London many years ago. Lord Malmesbury's diary contains this passage: "Gladstone, who was always fond of music, is now quite enthusiastic about negro melodies, singing them with the greatest spirit and enjoyment, never leaving out a verse, and evidently preferring such as 'Camp Town Races.'"

BOSTON THEATRES

MACGYLN ARBUCKLEN IN "THE ROUND UP"

Maclyn Arbuckle in Klaw and Erlanger's noted production of the most thrilling and massively mounted of dramas, "The Round Up," has created a memorable sensation at the Boston theatre. From the rush of orders for seats it will doubtlessly duplicate its former popular triumph

As those who have gone for fresh scenes and adventures to a life in the far West, have been fascinated by the outdoor life of perpetual and hazardous excitement amid wild surroundings, so all Boston was held almost spellbound with a strange fascination at the thrilling scenes of Western life brought to their door so to speak, in the graphic pictures presented in "The Round-Up." The enthusiastic interest displayed by every audience is the most flattering endorsement this really great production can receive.

The dramatic incident of twenty mounted Indians riding along on a cliff in the third act and the marvellously realistic battle scene add an element of realism to the play which has rarely been equalled in the history of the American stage.

A special bureau has been established for the expeditious handling of mail orders, which when sent with cash or money order and accompanied by addrssed, stamped envelope, receive immediate attention. Regular matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

CLIFF GORDON AT KEITH'S

As a character monologuist, Cliff Gordon ranks today as the most expenenet of this type of entertainment before the American public. His impersonation of "The German Senator" has become a classic, and has served to establish Mr. Gordon in the good graces of the amusement loving public. His political orations on the burning questions of the day, delivered in broken English, dealing forcibly but not always correctly with the topics of the day, are gems of humor. "The German Senator" provides more laughs to the minute than any other monologuist who has ever visited B. F. Keith's theatre. Mr. Gordon comes to Boston after a long absence, at the head of a great comedy bill. In fact, almost every act on the long program is intended for laughing purposes only. Bill Macart of "The Sleeping Beauty and the Beast" fame and Ethelyn Bradford will present their latest and funniest comedy, "The Second Genertion," for the first time in Boston. This is one of the best comedies ever presented by this clever couple, and it abounds in laughs from start to finish. The Four Rianes have a unique acrobatic novelty, the scene of hich is laid in a hotel in South Africa, and the players are giant guerillas who turn things topsy turvy. Wilbur Mack and Nella Walker will present their latest musical flirtation; while the great DeLasso troupe of casting aerialists will supply thrills enough to make the cold chills run down one's back. Buckley's animals is another great comedy act, and other features will be the wonderful Thomas A. Edison talking motion pictures with all new subjects.

TREMONT THEATER

As has been confidently anticipated not only by all of those associated with an enterprise but by those who had learned of its merits from friends in other cities where it has appeared, "Top O' The Mornin'" which began its Boston engagement at the Tremont theatre last Monday night scored an immediate success of impressive proportions. The eminence of its leading players, Tim Murphy and Gertrude Quinlan and the fact that the Anne Caldwell comedy is the latest of Henry W. Savage's productions combined as inducements sufficient to attract to the initial performance an audience which taxed the capacity of the Tremont, and that audience was frankly outspoken in its approval of the play itself, the production and the manner of the story's enactment. And the last act, the scene of which is Celtic park, where Father Quinn's picnic is in progress, is a thing of joy which evoked expressions of delight from any one who had ever participated in a fair of the kind.

In the role of "Jerry" O'Donnell, the Irish colleen whose romance provided the central theme of the play's story, Gertrude Quinlan has a part which exactly agrees with her temperament, methods and capabilities. Tim Murphy has the part of the lovable, wise old Father Quinn, and a more suitable part could hardly have been selected for his reappearance in Boston after an absence of more than ten years. Every other member of the cast, which numbers considerably more than a score, is impressively capable.

OTIS SKINNER IN "KISMET"

Edward Knoblauch's oriental drama, "Kismet," with Otis Skinner in the role of Hajj the Beggar, and presented by Klaw & Erlanger and Harrison Grey Fiske, is now the attraction at the Hollis street theatre, Boston. Owing to the length of the play and the magnitude of the production the curtain will rise at 7.45 o'clock in the evenings and at 1.45 o'clock in the afternoon.

The drama, described as "An Arabian Night," is not, however, a dramatization of any one of Schecherezade's remarkable stories. Rather it is a paraphrase of them all.

In the maelstrom of incidents that make up the plot of the play, the central figure is Hajj the Beggar, a rascal of much wit and resource who passed his life asking alms at the door of the Carpenters in the ancient city of Baghdad. In his impersonation of the character, Hajj the Beggar, Mr. Skinner has attained the highest point in his splendid progress, a progression that has been marked by many successes. Among the numerous other players in the organization are: Fred Erie, George Gaul, Owen Meech, Daniel Jarrett, Harrison Carter, Rita Jolivt, Eleanor Gordon, Georgia Woodthrope, Ivy Payne and Merle Maddern. The American production has been staged by Harrison Grey Fiske, and by his painstaking labors he has set a new standard in the pictorial art of the theatre.

———o-o-o———

PLYMOUTH THEATRE

In their second week of engagement, the Irish players at the Plymouth theater will offer two new pieces, "Coats," a comedy in one act, by Lady Gregory, and T. C. Murray's "Maurice Harts."

The bill for Monday and Tuesday nights and Thursday matinee will include Lennox Robinson's three-act play, "Patriots," followed by Lady Gregory's comedy, "Spreading the News." On Wednesday night two plays new to Bostonians will be presented, in addition to a revival of one of last season's successes. The bill includes "Coats" and "The Workhouse Ward," by Lady Gregory, and "Maurice Harts." This same bill will be repeated on Thursday night. For Friday and Saturday nights and Saturday matinee, "Mixed Marriage" and Galway Races" will be the offering.

The company is made up of last season's favorites and includes Sara Allgood, Eithne Magee, Nora Clancy, Eileen O'Doherty, Arthur Sincoair, J. M. Kerrigan, Fred O'Donovan, U. Wright, J. A. Rourke, Sidney J. Morgan and others.

OREN N. FOGG DIED IN WINCHESTER

Oren N. Fogg, the two months old child of Clarence F. and Florence (Milton) Fogg died at the home of his parents 23 Kirk street Winchester, yesterday. Funeral services will be held at 2 o'clock this afternoon at his parents' home and interment will be in Wildwood cemetery.

At noon Wally went through the mockery of a second blood-rare meal, with no cake to follow, and that afternoon Glass dragged him out under the hot sun, and made him sprint until he was ready to drop from exhaustion. His supper was wretched, and his fatigue so great that he fell asleep at Miss Blake's side during the evening. With the first hint of dawn he was up again, and Friday noon found him utterly hopeless, when, true to his prediction, the unexpected happened. In one moment he was raised from the blackest depths to the wildest transports of delight. It came in the shape of a telegram which Jean summoned him to the house to receive. He wondered listlessly as he opened the message, then started as if disbelieving his eyes; the marks of a wild emotion spread over his features, he burst into shrill, hysterical laughter.

"Do tell us!" begged Roberta.

"Covington—Covington is coming!" Wally felt his head whirl, and failed to note the chaperon's cry of surprise and see the paling of her cheeks. "Covington is coming! Don't you understand?" he shouted. After all, the gods were not deaf! Good old Culver, who had never failed him, was coming as a deliverer.

Even in the face of his extraordinary outburst the attention of the beholders was drawn to Lawrence Glass, who caused the porch to shake beneath his feet; who galloped to his employer, and seizing him by the hands, capered about like a hippopotamus.

"I told you 'Allah' was some guy," he wheezed. "When does Covington arrive?"

Wally reread the message. "It says 'noon Friday.' Why, that's today! He's here now!"

"'Rah! 'Rah! 'Rah! Covington!" bellowed the trainer, and Mrs. Keap sank to a seat with a stifled moan.

"Why all the 'Oh joy! Oh rapture! stuff?" questioned Berkeley Fresno.

"As Socrates, the Hemlock Kid, would put it, 'Snatched from the shadow of the grave,'" quoth Glass, then paused abruptly. "Say, you don't think nothin' could happen to him on the way over from the depot?"

"I'm so sorry we didn't know in time to meet him, lamented Miss Chapin.

"And I could have run over to the railroad to bid him welcome," laughed Speed. "Twenty miles would do me good."

Still Bill and Willie approached the gallery curiously, and in subdued tones inquired:

"What's the matter, Mr. Speed?"

"You ain't been summoned away?" Willie stared questioningly upward.

"Would Y'all Like to Lay a Little Mo' on This Race?"

"No, no! My running partner is on his way here, that's all."

"Running pardner?"

"Culver Covington."

"Oh, we was afraid something had happened. You see, Gabby Gallagher has just blowed in from the Centipede to raise our bets."

"We think it's a bluff, and we'd like to call him."

"Do so, by all means!" cried the excited athlete. "Come on, let's all talk to him!"

The entire party, with the exception of Mrs. Keap, trooped down from the porch and followed the foreman out toward the sheds, where, in the midst of a crowd of ranchhands, a burly, loud-mouthed Texan was discoursing.

"I do wish Jack were here," said Jean nervously, on the way.

Gabby Gallagher seemed a fitting leader for such a desperate crew as that of the Centipede, for he was the hardest-looking citizen the easterners had beheld thus far. He was thickset, and burned to the color of a ripe olive; his long, drooping mustaches, tobacco-stained at the center, were bleached at the extremities to a hempen hue. His bristly hair was cut short, and stood aggressively erect upon a bullet head, his clothes were soiled and greasy beneath a gray coating of dust. A pair of alert, lead-blue eyes and a certain facility of movement belied the drawl that marked his nativity. He removed his hat and bowed at sight of Miss Chapin.

"Good evenin', Miss Jean!" said he. "I hope I find y'all well."

"Quite well, Gallagher. And you?"

"Tol'able, thank you."

"These are my friends from the east."

The Centipede foreman ran his eyes coldly over Jean's companions until they rested upon Speed, where they remained. He shifted a lump in his cheek, spat dexterously, and directed his remark at the Yale man.

"I rode over to see if y'all would like to lay a little mo' in this y'ere foot race. I allow you are the unknown?".

Speed nodded, and Stover took occasion to ramark:

"Them's our inclinations, but we've about gone our limit."

"I don't blame you none," said Gallagher, allowing his gaze to rove slowly from top to toe of the eastern lad. No, I cain't blame you none whatever. But I'm terrible grieved at them tidin's. Though we Centipede punchers has ever considered y'all a cheap an' poverty-ridden outfit, we gives you credit for bein' game, till now." He spat for a second time, and regarded Stover scornfully.

A murmur ran through the cowboys.

"We are game," retorted Stover, "and for your own good don't allow no belief to the contrary to become a superstition."

"Don't let a Centipede bluff you!" exclaimed Speed. "Cover anything they offer—give 'em odds. Anything you don't want, I'll take, pay or play, money at the tape. We can't lose."

"I got no more money," said Carara, removing his handsome bespangled hat, "but I bet my sombrero. 'E's wort' two hondred pesos."

Murphy, the Swede, followed quickly.

"Aye ban' send may vages home to may ole' moder, but aye skall bat you some."

"Haven't you boys risked enough already?" ventured Miss Chapin. "Remember, it will go pretty hard with the losers."

"Harder the better," came a voice.

"Y'all don't have to bet, jest because I'm h'yar," gibed Gallagher.

"God! I wish I was rich!" exclaimed Willie.

But Miss Chapin protested. "You are two months overdrawn, all of you. My brother won't advance you any more."

"Then my man, Lawrence, will take what they can't cover," offered Speed.

"That's right! Clean 'em good, brothers," croaked the trainer.

"If you'll step over to the bunk-house, Gabby, we'll dig up some personal perquisites and family heirlooms." Stover nodded toward his men's quarters, and Gallagher grinned joyously.

"That shore listens like a band from where I set. We aim to annex the wages, hopes, and personal ambitions of y'all, along with your talkin'-machine."

"Excuse me." Willie pushed his way forward. "How's she gettin' along?"

"Fine!"

"You mule-skinners ain't broke her?"

"No; we plays her every evenin'."

The little man shifted his feet; then allowed himself to inquire, as if regarding the habits of some dear departed friend:

"Have you chose any favorite records?"

"We all has our pick. Speakin' personal, I'm stuck on that baggage coach song of Mrs. More's."

"Mo-ray!" Willie corrected. "M-o-r-a! Heleney Mo-ray is the lady's name."

"Mebbe so. Our foot-runner likes that Injun war-dance best of all." Carara smiled at Cloudy, who nodded as if pleased by the compliment. Then it was that the Flying Heart spokesman made an inquiry in hushed hesitating tones.

"How do you like "The Holy City?" —he removed his hat, as did those back of him. "As sung by Madam-o-sella Melby?"

"Rotten!" Gallagher said promptly. "That's a bum, for fair."

During one breathless instant the wizened man stood as if disbelieving his ears, the enormity of the insult robbing him of speech and motion. Then he uttered a snarl, and Stover was barely in time to intercept the backward fling of his groping hand.

"No voylence, Willie! There's ladies present."

Stover's captive ground his teeth and struggled briefly, then turned and made for the open prairie without a word.

"It's his first love," said Stover, simply. The other foreman exploded into hoarse laughter, saying:

"I didn't reckon I was treadin' on the toes of no bereafed relatif's, but them church tunes ain't my style. However, we're wastin' time, gents. Where's that bunk-house? Nothin' but money talks loud enough for me to hear. Good-day, white folks!" Gallagher saluted Miss Chapin and her friends with a flourish, and moved away in company with the cowboys.

"I never," said Glass, "seen so many tough guys outside of a street-car strike."

'Gallagher has been in prison," Jean informed him. "He's a wonderful shot."

"I knew it!"

Speed spoke up brightly: "Well, let's go back to the house and wait for Covington."

"But you were getting ready to go running," said Helen.

"No more running for me! I'm in good enough shape, eh, Larry?"

"Great! Barring the one thing."

"What's that?" queried Fresno.

"A little trouble with one of his nerve-centers, that's all. But even if it got worse during the night, Covington could run the race for him."

The Californian started. At last all was plain. He had doubted from the first, now he was certain; but with understanding came also a menace to his own careful plans. If Covington ran in Speed's place, how could he effect his rival's exposure? On the way back to the house he had to think pretty rapidly.

Mrs. Keap was pacing the porch as the others came up, and called Speed aside; then, when they were alone, broke out, with blazing eyes:

"You said you had stopped him!"

"And I thought I had. I did my best."

"But he's coming! He'll be here any minute!"

"I suppose he learned you were here." Wally laughed.

"Then you must have told him."

"No, I didn't."

"Mr. Speed"—Roberta's cheeks were pallid and her voice trembled—"you"—didn't—send that telegram—at all."

"Oh, but I did."

"You wanted him to get here in time to run in your place. I see it all now. You arranged it very cleverly, but you will pay the penalty."

"You surely won't tell Helen?"

"This minute! You wretched, deceitful man!"

Before he could say more, from the front of the house came the rattle of wheels, a loud "Whoa!" then Jean's voice, crying:

"Culver! Culver!" while Mrs. Keap clutched at her bosom and moaned.

Her companion bolted into the house and down the hall, shouting the name of his room-mate. Out through the front door he dashed headlong, in time to behold Fresno and the two girls assisting the new arrival toward the veranda. They were exclaiming in pity, and had their arms about the athlete, for Culver Covington, Intercollegiate One-Hundred-Yard Champion, was hobbling forward upon a pair of crutches.

The yell died in Speed's throat, he felt himself grow deadly faint.

"Crippled!" he gasped, and leaned against the door for support.

CHAPTER XV.

IN a daze, Speed saw his friend mount the porch painfully; in a daze, he shook his hand. Subconsciously he beheld Lawrence Glass come panting into view, throw up his hands at sight of Covington, and cry out in a strange tongue. When he regained his faculties he broke into the conversation harshly.

"What have you done to yourself?"

"I broke a toe," explained the athlete.

"You broke a toe?"

"He broke a toe!" wailed Glass, faintly.

"If it's nothing but a toe, it won't hurt your running." Speed seized eagerly upon the faintest hope.

"No. I'll be all right in a few weeks." Covington spoke carelessly, his eyes bent upon Jean Chapin.

"You've g-got to run to-morrow."

"What!" Covington dragged his glance away from the cheeks of his sweetheart.

"I—I'm sick. You'll have to."

"Don't be an idiot, Wally. I can't walk!"

Helen explained, with pride of one displaying her own handiwork: "Mr. Speed defends the Flying Heart tomorrow. You are just in time to see him."

"When did you learn to box, Wally?" Covington was genuinely amazed.

"I'm not going to box. It's a foot-race. I'm training—been training ever since I arrived."

DANIEL MARLOWE PASSES AWAY

Old Resident and Veteran Highway Employee Died this Morning

Daniel Marlowe, a resident of Montvale for the past 41 years, passed away at 5 o'clock this morning at his home 169 Washington street. For 27 years he has been a valued employee of the Woburn street department. His ill health dates back to last October when he was compelled to quit work, and he has been gradually failing from that time until his death.

Daniel Marlowe was born in Belfast Ireland 75 years ago. When he was 18 years old he left his native land and came to America, locating in New York City. There he learned hand rope making and followed this vocation for 16 years in that city. At the age of 24 he married Bridget Hagan who died four years ago. While in New York, Mr. Marlowe became a member of the fire department and served faithfully for 12 years resigning his post when he decided to come to Woburn to live.

After 16 years of prosperity at the rope making industry with his family he came to Woburn, and took up his residence in Montvale. He was 34 years of age then, and upon his arrival with his father and brother on the well known Nason estate he conducted a thriving rope making business until 1886 when the introduction of machinery wiped out the old fashioned hand making methods.

Mr. Marlowe then became an employee of the highway department, and shortly afterward became driver of the fuel wagon for the fire steamer. The city council of 1912 granted him a pension under the new laborers pensioning act, he having worked more than the required 25 years.

During the 41 years he has lived in Montvale "Dan" Marlowe as he was familiarly known was looked upon by everybody as a kind friend and a good neighbor.

In his younger days he always identified himself with every public movement for the betterment of the community, and he was invariably a prominent figure and hard worker. Mrs. John W. Kenney who died a few weeks ago was a daughter of Mr. Marlowe and the shock of her death was a severe blow to him. Mrs. Kenney was the wife of the assistant chief of the fire department.

Mr. Marlowe is survived by one son, Frank, and one daughter, Anna who lived at home, and two married daughters, Mrs. Richard Phelan of Wakefield, and Mrs. Barbara Casey of North Andover.

He also leaves an adopted daughter, Mrs. Ella Glennon of Forest Hills, and a brother, Thomas of Millville. Funeral services will be held Monday morning. A high mass of requiem will be sung at St. Josephs church, and burial will be in Calvary cemetery.

Beggs & Cobb's Defeat Am. H. & L. Team

Take Three of Four Points in Exciting Match last Evening

The ordinary run of affairs in life was slightly altered by the weekly clash of two teams from neighboring leather shops last evening on Flanders' alleys. The intense rivalry between the Beggs and Cobb's bowlers and the pin splitters from the American Hide company gave plenty of excitement to the fans before the three strings were finished. The former team woon ut handily in the first string by 38 pins, rolling for a total of 432. In the second string, the American Hide team made a grand stab to come back but the best they could get was 403 to their opponents 435. In the third string they recovered with a slam, toppling 417, 20 pins more than their previous victors, and had it not been for the Beggs team big lead in the first string, the Trust team would have beat them to the total. When it was all over, the Beggs and Cobb crew had the total by 30 pins, getting 1264. "Cap" Looney of the winners had high single and total with 105 and 284. Sweeney for the losers got high for his team 97 and 273. The summary:—

COTTER'S GIANTS BURY LYONS' COLTS

Pull away with 3 of 4 Points in Fast Game last Night

Captain Ned Lyons' bunch of "hard handed ruffians" nearly got a complete drubbing last night on Flanders' alleys from Commodore James Cotter's "Genteel highwaymen." The "ruffnecks" escaped by the skin of their teeth, pulling out with the last string, just enough to save their grace. Possibly Jim Cotter didn't want to rub it in too bad. He didn't bowl, merely coaching from the bench. If he had been in action, well, we hate to think of what thescore would have been under such circumstances. It wouldn't look good in print. It meant a lot to have a tender-hearted man like Jim around, especially when things broke like they did for Ned's crew. Ned is swearing vengeance when they meet again next Friday night.

"Hen" Looney of the Giants was high man for the Giants with 101 and 293, while "Cap" Lyons had high single for the Colts with 99 and Fox had high total with 275. The summary of the game:—

Cotter's Giants

HEALTH BOARD MEETING TODAY

Important Business is Selection of a Clerk to Succeed Major Hall

The regular meeting of the board of health which was to have been held tomorrow will be held this afternoon at 4.15 o'clock instead. Monthly bills will be approved, and a vote will be taken for a clerk to succeed Major Henry C. Hall who today retires voluntarily, after more than six years of faithful and efficient service.

For the past few days William E. Goode of 28 North Warren street, has been at the office of the health board familiarizing himself with the duties of clerk, and he has been accorded every possible aid by Major Hall. The vote this afternoon will be a mere formality, as the choice of Goode appears to be a foregone conclusion, indicated by the fact that he has already assumed a portion of the duties.

MADDEN CASE IN COURT TOMORROW

Interesting Disclosures of Fire Department Conditions Expected

In the local court tomorrow morning, Judge Johnson will sit in judgment in the now famous Madden case which has caused a decided stir among the citizens of this city, and among members of the fire department in particular.

Edward J. Madden, a member of the fire department for 19 years, and lieutenant of hose company three for a long time was recently removed from the service by Chief Engineer Frank E. Tracy.

The removal occurred at practically the same time that Madden petitioned the city council for an investigation of the hose three company.

Two hearings or investigations have already been held, one by the committee on fire of the city council, and the other by Chief Engineer Frank E. Tracy, upon the request of Bernard J. Golden, who is the legal adviser of Madden.

Both of the investigations were held behind closed doors, and resulted in the committee on fire finding in favor of Madden, and the chief engineer finding that the removal of the lieutenant was justified.

Mr. Golden immediately availed himself of his legal rights to appeal from the decision of the chief engineer to the courts, for a review of the evidence, and the court room tomorrow will be packed by residents of Cummingsville who are deeply interested in the situation.

It promises to be one of the most exciting disclosures of municipal conditions that has come to the surface in years, and will no doubt permit the press to get the facts for publication.

Representatives of local papers were refused an opportunity to report the evidence in the two hearings already held, but there is little doubt that the court proceedings to morrow will be open to all. Just how much of inside conditions at hose three will be revealed remains to be seen, but it is rumored that counsel on both sides will introduce testimony that will tell the whole story, and satisfy the public demand, in evidence since the first investigation, that a square deal be accorded everybody.

DISTRICT INTERESTS KEPT IN VIEW

Representative J. H. Parker Jr. Scores Another Generous Apportionment for Highway Work

Getting recognition for his district from the State highway commission has become a habit with Representative J. H. Parker Jr. It is doubtful if any other member of the legislature has secured so much as he. In his first year, when he was a novice in legislative matters, his persistence and watchfulness was rewarded with an apportionment totalling $20,000 and benefiting every one of the four towns in his district.

The next year he kept up his good work, and succeeded in bagging $12,000 more, in which award Woburn got a slice for the extension of the state highway from the Wilmington line to the car barns at North Woburn.

This year, his third of consecutive service, he has made another killing which will total $12,000 divided as follows: Reading $1,500, North Reading $1,000, Wilmington $1,000, and Woburn from $6,000 to $8,000, the latter being on condition that the city shall contribute something, not a large amount, in addition. Representative Parker has also made it a condition, that the work shall be done by local labor if the city so desires.

Here is a grand total of practically $44,000 sesured in three years for his district. Representative Parker has made a record of which he and his district should be very proud. He is on the job all right, to quote the familiar expression. It is highly commendable for the improvements made possible by these expenditures are permanent improvements, and contribute largely to public convenience.

OFFICIAL WOODLAND INSPECTION TENDERED

State Forester F. W. Rane who is empowered by statute, to use and require all lawful means for the suppressing and preventing of the gypsy and brown tail moths, calls attention to the fact that European practice seems to indicate that, by putting woodlands under proper forestry management, and by making thinnings and cuttings under forestry principles, the moths can be controlled without further aid than the parasites and disease. He says the moths will never be destroyed by these methods, but a balance will be established so that they will no longer be dangerous.

If some spraying and creosoting is necessary, it can be done much more cheaply and effectively in the woodlands, he says, under forestry management. The forester hopes to persuade woodland owners to place their lands under this sort of management. He believes that the sale of wood cut and thinned out will pay in whole or in part for the work done.

The State forester and his assistants stand ready to examine the lands of any owner, and to make plans for management, and if it seems best to aid in carrying out the work by marking the trees for cutting, by supervising the work, or by actually carrying on the work with their own crews.

First of all the forester wishes to get in touch with owners of large tracts, or with groups of owners of smaller tracts, as the work can be made to nearly pay for itself when done on a large scale. District and local superintendents of moth work will gladly act in co-operation with the state officials in promoting a more intimate acquaintance of local needs, and in fostering the relations between the owner and the forestry representative.

The state wishes to help you, gentlemen, and tenders you the advantage of its expert opinion, and its practical experience.

Woburn people may congratulate themselves that they do not live in Malden, where the iceman seems to be something of a despot. In that city the housekeeper who feels unable to buy ice by the hundred pounds pays almost $20 a ton. A piece of ice weighing between 5 and 7 pounds will cost 5 cents, almost a cent a pound. Sellers refuse to deliver this ice, however, but will make the purchaser come and get it. The same ice, in large pieces, sold and delivered at wholesale costs $5 a ton. The announced policy of the Woburn company to retain the price of last year is welcome news, and evidences a desire to play fair with its patrons.

DIDN'T KNOW IT WAS LOADED

Several days ago workmen on the highways in Wilmington placed a stick of dynamite on the hot stove to thaw it out as he afterwards explained. Then he strolled outside to await the result. He was not obliged to wait a great while. There was a deafening roar, a flash of flame, dense volumes of smoke, and in place of the shanty he had just quitted an assortment of kindling wood. Fortunately the workman was not injured.

DR. W. W. SLEEPER AT THE FIRST CHURCH

Spoke on "The Inner Kingdom"—Fine Musical Program

There was a large attendance at the First church, yesterday morning to hear the Rev. William W. Sleeper of Wellesley Mass., who exchanged pulpits with Dr. Norton. Drs. Norton and Sleeper were classmates, both graduating from Amherst college in 1878.

Mr. Sleeper delivered a very inspiring sermon on the topic "The Inner Kingdom," taking for a text, "The Kingdom of Heaven is within you," Luke 17:21.

"The popular expectation," he said, "is that the kingdom of Christ will come in some way as a new social order, or if not that by way of a missionary conquest. The least that is expected is some form of a revolution of the existing conditions. This, however, was not Christ's idea." He emphasized the fact that His kingdom was an inner spirit. Most people speak of getting the people into the church. Christ put the kingdom into people's hearts and lives. In his conception of the kingdom it was essentially an experience of the heart, which therefore could be felt by any one and every one, at any time or place. The kingdom of God is always coming, not merely to individual lives, but to communities and to the world.

The musical program was as follows: Prelude; anthem, "I will pour out thy spirit;" solo, "Hold thou my hand," Miss Josephine L. Claire; anthem, "Christian the Morning Breaks;" postlude.

SUNDAY SERVICES AT TRINITY CHURCH

At Trinity church yesterday the following musical program was rendered by the vested choir: Te Deum in D, Benedictus; anthem, "Now is Christ Risen." At the evening service the music consisted of the Magnificat and Nunc Demittis in G.

At both morning and evening services the collections were to start a fund for the relief of those suffering from the Ohio flood. An attempt is being made to reach and obtain a contribution from every member of the parish. The money secured in this way will be turned over to the city treasurer.

Rumford Centenary To Be Observed

Paper Read by Wm. R. Cutter at the Annual Meeting of the Rumford Historical Society

INTERESTING DATA

His daughter, Sarah Rumford, sailed from Boston for London in the winter of 1796, to see her father, who had come from Munich to meet her. She went with him to Bavaria, and remained about three years. She received the title of Countess in 1797, and a life pension. She made a second visit to her father in 1811 and remained abroad for many years after her father's death. Her attractions and ability were in no degree remarkable. In 1835 she returned to America, and again went abroad in 1838, and in 1844 she came back. She died in the chamber in which she was born, December 2, 1852, and her remains lie buried under a handsome stone in the old burial ground at Concord, N. H. She left by inheritance and otherwise a comparatively large estate. She benefited certain relations, and endowed the Rolfe and Rumford Asylum for young female orphans. Among other persons she mentioned Joseph Amedee LeFebre, as a legatee, a person in Europe, supposed, in some manner, to be a connection.

Common reputation gave Rumford that blessing of all blessings, an excellent mother. She never neglected him, but appears to have treated him with a redoubled love. His own letters to her, when he was in a state of popular celebrity, comfort, and affluence abroad, in her later years, are full of affection and tender regard.

The Countess of Rumford in her letter of December 25, 1850, directed from Concord, to James F. Baldwin, Esq., 110 Tremont street, Boston, writes thus concerning a picture:

"I have lately been laid under contribution through Emma (Gannell, a young woman companion whom she had undertaken to bring up) though not exactly her fault, of upwards of thirty dollars; she having made the acquaintance of an English artist upstart, and I falling into the plan, gave him a picture, which I had put together myself, partly painted in a rough way by Emma (who had artistic taste) to paint properly, and with which I was so dissatisfied I gave to Mr. Walker.

"I told him I would not bear it in the house, and as it cost him nothing, of course he did not mind it. It was besides a very fine looking thing, and with a fine frame will have effect. The picture was my father taking leave of my mother. I held by Dine (Dinah, a black servant). These two figures he made very well; I holding out my arms to my mother, beautifully draped, undoubtedly much better than I was dressed at the time, and infinitely prettier, and Dinah exactly the person she represented, being when young, well-looking, but my mother, though finely dressed to a fault, and beautiful to a fault, is disfigured by excess of grief. What spoils it more than all is, the stiffness of my father's posture, in a dress of high red uniform."

In a second letter from the Countess, dated Concord, January 1, 1851, she mentions the proposed dedication of a hall, "up street," to her father, a block of buildings belonging to General Low, "just now erected." In answer to a young man who called to obtain particulars concerning her father's life, she stated,

"I did tell him that Count Rumford and his second wife disagreed very much; that she was all French, and he all English in his ideas; that it was a marriage of love, so said by those who knew them, and that, in the end, they disagreed, both wanting power.

"I related to him several things that took place, and he laughed heartily; so what will be made of the information I gave, I do not know. He asked me what sort of a temper he was of, and I told him, sensitive. I know what my father's temper was by my own, for I have lately found out that that is mine, by examining the simgular expression in my picture, and I know my temper is just like my father's.

"Mr. Low seemed to think that my father was pretty and pleasant in his manner. I told him, he was agreeable when pleased; otherwise, a total change in him. That his best friends said he was difficult to live with, Madame de Rumford told me that if my father could have kept quiet, she should have been very happy with him, but that he was always at his experiments. The truth of the case was, she wanted him to be always agreeable and at leisure to assist her in entertaining rounds of company, and he got tired of it. Besides that, he had had different pursuits through life."

The Countess often expressed in her correspondence a suspicion that her father did not die at the time it was supposed he did, and in a letter to her friend James F. Baldwin, from Concord, under date of April 7, 1851, she expresses her belief quite fully:

"The work relative to my father is nearly done, if quite, I would send it by Mrs. Hunt. I do not think it will be of any great things, but it will answer for you and I to read. What I say about my father, that of his not dying at that time, there is no doubt of. He, for a certainty, did not die at that time. He had great fatigues, obliged to pay court to great people, so much, it would have been next to impossible had he retired into ever so much of a place of retreat, after the kindness he had received from great people, to be excused from showing great gratitude. So it was impossible for him to retire from the world by halves.

"Do you not understand it to be perfectly natural? I know a half dozen people, whom I am sure knew of his being in England. I myself saw him several times, I am persuaded. I think Mr. Chapman knew about it, from his conduct towards me from beginning to last."

In another letter dated Concord, May 24, 1851, she says,

"I have the satisfaction of finishing what I was writing about my father. It worried me very much going back to old dates so. Disagreeable feelings I had then and hard thoughts of my father, for suffering me to be from him so long, was [were] brought fresh to my mind, and at times almost made me sick. For a certainty I grew very thin upon it, and was most dreadfully irritable the whole time.

"Think of my taking into review ten years: I made it out clear that Count Rumford did not die at that time. That is our comfort."

As a correspondent the Countess Rumford left little to the imagination of the reader. She was plain and blunt, always to the point, and stated her experiences, whether in Europe or America, clearly and with brevity. Her letters are therefore succinct accounts of daily life, and illustrate vividly many ideas and customs of the time, besides referring to different persons. She spent large sums from her income on the estate she occupied in Concord, N. H., with a view to its improvement and ornament, the homeplace of her ancestors, "for the sake," she said, "of those who have gone before." The discomforts of a life spent there are fully stated. She was very sensitive to cold weather and disliked high winds, deep snows, freshets in the river, near her house, and the long and solitary winter periods. It was inconvenient to reach the post office. Among other things, she expressed her displeasure with the frivolities of the French people, and her dislike of those who sought her society only for the sake of her money and such favors as could be obtained in the way of benevolent contributions for public or semi-public institutions. On the other hand, she was not ungenerous to those who had a natural claim upon her from consanguineous relationship or business connection. She was a shrewd judge of character, and could not, in any sense, be accounted pious. She had, she says herself, a respect for outwardly religious ceremonies, and occasionally attended the church services in Concord. Some idea of her religious sentiments may be obtained from a letter written in the Countess's last sickness, by the young English woman, whom she undertook to bring up, and who, for many years, was her constant companion. Miss Emma Gannell (then Mrs. Burgum) writing, under date of November 28, 1852, a few days before her death, says:

Simple Things Best.

To retain youth you must cultivate and preserve your power to enjoy simple things. As our forms of pleasure become complex and expensive the soul becomes stiff and cramped. To love simple food and drink, simple methods of play, simple speech, and, above all, the manifest simplicities of nature, makes red blood. Resist the inroads of pessimism. It means the twilight of the soul and the empty night.—Frank Crane.

Superfluous Labor Counts.

The men who have achieved success are the men who have worked, read, thought more than was absolutely necessary, who have not been content with knowledge sufficient for the present need, but who have sought additional knowledge and stored it away for the emergency reserve. It is the superfluous labor that equips a man for everything that counts in life.

ORE TRAMPLED INTO PUDDLES

Economical, Though Somewhat Primitive Methods Used at Many Mines Throughout Mexico.

It was at Pachuca, Mexico, that the patio system of separating silver had its origin. This system is still followed extensively at the silver mines throughout Mexico. The ore is crushed and worked down to a state of puddle. It is then spread out to a depth of two or three feet over the paved floor of the courtyard, or patio. To this mass sulphate of copper is added in powder, about fifteen pounds of sulphate to three thousand pounds of puddle. This is trodden into the puddle by horses. Several gangs of old, worn-out horses or mules, about twelve in a gang, are seen in various parts of the patio, being driven round in circles to tread in the sulphate.

On the next day six per cent. of common salt is added and in two more days one hundred per cent. of pure quicksilver, or as much as the assay of the ore shows is required. This mass is then trodden up by horses for fifteen days. It is then wheeled to a large tank through which passes a rapid stream of water. This washes away the clay, leaving the silver and quicksilver. This residuum is poured into cone-shaped canves bags through which most of the quicksilver runs out, and what remains with the silver is passed off with the vapor by means of heated retorts. None of the quicksilver is lost, and even the vapor is brought by cold water to its original state and used again and again. The quicksilver soon rots the hoofs of the horses and the mules, but the Mexicans themselves do not seem to be much the worse for it even though they wade around in the puddle for days at a time.—Harper's Weekly.

Can't Beat the Smokers.

Local tailors are receiving orders from their customers that at least one asbestos pocket be placed in every suit and every overcoat they make, as a result of the new "no smoking" rule of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company.

A widely known Walnut street tailor placed a large order for asbestos today, and when asked if he had been employed to make an asbestos suit he explained:

"Why, some of my customers are bringing back their overcoats to have the asbestos pocket fixed. They want the pocket as a saving in cigar bills.

"There is no danger to the clothes, as there is a little flap on the asbestos pocket that makes it partially airtight, and the cigar, without air, goes out almost as soon as it is placed in the pocket. It smokes very little, and there is no danger that the conductor will attempt to put off the passenger with the asbestos pocket."

The tailor said he got the idea of the asbestos pocket from a wealthy business man who pays 50 cents apiece for his cigars, and objects to throwing away 45 cents' worth because the traction company says he must.—Philadelphia Correspondence New York Tribune.

Apple Tree Holds Record.

An apple tree growing in the Walla Walla Valley, Washington, holds the fruit-yield record. It produced nearly 200 bushels of apples last season, thus breaking its own record of 126½ boxes in 1907, the highest production, we are assured, from a single tree known anywhere in the world. This tree bore 70 boxes in 1906, 42 boxes in 1908 and 45 boxes in 1909. More than 500 barrels of fruit have been picked from it since it came into bearing in the spring of 1871.

The tree was grown without irrigation from a seedling planted in 1866. It is forty-two feet in height and its branches spread fifty-seven feet from tip to tip. The trunk is seven feet in circumference at the base and measures six feet six inches just below the first limb, which is four feet from the ground and measures four feet seven inches. The tree is sound and healthy despite the fact that it has produced fruit every season for nearly forty years.—New York Press.

Letters of Two Kings Found.

It is said that a most curious discovery has been made at Apsley house Hyde Park Corner, the town house of the Dukes of Wellington.

In the cellars there has been found all the private and state correspondence of George III and George IV. These documents, covering a vital period of over 60 years, must include Napoleonic references of great interest.

The letters, etc., have been removed to Windsor, and are now being sorted by the king's librarian.

According to one of these documents the Iron Duke's name was never Wellesley. The family name was Colley, and his grandfather was adopted by an Irishman named Wellesley.

Sure of a Job.

It was a new kind of recommendation for a servant, but very effective. The old employer said nothing about her accomplishments as cook, waitress, laundress or chambermaid. What she wrote was:

"She is as strong as a man and twice as brave. Three times while in our employ she captured burglars single-handed, and held them until the police arrived, and saved hundreds of dollars' worth of silver and jewelry."

All the manager of the employment agency had to do when that girl needed a situation was to read that letter out loud and there ensued a wild scramble among his customers for the strong-fisted maid.

WHEN THE MIND FAILS

MAN WHO SUFFERED CALLS ATTENTION TO WRONG METHODS.

Prevailing Attitude Toward Insanity Ridiculous, If Not Disgusting, He Declares—Mental Disorders Should Be Looked To.

"In every line of mental research it is admitted that prevention is more important than cure—with the exception of mental diseases," says Clifford Whittingham Beers, who created a sensation a few years ago when, under the title A Mind That Found Itself, he published a record of his years of insanity and of his awakening from mental death. "Our scientific attitude toward diseases of the mind is truly amazing. We consider them as something unavoidable. We watch stupidly the disease running its course from a slight disturbance of mental processes until the first violent manifestations of insanity.

"If a man presents the slightest symptoms of pneumonia or even measles he receives immediate treatment of some kind. On the other hand, a patient who is suffering from disease of the mind, the most threatening calamity of life, must be so far advanced in the disease and so disordered in action or in speech as to satisfy a lay tribunal of the necessity of justification of the forcible deprivation of his liberty, must be told that he is 'insane,' must be 'adjudged insane' and 'committed' by a court to an institution for the insane before he can receive the treatment best adapted to the restoration of his health.

"The public should be convinced that insanity is a disease like any other disease; people must be taught to seek intelligent advice promptly whenever something 'seems to be the matter with their nerves,' instead of concealing their fears for mere shame.

"Had I, for instance, at the age of eighteen, when I began to worry myself into a state of depression, had access to advice and information, and had I, as a result of an established and widespread interest in mental hygiene, sought such advice as a matter of course, as persons threatened with tuberculosis now seek the help and advice they need, I am confident that I should not have suffered the affliction of mental disorder. Though I took medicine for 'nerves,' I did not find the remedy I needed, which was a verbal corrective for thought and fears which were to prove my temporary undoing.

"It may take some time before a sick man is no more ashamed of calling on a physician for incipient insanity than for a cold in his head, but let us hope that time will arrive eventually. A campaign of education is sorely needed to dispel the superstitions still prevalent in the public mind as to the cause of insanity."

About Bagpipes.

The Bulgarian delegates would have been interested if they had heard before leaving that the Prince of Wales was learning the bagpipes. For the pipes are the Bulgarian national instrument, as Sir Charles Eliot shows by a striking illustration. Until lately, at any rate, the servants who waited at the porte on the grand vizier were mutes, though not, as in former times, persons specially mutilated, but children born deaf and dumb. They used a language of signs with a special gesture to describe the representative of each nation. To indicate the Bulgarian agent they imitated a man playing on the bagpipes. It was not the Bulgarianes who invented the pipes, however. They are among the oldest of musical instruments. An ancient gem shows Apollo with them, and two instruments in the Book of Daniel were almost certainly bagpipes.—London Chronicle.

Score One for the Cook.

Young housewives obliged to practice strict economy will sympathize with the sad experience of a Washington woman.

When her husband returned home one evening he found her dissolved in tears, and careful questioning elicited the reason for her grief.

"Dan," said she, "every day this week I have stopped to look at a perfect love of a hat in Mme. Louise's window. Such a hat, Dan, such a beautiful hat! But the price—well, I wanted it the worst way, but just couldn't afford to buy it."

"Well, dear," began the husband recklessly, "we might manage to——"

"Thank you, Dan," interrupted the wife, "but there isn't any 'might about it. I paid the cook this noon and what do you think? She marched right down herself and bought that hat!"—Lippincott's.

Left the Dean Chuckling.

The dean of the law department was very busy and rather cross. The telephone rang.

"Well, what is it?" he snapped.

"Is that the city gas works?" said a woman's soft voice.

"No, madam," roared the dean; "this is the University Law Department."

"Ah," she answered, in the sweetest of tones, "I didn't miss it so far, after all, did I?"

And the weary dean chuckled all afternoon.

Probably Not.

Wise—This is certainly a good cigar you've given me, old chap.

WILL CLAIM EARL'S TITLE

Man Who Left Scotland and Went to Australia Says He Is Rightful Lindsay.

London.—Henry James Hamilton Bethune Lindsay is tired of Australian life and is determined to return to Scotland, whence he disappeared half a century ago, having all that time been regarded as dead, and claim the ancient title which he declares he missed on the death of his elder brother the tenth earl of Lindsay, now held by his cousin, David-Clark Bethune.

The claimant certainly has all the names of the man supposed to have died at Marseilles in 1862, but he asserts that he did not die. He was disappointed in a love affair and sick at heart at the manner in which he was treated by his family over it, he emigrated to Australia and buried his identity in Cannawigra, where ultimately he became overseer of a ranch. While there he received a copy of a paper containing a portrait of the tenth earl.

"About the same time," said Mr. Lindsay, "a gentleman named Hayes visited Australia to find me, it having become known to my family that I did not die at Marseilles. My identity was unknown to Hayes, but I met him several times, and learned from him first hand about his quest. Inquiries were also made about me in the paper, but I took no notice of the efforts to find me, and moved from one part of Australia to another."

He lived later a lonely life in Gippsland, his only companions being a dozen cats. The loneliness being too much for him, he went to Melbourne, where he lived at a boarding house, and married one of the lodgers there.

PARCEL STAMP SAVES DOG

Compelled to Keep Hands Off Stray Fox Terrier When Mail Carrier Applies Sticker.

Hackensack, N. J.—"Saved by a postage stamp," is the title which postal clerks here give to a comic scene in Main street in which John Keenan, a special delivery mail carrier, was principal.

Keenan loves dogs. He spied one in the postoffice wandering about without a license. Keenan took fancy to it, and as he started out on his rounds allowed the dog to trail behind him.

At a street corner Joseph Dalia, the official dog catcher of Hackensack, made his appearance. Dalia has a record of 662 dogs caught in the last year and was about to pounce upon the little unlicensed fox terrier which was following the mail carrier.

"Don't touch that dog!" exclaimed Keenan as he hastily drew a parcel post stamp from his pocket, licked it and attached it to the dog's ear. "That dog is mail matter and under the protection of Uncle Sam." The dog catcher was properly awed by the federal authority and withdrew.

In his bewilderment the late-comer might have unwittingly betrayed his friend had not Jean suddenly inquired:

"Where is Roberta?"

"Roberta!" Covington tripped over one of his crutches. "Roberta who?"

"Why, Roberta Keap, of course! She's chaperoning us while mother is away."

The hero of countless field-days turned pale, and seemed upon the point of hobbling back to "Nigger Mike's buckboard.

"You and she are old friends, I believe?" Helen interposed.

"Yes! Oh, yes!" Culver flashed his chum a look of dumb entreaty, but Speed was staring round-eyed into space, striving to read the future.

Helen started to fetch her just as the pallid chaperon was entering the door.

She shook hands with Covington. She observed that he was too deeply affected at sight of her to speak, and it awakened fresh misgivings in her mind.

"H-how d'y do! I didn't know you were—here!" he stammered.

"I thought it would surprise you!" Roberta smiled wanly, amazed at her own self-control, then froze in her tracks as Jean announced:

"Jack will be home to-night, Culver. He'll be delighted to see you!"

J. Wallingford Speed offered a diversion by bursting into a hollow laugh. Now that the world was in league to work his own downfall, it was time some one else had a touch of suffering. To this end he inquired how the toe had come to be broken.

"I broke it in Omaha—automobile accident." Culver was fighting to master himself.

"Omaha! Did you stop in Omaha?" inquired Jean.

"A city of beautiful women," Speed reflected, audibly. "Somebody step on your foot at a dance?"

"No, of course not! I don't know

Covington Hobbled Forward on Crutches.

anybody in Omaha! I went motoring—"

"Joy-ride?"

"Not at all."

"Who was with you?" Miss Chapin's voice was ominously sweet.

"N—nobody I knew."

"Does that mean that you were alone?"

"Yes. I stopped off between trains to view the city, and took a 'Seeing Omaha' ride. The yap wagon upset, and—I broke my toe."

"You left Chicago ten days ago," said Speed accusingly.

"Of course, but—when I broke my toe I had to stay. It's a beautiful city—lots of fine buildings."

"How did you like the jail?"

"What in the world are you boys talking about?" queried Miss Blake.

"Mr. Speed seems amused at Culver's accident." Roberta gave him a stinging look. "Now we'd better let Culver go to his room and freshen up a bit. I want to talk to you, Helen," and Speed drooped at the meaning behind her words. But it was time for a general conference; events were shaping themselves too rapidly for him to cope with. Once the three were alone he lost no time in making his predicament known, the while his friend listened in amazement.

"But is it really so serious?" the latter asked, finally.

"It's life or death. There's a homicidal maniac named Willie guarding me daytimes, and a pair of renegades who keep watch at my window all night. The cowboys bathe me in ice-water to toughen me, and feed me raw meat to make me wild. In every corner there lurks an assassin with orders to shoot me if I break training, everywhere I go some low-browed criminal feels my biceps, pinches my legs, and asks how my wind is. I tell you, I'm going mad."

"And the worst part of it is," spoke Glass, sympathetically, "they'll bump me off first. It's a pipe."

"But, Wally, you can't run."

"Don't I know it?"

"Don't I?" seconded the trainer.

"Then why attempt the impossible? Call the race off."

"It's too late. Don't you understand? The bets are made, and it's 'pay or play.' The cowboys have mortgaged their souls on me."

"He was makin' a play for that little doll—"

"Don't you call Miss Blake a doll, Larry! I won't stand for it!"

"Well, 'skirt,' then."

"Why don't you cut it? There's a train East at midnight."

"And leave Helen—like that? Her faith in me has weakened already; she'd hate me if I did that. No! I've got to face it out!"

"They'll be singin' hymns for both of us," predicted the fat man.

"I don't care. They can boil me in oil—I won't let her think I'm a coward."

"Larry doesn't have to stay."

"Of course not. He can escape."

"Not a chance," said the trainer. "They watch me closer 'n they do him."

Covington considered for a moment. "It certainly looks bad, but perhaps the other fellow can't run either. Who is he?"

"A cook named Skinner."

"Happy name! Well, two-thirds of a sprint is in the start. How does Wally get in motion, Lawrence?"

"Like a sacred ox." Glass could not conceal his contempt.

"I'll give him some pointers; it will all help." But Speed was nervous and awkward—so awkward, in fact, that the coach finally gave it up as a bad job, saying:

"It's no use, Wally, you've got fool feet."

"I have, eh? Well, I didn't break them getting out of jail."

"The less said about that jail the better. I'm in trouble myself."

Speed might have explained that his chum's dilemma was by no means so serious as he imagined, had not watchman Willie thrust his head through the open window at that moment with the remark:

"Time to get busy!"

"We'll be right with you!" Glass seized his protege by the arm and bore him away, muttering: "Stick it out, brother, we're nearin' the end!"

Again Speed donned his running-suit and took to the road for his farewell practice. Again Willie followed at a distance on horseback, watching the hills warily. But all hope had fled from the Yale man now, and he returned to his training-quarters disheartened, resigned.

He was not resigned, however, to the visit he received later from Miss Helen Blake. That young lady rushed in upon him like a miniature cyclone, sweeping him off his feet by the fury of her denunciation, allowing him no opportunity to speak, until, with a half-sob, she demanded:

"Why—why did you deceive me?"

"I love you!" Wally said, as if no further explanation were necessary.

"That explains nothing. You made sport of me! You couldn't love me and do that!"

"Helen!"

"I thought you were so fine, so strong, but you lied—yes, that is what you did! You fibbed to me the first day I met you, and you've been fibbing ever since. I could never, never care for a man who would do that."

"Who has told you these things?"

"Roberta, for one. She opened my eyes to your—baseness."

"Well, Roberta has a grudge against my sex. She's engaged to all the men she hasn't already married. Marriage is a habit with her. It has made her suspicious—"

"But you did deceive me, didn't you"

"Will you marry me?" asked J. Wallingford Speed.

"The idea!" Miss Blake gasped.

"Will you?"

"Please don't speak that way. When a man cares for a woman, he doesn't deceive her—he tells her everything. You told me you were a great runner, and I believed you. I'll never believe you again. Of course, I shall behave to you in a perfectly friendly manner, but underneath the surface I shall be consumed with indignation." Miss Blake commenced to be consumed. "See! You don't acknowledge your perfidy even now."

"What's the use? If I said I couldn't run, and then beat the cook, you'd believe I deceived you again. And suppose that I can't beat him?"

"Then I shall know they have told me the truth."

"And if, on the other hand, I should win"—Miss Blake's eyes fell—"Helen, would you marry me?" Speed started toward her, but she had fled out into the twilight.

* * * * *

Dusk was settling over stretches of purple land, and already the room was peopled by shadows. Work was over; there were sounds of cheerful preparations for supper; from the house came faint chords of laughter.

It was the hush that precedes the evening as it does the dawn; the hour of reverie, in which all music is sweet, and forgotten faces arise to haunt.

Speed stood where the girl had left him, miserable, hopeless, helpless. And certainly his love was lost. He had stayed on in the stubborn superstitious belief that something would surely happen to relieve him from his predicament—fortune had never failed him before—and instead, every day, every incident, had served to involve him deeper. Now she knew! It was her golden heart that had held her true thus far, but could any devotion survive the sight of humiliation such as he would suffer on the morrow? Already he heard the triumphant jeers of the Centipede henchmen, the angry clamor of the Flying Heart, the mocking laughter of his rival.

He groaned aloud. Forsooth, a broken toe! Of all the countless tens of thousands of toes in Christendom, the one he had hung his salvation upon had proven weaker than a reed. What cruel jest of Fate was this? If Fate had wished to break a toe why had she not selected, out of all the billions at her disposal, that of some other athlete than Culver Covington—even his own.

"I Love You!" Wally Said.

J. Wallingford Speed started suddenly and paled. He had remembered that no one could force a crippled man to run.

"By Jove," he exclaimed, "I'll do it!"

He crossed quickly to the bunkhouse door and looked in. The room was empty. The supper-bell pealed out, and he heard the cow-men answer it. Now was the appointed moment; he might have no other. With cat-like tread he slipped into the sleeping-quarters, returning in a moment with a revolver. He stared thankfully at the weapon—better this than dishonor.

"Why didn't I think of it before? It's perfectly simple. I'll accidentally shoot myself—in the foot!"

But even as he gazed at the gun he saw that the muzzle was as large as a gopher-hole. A bullet of that size would sink a ship, he meditated in a panic, and as for his foot—what frightful execution it would work! But—it were better to lose a foot than a footrace, under present conditions, so he began to unlace his shoe. Then realizing the value of circumstantial evidence, he paused. No! His disability must bear all the earmarks of an accident. He must guess the location of his smallest and least important toe, and trust the rest to his marksmanship. Visions of blood-poisoning beset him, and when he pressed the muzzle against the point of his shoe his hand shook with such a palsy that he feared he might miss. He steeled himself with the thought that other men had snuffed out life itself in this manner, then sat down upon the floor and cocked the weapon a second time. He wondered if the shock might, by any chance, numb him into unconsciousness. If so, he might bleed to death before assistance arrived. But he had nothing to do with that. The only question was, which foot. He regarded them both tenderly. They were nice feet, and had done him many favors. He loved every toe; they were almost like innocent children. It was a dastardly deed to take advantage of them thus, but—he advanced the revolver until it pressed firmly against the outside of his left foot, then closed his eyes, and called upon his courage. There came a great roaring in his ears.

How long he sat thus waiting for the explosion he did not know, but he opened his eyes at length to find the foot still intact, and the muzzle of the weapon pointing directly at his instep. He altered his aim hurriedly, when, without warning of any sort, a man's figure appeared silhouetted against the window.

The figure dropped noiselessly to the floor inside the room, and cried, in a strange voice:

"Lock those doors! Quick!"

Finding that it was no hallucination, Speed rose, calling out:

"Who are you?"

"Sh-h-h!" The stranger darted across the room and bolted both doors, while the other felt a chill of apprehension at these sinister precautions. He grasped his revolver firmly while his heart thumped. The fellow's appearance was anything but reassuring: he was swarthy and sun-browned, his clothes were ragged, his overalls were patched; instead of a coat, he wore a loosely flapping vest over a black sateen shirt, long since rusted out to a nondescript brown.

SPOKE ON "CONCRETE RELIGION"

There was a large attendance at the First church last night to hear Miss Margaret Slattery, one of the most prominent of Sunday school workers. Miss Slattery has had a wide experience, first in the Fitchburg Normal school, and later as an officer of the Sunday school association. More than any one else she has studied the problems and conditions which young people have to meet.

Last evening she delivered a very interesting talk upon "Concrete Religion," taking as the base of her remarks the parable of the Samaritan on the road to Jericho. She made the double comparison between the Levite and the Samaritan, and the church and the social worker. While she had no fault to find with the church, she cited instances such as, for instance, the case of the man whom she found almost starved, having gone without food for five days, while he could look out of his window and see the spires of five churches. In such cases as these, she thought that it was the business of the churches not to remain in ignorance of their existance.

The same chorus which rendered "The Hymn of Praise" on Palm Sunday evening, rendered the musical program last evening.

GREAT REAL ESTATE AND SUMMER HOME ISSUE

On Saturday, April 5, the Boston Evening Transcript will print a generous amount of reading matter which will be of interest to real estate owners in New England, investors and those who lease or have summer homes at the seashore, mountains or country.

Any one having a house, farm, cottage or desirably located land for sale or exchange, or a summer place to rent for the season will do well to secure advertising space in this issue, for it will have a wide circulation among interested people all over the United States.
